To persons who come in touch with thinking people, it is clearly apparent that a larger number of persons are interested in Spiritualism, and are studying its phenomena and its philosophy, than ever before in the history of the movement, and I unhesitatingly assert that our influence as an organized body is greater than it was one year ago.

Evidence of this is found in increased interest in what Spiritualism stands for. Also in the attitude of the secular press, which is ever alert to the things about which the people want to hear; also the drama, also the liberalized orthodox sermons, through nearly all of which there runs a thread of Spiritualist philosophy.

Local Societies.

Our local auxiliary societies have, as a rule, been doing good work during the past year and the generally full attendance at their meetings shows an interest in our philosophy, and hunger for psychic manifestations among the people, which is encouraging to the state board.

Your president asked the vice-president, and some other members of the board of trustees, that they each visit (at their convenience during the year), the local societies in proximity to their homes. And from the reports of these officers as to their findings, and also from the reports of the State Missionary and State Secretary, the convention will, no doubt, be well informed concerning the work of the local societies and the conditions attending them.

In the president's report of previous years, the maintaining of settled speakers or pastors wherever practical has been recommended, and later experiences have only confirmed what had then been said.

The officers of local societies are the guardians of the Spiritual rostrums in their immediate vicinity and it is for them (in carrying out the will of their society) to ever be on the alert, especially when strangers apply for positions of privilege to occupy their rostrums. Worthy workers when traveling among strangers and who might care to accept an invitation to speak or practice mediumship, should provide themselves with credentials which would acquaint the officers of societies with their fitness to do this work.

The foundation of Spiritualism rests in the phenomena, which demonstrates continuity of life. Upon this foundation we are to erect a temple of soul growth or spiritual development, and in this direction lies an important part of the work of local societies.

To this end studies in mental science, thought force, etc., can be taken up with profit. Dr. Austin has published works that can be used as a basis for studies along these lines; and then the Yogi philosophy is profitable for reading and for study; and also the books of Ella Wheeler Wilcox and Mrs. Towne (who are pursuing that branch of Spiritualism called "New Thought") are excellent.

The main point is to learn to control and guide our thoughts, to think happy thoughts, which are the basis of sound bodies and healthfulness.

The only true religion is a religion of happiness, and true happiness comes in doing for others and in thinking and speaking kindly of others.

This means a mental training which is capable of transferring one's self and of elevating the races of people on the earth, and is a legitimate part of society work. I advise our Spiritualists if they have not already done so, to take up this work and not allow New Thought people to run away from us.

Missionary Work.

Next to the work of local societies the missionary work is perhaps most important.

A missionary (much of whose work is to carry this gospel of Spiritualism into new territory, or rather into localities where there are no societies for public work), needs to be gifted, both as a speaker and as a medium, so that both phases of the work can be presented as occasion may require.

Mrs. Reynolds, who has been acting in that capacity, is well equipped for the work along lines indicated and is capable of presenting both the philosophy and the phenomena in a dignified and effective manner. Her earnest interest in the success of the State Association continues unabated, and she has always been very considerate of the interest of the Association in making up her accounts. Her missionary report will give to the convention a more detailed account of the year's work.

It is the opinion of your president that the money expended in missionary work has been productive of much good, and that it is desirable that this branch of state work be continued.

Mass Meetings.

Notwithstanding the authority granted at last convention to do more mass meeting work in the cities of the state, circumstances were such that only one mass meeting has been held since the last convention; and that was a joint meetings held in co-operation with this, the Plymouth Church, here in Rochester. That meeting was a success and resulted in raising a goodly sum toward defraying the indebtedness of the church, which was both gratifying and encouraging to the state officials as well as to the Plymouth church society.

Various obstacles seemed to obstruct the effort to arrange for mass meetings in Potsdam and in other cities, but I recommend for the incoming board that more strenuous efforts be put forth for the holding of mass meetings during the coming year.

In my opinion mass meetings rank next to missionary work in importance.

Summer Assemblies.

The Lily Dale Assembly assigned a New York State Day on the program of 1907. Your state missionary, Mrs. Reynolds, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing and and your president were the principal speakers, and the meeting was a success in every way. Many Spiritualists were made acquainted with our state work and interest was created in favor of organization.

That Assembly has assigned us July 22 on the program of 1908. The morning session to be a symposium of state workers, and in the afternoon Mrs. Reynolds and your president are named as speakers.

No doubt New York state visitors at that popular assembly will, many of them, manage to be present on New York State Day and assist in making the occasion one of especial interest and of benefit to the State Association, to the Lily Dale Assembly and to the cause in general.

We hear favorable reports of the work being done by the Freeville Camp Association, of which Brother Kelsey is president. That camp is also an auxiliary branch of the New York State Association.

State Legislation.

It is a matter of concern to all Spiritualists that our rights and privileges as a religious body be properly guarded against adverse legislation that may be inspired by special interests, or introduced in the interest of special privileges.

Heretofore the officers of this State Association have been watchful of the interests of Spiritualists and others. During the past year we have not been advised of any adverse legislation.

There are, however, some old "Blue Laws" standing on the statute books of New York state, which, while there seems to be no recent attempt at their enforcement, should be repealed and wiped off the books. One of these laws prohibits the practice of clairvoyance, which of course is ridiculous on its face, for the gift of clairvoyance (or spiritual seeing) can no more be prevented by law than could legislation prohibit a person's seeing with the physical eye. But yet such foolish laws may be invoked to cause annoyance to honest Spiritualists, and should be repealed. The stronger our organization, the more potent is its power for protection to our loyal workers.

I mention this matter to this convention for their consideration and for such action as may seem advisable.

Ordination.

A question of interest to all Spiritualists is, "How can ordinations best be regulated, so that only persons who are qualified by education and development of spiritual gifts be authorized to go forth as ministers of the gospel of Spiritualism, and at the same time assist and protect our worthy workers?"

The National Spiritualists' Association, of which the New York State Association is an auxiliary branch, has adopted certain requirements and regulations which are about being published for the guidance of the State Associations in this important matter. But up to this writing your president has not received a printed copy of such revised regulations. However, the incoming trustees will, no doubt, soon be in possession of the desired information which we believe will enable them to take such action in this matter as may harmonize the workings of the state board with the workings of the National board of trustees, in such manner as will best protect our public rostrums and at the same time do no injustice to our public workers.

Life Memberships.

The list of life memberships in our New York State Association is slowly growing, but there is room for many more lifemembers, and I wish we might add one hundred to this list during this convention. 'I feel highly honored by having my name registered in this list of loyal workers for the cause of truth and humanity, there to remain during the remainder of my earthly pilgrimage. And besides this it is to me a satisfaction to know that great good is being done with the money thus brought into the treasury. Every Spiritualist will work for the cause as long as strength and circumstances will permit, and through these life memberships we will be working (in a way) through the officers of this association, even after our physical strength may have failed us.

I plead for life memberships as an investment which will pay dividends even after we enter the spirit world.

Constitution and By-Laws.

The latest edition of the constitution and by-laws of our New York State Association is about exhausted, and your president has refrained from ordering another edition printed, until the matter could be taken up by this convention and consideration given and acted upon officially as to any changes that might seem desirable.

And I now recommend that a committee of three be appointed to take this matter up and report to the convention as early as possible with such recommendations as may seem advisable.

Fraudulent Practices.

Deception under the name of mediumship is indeed deplorable, and receives no sanction or encouragement from honest Spiritualists; and how gladly would the workers eliminate everything that savors of fraud or dishonesty in those who claim to be Spiritualist mediums and are going about the country deceiving investigators under the name of Spiritualism, with which they have no connection nor sympathy.

A Mr. Carrington, who claimed to be acting for the American Society for Psychical Research (of which Prof. James H. Hyslop is president) visited Lily Dale Assembly last summer.

While there he visited several mediums and claimed to the management that while he found some that he thought were not doing honest work, he found others that gave him some marvelous manifestations that could not be questioned.

Later on his report appeared in several leading newspapers and the things he thought were dishonest were written up quite sensationally, but the many marvelous genuine manifestation were not mentioned, thus saying to the public by inference (at least) that there was nothing but fraud given by the mediums of Lily Dale.

This form of deception by telling only a part of the truth was so manifestly unfair and unjust that it naturally throws a suspicion over his whole work and his methods as well and tends to create doubt as to the integrity of his purpose.

Spiritualists welcome honest criticism. If our methods are wrong, the management of our assemblies and our rostrums desire to know wherein; in order that it may be remedied. But candid minds will recognize the fact that to deceive the public by telling only a part of the truth may be just as reprehensible as to deceive in other ways.

Those acquainted with Lily Dale Assembly and who are familiar with the noble work that has for so many years been carried on there, will not be disturbed by Mr. Carrington's statements. But in all fairness we say give us the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Finances.

Very little has been done during the year in the way of appeals to the Spiritualists of the state for donations, and as a result the funds in the treasury need replenishing. State mass meetings offer an opportunity for reaching the Spiritualists and making them acquainted with our needs in this direction; and this is one reason why more mass meetings should be held.

Direct appeal by way of personal letters is another method of reaching those who may be interested and willing to assist in meeting our needs.

I believe the Spiritualists of the state will gladly respond and meet the needs of the association, when made acquainted with the situation.

In Conclusion.

W. E. Gladstone, the great English statesman, once said that the investigation of psychic phenomena was the most important of anything in which a person could engage. This great man could appreciate the importance of our work, and the time will surely come when the eyes of the people will be opened to the importance of Spiritualism and the scope of our movement.

We have demonstrated to the world that there is no death. We have brought into action psychic forces, and opened the fountains of inspiration through which master minds in spirit can reach and impress the minds of the children of earth.

We have demonstrated that thoughts are things, and can be projected from those whom we have been taught to call dead, but whom we now know live in the spirit world—which is only a higher department of the great school of life, and such thoughts find lodgment in the receptive brain of receptive people on earth, thus establishing co-operation and frequent communication between the spiritual and physical planes of existence.

The inventor who has entered spirit life continues his studies and experiments on that higher plane, and can impress his latest discovery upon the sensitive brain of an Edison or some other scientific machinist, and the world has a new and useful invention ready at its hand for use.

The musician, the artist and the teacher continue the line of study and investigation on the themes and subjects in which they were so intensely interested here; and the world receives the result of their labors through the action of these psychic laws and forces.

The reformer whose whole soul was wrapped up in earnest endeavors to help better conditions of humanity on the earth plane, does not lose his interest in this work at transition, but sees things through broader vision and from a larger view-point, and more comprehensive understanding, and anxiously improves the opportunity to continue his chosen labors by impressing these advanced thoughts on the mind of the reformer here on earth, who in his turn is giving it to the people. Thus it is in every line of human activity. The two worlds have been brought so closely in touch, and the thought atmosphere of higher intelligences is so thoroughly intermingled with our own that wonderful progress is being made along almost every line of human thought and action, especially those pertaining to physical things.

And now the most discerning minds are discovering signs which point to a spiritual awakening, and which leads them to believe that a great moral and spiritual wave will soon sweep over this world.

To assist in putting into operation the psychic forces that will hasten this development is the legitimate work of our Spiritualist organization.

When we look over these grand results, how important a part Spiritualism has played in bringing them into existence, we may well feel that there is much of encouragement for all true Spiritualists and loyal soldiers in this battle for truth and progress.

My fellow workers, let us take new courage. The clouds of error and selfishness are surely beginning to show a little rift, and we have reason to hope that the sunshine of truth and justice will soon burst upon this old world of ours, and that an era of Peace and Brotherhood is to supersede the present spirit of commercialism and strife.

Yes, brothers and siters, the brighter day is surely dawning for the reforms which Spiritualism stands for, and for which we have labored so long and faithfully.

H. W. RICHARDSON,
President.

Secretary's Report.

The twelfth annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists was held in Rochester, June 5, 6 and 7, at Plymouth church.

The speakers and message bearers were all state workers. The large delegation from auxiliary societies was evidence of an increased interest in every locality of the state.

The kind welcome of Plymouth church, with the earnestness of the delegates, as well as the beautiful weather, tended to the harmonious feelings of all.

Friday and Saturday the business sessions drew good audiences. The election of officers on Saturday afternoon closed the business session. The evening address was by Dr. Lockwood, of Buffalo, and he certainly gave his hearers food for thought. Sunday morning was a symposium for state workers.

Sunday afternoon Lyman C. Howe, of Fredonia, was the speaker. Sunday evening Carrie E. S. Twing, of Westfield.

The message bearers were Mrs. H. E. Atcheson, of Buffalo; Mrs. T. U. Reynolds, of Troy; May A. Price, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. W. M. Kelsey, of Rochester. Miss Flo Cottrell, of Holland, a medium for spirit rappings, demonstrated that phase of the phenomena.

The officers elected were: President, H. W. Richardson, East Aurora; first vice-president, Rev. B. F. Austin, Rochester; second vice-president, Dr. W. M. Lockwood, Buffalo; secretary, Mrs. Sarah A. Woodruff, Colden; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet M. Rathbun, New York City; trustees, Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson, Buffalo; Mrs. Sarah A. Holt, West Potsdam; Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, Troy; George W. Sisson, Niagara Falls.

The Sunday evening exercises with an audience of over 1,000 people was a testimony to the increasing interest among the people in the philosophy of Spiritualism, and a fitting close to the most harmonious convention in the history of the association.

Adjourned to meet in Rochester in 1909.

LETTER FROM TACOMA, WASH.

In Which the Writer Would Lay Out an Entire New Program of Action, Which, Up to Date, Has Not Been Adopted.

To the Editor, I have watched with interest for some time the correspondence and articles in your valuable paper on commercial and fraudulent mediumship, and have now before me your issue of May 9, containing a correspondence under the heading of Leading Intellectual Lights, between Mr. McArthur, president of the Missouri State Association, and Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C. To me the question relating to mediumship is a serious problem, one to which I have given much thought for some time past, and I am glad to see it taken up by the State Associations. I sincerely indorse the rules laid down by the Missouri State Association for the guidance of their mediums, still I have no doubt the advice given by Mrs. Mary T. Longley to her clients, in most cases have been helpful and uplifting. Nevertheless the time has come when the question of protecting honest mediums and raising the standard of our spiritual work must be dealt with. The important question is, What can be done to protect mediums and uplift the movement in general? I would suggest what seems to me to be a way out of the difficulty: That every society engaging a speaker or medium shall pay sufficient to enable him (or her) to devote the time to the work of the society during their engagement. A portion of their time should be set aside to receive visitors and give spiritual advice, in a room provided by the society; next we would suggest a locked money box be placed on a table with a ticket attached thereon, asking for donations toward the funds of the society. The medium will not be required or expected to handle any funds whatever. Another portion of the medium's time could well be employed in visiting the sick, calling on members and arousing a greater interest in the movement. This part of the work, "Visiting the Sick," appears to me to be much neglected. There is much good work that could be done were mediums engaged in this way. Why should not materializing and trumpet seances, in fact all the work, be done under the supervision of the different societies. My opinion is, that only by doing the work on these or similar lines can we hope to progress. Stand out boldly as a religious body. Gain the respect of the public and insure protection for our mediums.

Retribution.

There's one great truth we all should know,
That we MUST harvest what we sow,
No matter where or what "we're at,"
Dame Nature gives us "tit for tat."

Life's End.

If life is ended with a funeral
'Twere better ne'er to have lived at all;
If 'tis—"to be," then "not to be,"
'Tis but a farce and mockery.

Free Will.

If man's endowed with a free will,
And he can choose 'twixt good and ill,
Then why is it so often bent
By force of his environment?

The Spirit Realm.

If it be true that "near about us lies
The realm of Spiritual mysteries,"
What lack of soul and common sense
To scoff at facts in evidence.

STRAY THOUGHTS.

Thoughts Inspired While Listening to a Sermon by Rev. Wm. Horace Day, D.D., of the First Congregational Church, Los Angeles, California, Mar. 20, 1908, on the Subject, "The Blood of Jesus Cleanseth Us."

The tenacity with which so-called revealed religions cling to an ideal that was important to unadvanced minds in a remote past, accounts for the fact that science has been held back and a premium placed upon ignorance by priestcraft.

"God is the noblest work of man" may have been given out by a noted orator as a witicism; that it is nevertheless true that the gods of men are never above man's highest ideals. That which lies beyond man's conception is incomprehensible to him, therefore, so far as his reasoning is concerned is non-existent. But as the world advances and man comes more and more into his birthright of knowledge; as he lifts himself up and walks more and more erect; as the scales fall from his eyes and he sees more clearly, he discovers worlds which had existed that even Copernicus dreamed not of; principles in Nature that have not changed but that he could not use until the advanced mentality of the world brought forth an Edison and a Marconi; and new attributes of God that speak to his very soul if he will not suffer himself to be dragged back to an age of blood, a barbarous past.

The mistake of clinging to ideals of the past, and ignoring the ever advancing present, becomes apparent in reviewing the Christian's scripture and song and contrasting it with what would be his sentiment in this age of advancement, had it not become fixed in his system of worship.

A portion of the following texts and lines were quoted by the learned doctor in his argument to prove that 'the blood of Jesus cleanseth us," and the balance I have added because they belong to the same bloody category.

"The blood of Jesus, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

"Ye were redeemed with precious blood as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ."

"Now the God of peace who brought again from the dead the great shepherd of the sheep with the blood of an external covenant, even our Lord Jesus."

"And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of the altar once in the year; with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement once in the year shall he make atonement for it throughout your generations; it is most holy unto Jehovah."

"The sword of Jehovah is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, with the blood of lambs and goats, for Jehovah hath a sacrifice in Bozrah and a great slaughter in the land of Edom."

"And according to the law, I may almost say, all things are cleansed with blood, and apart from shedding of blood there is no remission."

An entire number of The Progressive Thinker could not contain all the texts that relate to the shedding of blood, and that being interwoven are the base, yes the chief corner stone of the Christian faith.

The doctor made the assertion that Christ's death was necessary to his successful ministry, and closed his discourse with the lines:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me."

Only a few days ago, Gillette, who wronged his sweetheart, then murdered her, left a sermon for young men, and declaring that he was saved through the blood of Christ, walked with firm tread to the electrocutioner's chair. He had been born into the Christian's faith and hypnotized into the firm belief that "The blood of Jesus cleanseth us," that "Jesus paid it all,

All the debt I owe;
He bore my sins, a crimson stain
He washed me white as snow."

I am not relating this, which is a very common incident, to discredit the Christian's faith or to throw a brand into the Christian's camp; but because I feel so earnestly the necessity of wiping out old myths and advancing the religious thought of the world to where it belongs in this advanced age.

God is the same, yesterday, to-day and forever. Then why should we reach back through musty cloisters and haggle over doubtful doctrines that have been bolstered up by narrow-minded, designing monks, when we can walk and talk with God as did the prophets of old?

The personal God of the Christian is a kindergarten ideal that belongs to the age of idol worship. The ideal or the idol was worshiped by the masses; but the more intelligent erected altars to an unknown God whom they endowed with Omniscience, Omnipotence and Omnipresence.

I would not take from the Christian his personal God, if by so doing he would be left without a God; I would not rob him of a single hope unless I could supply him with a better basis for a greater hope; nevertheless it is his duty to grow with the age in which he live.

"God is Love" is a demonstrated truth; but when linked to hatred, bloody sacrifices, a bloody atonement and the revengeful shedding of blood, it becomes a positive untruth.

All humanity and the universe are enveloped in the love of God. All Nature, the air we breathe and the sun that shines into our lives tells us of life, life, more abundant life; and the ever-changing but never perishing elements tell us of growth; of change and of eternal progress.

The swinging pendulum marks the time that is now rapidly carrying us away from a barbarous past.

Man in all ages has asked and is still asking, "Who and what is God?"

Harmony and Love, sisters twain
Shrink from contact with ignorance and sin;
But knowledge commands their allegiance from star unto sod;
And with Wisdom they merge as one-Being; that being is God.

God is Spirit; Infinite Intelligence; He is the Spirit within your soul; He is the Soul of all souls; the soul of the universe; He speaks to you through the whispering leaf, the murmuring rill and the lightning's crash if you will only hear; you can behold him in the moving cloud by day and the starry firmament by night, if you will lift up your eyes and see.

Would you come more and more clearly into your own? Would you come more closely in touch with the God who created you? Then get away sometimes from the haunts of men where the mean and revengeful may lurk. Go into the mountains or into the open field and lift up your thoughts to the God of love who takes pleasure in your spiritual growth and harmony. Realize your oneness with God and your life within his great and eternal Spirit, and a true inspiration of love will come to you and whether you realize it or not, you have heard the voice of God. Make resolves for the upliftment of yourself and your fellow-men who are as much a part of you as you are a part of God; receive the blessings that will come to you with your high resolves and you have walked and talked with God. Then carry your inspirations back with you into the haunts of men and give to them the love that they crave, that they hunger for but cannot find in the cold walls of the church or within the cloistered cell; and you will forget the blood of the Lamb in the blessings that will come to you through the eternal truth that will come into your soul.

LET'S DO A LITTLE SWEEPING

We have brushed away the cobwebs of a superstitious age;
We have thrown a new religion now upon life's record-page;
We have flung the gates of heaven back upon the golden wall;
We have found the spirit mansion
open wide and free to all;
We have raised from creedal ashes
many minds all covered o'er;
Now let's do a little sweeping right
around our cabin door.

We have often caused commotion in the circles of the earth;
We have science and religion shown that death but means re-birth;
We have brought God down among us from His throne up in the sky;
We have bathed the smouldering embers that around hell's furnace lie;
We have soothed the aching bosoms of the sobbing world of yore,
Now let's do a little sweeping right
around our cabin door.

We have torn down many structures with our reason and our facts;
We have proved that man's salvation comes by kindly words and acts;
We have shown the world the future is as certain as the now;
We have shown the loving kindred and re-plighted every vow;
We have shown that all lost loved ones have just gone along before;
Now let's do a little sweeping right
around our cabin door.

We have climbed the golden ladder to the world's eternal dream
Of a future life immortal, and have caught a tiny gleam
Of the life beyond the portal, and the faces we have known;
We have found the land of spirit and would claim it as our own,
But we get our own proportion: only that and nothing more;
And we ought to do some sweeping all around our cabin door.

DR. T. WILKINS.

Victory for Barrett.

The city council committee on health and police yesterday morning voted to recommend for passage the Cottel ordinance, with amendments suggested by Harrison D. Barrett, pastor of the First Spiritualist church, regulating mediumistic practice in Portland. Upon request of Chief Deputy City Attorney Fitzgerald, a clause was inserted fixing punishment for infractions at from $25 to $500 fine, from 30 days to six months imprisonment, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Preceding the action of the committee, there occurred a lively tilt between the opposing forces of Spiritualists. Those favorable to the ordinance and its amendments were led by Mr. Barrett, who was for many years National president, while the others were led by Mrs. Sophia B. Seip, president of the Oregon State Association. Some bitter personalities were indulged in during the proceedings.

The action of the committee is a distinct victory for the Barrett faction, as it is confidently expected that the ordinance will pass the council. As amended it provides the heavy penalties stated for any person or persons found guilty of accepting money or valuables from those to whom is offered something which is fraudulent. It is said by Deputy City Attorney Fitzgerald to be a good measure, and one which, he states, should have been passed long ago.

When the committee was called to order, Mr. Barrett arose and stated his position in the matter, strongly urging that the ordinance and the amendments be recommended for passage. He declared that it is only to set right his religion and to make his position clear that he wished to see the measure become a law. To punish the illegitimate, to protect the innocent and to assist in the dissemination of truth and the abolition of error, he said, is his motive.—Portland Oregonian.

Mrs. C. McFarlin Leaves La Crosse.

The Spiritualist Church has closed public meetings for the summer, as the pastor, Rev. Catherine McFarlin, was obliged to return to Plainview, Minn., to look after her aged mother.

She has aroused a decided interest in Spiritualism in La Crosse. Her sermons were of an exalted nature and very interesting to those who were fortunate enough to hear them, and her audiences continually gained in number, and the church in membership during the winter.

Mrs. McFarlin made many friends during her stay, outside of the church as well as inside, by her broad-mindedness and profound interest in every movement that was for the betterment of society.

The People's Sunday School which she organized will feel her loss, but are so desirous to continue, that arrangements have been made to carry on the school at the home of, Mrs. Keizer, 712 Cass street, for the summer at the same hour, 11 o'clock Sunday morning.—La Crosse Tribune.

Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature.—Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of life a Cosmic Truth.—The greatest book and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity if life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.00.

STARTLING FACTS, OR DEEDS OF DARKNESS DISCLOSED.

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

FATHER TOM AND THE POPE.

Or a night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth 50 cents.

Grove Meeting in Indiana.

The Indiana State Association held an all-day mass meeting in a large grove near Balbec, Ind., Sunday, June 7. The platform and seats were arranged in true rustic style in Nature's own temple, and Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the N. S. A., gave two able and instructive discourses, one at 10:30 and one at 2:30. At the noon hour long tables were spread in the woods and everything known to the culinary art was included in the bill of fare with a barrel of ice water brought on a big sled to quench the thirst. In the evening the entire party, of about fifteen, took a hay wagon ride of three miles by the light of a "June moon," to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gardner, of the famous Twin Hills of Jay county, where a local medium, Mr. Will H. Cecil, held a trumpet seance, after which ice cream, cake, strawberries and lemonade were served.

The state officers, together with Dr. and Mrs. Warne, enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Gray, who live on a large farm and have entertained most of the speakers and mediums who have served the society, of which Mr. Gray is president. The country was never more beautiful and the odor of the sweet clover blossoms was a most delightful change from the smoke and dust of the city.

The society at Balbec, known as the West Grove Association, is the largest in the Indiana State Association and own their own church. Dr. Warne says this is the only Spiritualist church he has found in the rural district in any of his travels.

There is a prospect of putting on a grove meeting, of from three days to a week at Portland, Ind., which is only a short distance from Balbec and all who attended that meeting will not want to miss this one. Notice will be given later of dates and talent.

Everything looks favorable for a most successful N. S. A. convention at Indianapolis in October, but the money necessary to cover the expense is not forthcoming in as rapidly as we would like to see it. We still believe that the Spiritualists of Indiana have the Cause at heart so that they will come to our assistance when the time comes. All money will be promptly receipted for and used only for the purpose of carrying on the work.

CARRIE H. MONG,
Muncie, Ind. Secretary.

Ohio S. A. Convention.

The O. S. A. convention has come and gone, and it is hoped that the work initiated there will be for good.

The weekday sessions were held in the West Side church, which was beautifully decorated with flags, bunting, and sun-flowers, a large banner with the word welcome was stretched across the entrance-door, and illumined by an electric arc-light. At both evening services the church was crowded to the doors, and some seeing that they could not enter turned back.

The Sunday services which were were held at the Masonic Temple, where Miss Harlow is pastor, were well attended both morning and afternoon. The surprise of the three days, however, came in the evening, when those who had attended during the day came back at night and so many more with them that the gallery and ante-rooms were filled and standing room was at a premium, although the Temple, we are told, seats seven hundred people easily.

The morning and evening meetings were addressed by Will J. Erwood, who, in his usual clear and concise manner, made himself understood, never beating about the bush, but aiming straight at the point, calling things by their proper names, never stopping to "patch fig leaves for the naked truth." His earnest arguments in favor of more practice of Spiritualism, living it as well as talking it, won him the admiration and approval of the audience whose attention was so profound as to be almost breathless.

A short speech by Mr. Erwood at one of the business sessions, as well as speeches by Miss Harlow and other, did much to help the delegates to decide upon legislation which we believe will greatly help our movement at home and at large, and which is embodied in the resolutions adopted by the convention, a copy of which will no doubt be furnished to you by State Secretary Sollinger for publication.

ELIZABETH SCHAUSS.
Toledo, Ohio.

St. Joseph, Mo., Society.

As I have seen nothing from the St. Joseph Society for some time I hope you will grant me a little space. Feeling that it is simply negligence and not a lack of appreciation that there has not been a report of our work sent in, for never has our society enjoyed a year of better work or greater results. Our medium and speaker in charge Mrs. Louis Stanton, deserves the greatest credit for her untiring efforts to build up to the highest standard our little society, and to say that she has succeeded gives us great pleasure. Perfect harmony prevails and never have we enjoyed the patronage of attendance of a more intellectual people. Mrs. Stanton is a home medium, having developed right here among us and is an inspirational speaker and message bearer. We speak for her a place in the front ranks. With a pleasing personality and an earnestness born of her love for her work, she is destined to do a great work. The last Sunday in May we closed our meetings in the King Hill hall where for seven months Mrs. Stanton has given us the highest and best best thoughts, and pleaded for a higher and better Spiritualism. Her last evening in King hall. We had a stenographer to take the lecture and for one hour and thirty minutes she held us, and we were sorry when she had finished. She will resume her work at her home, 617 N. 17th street until fall, when we will again open the meetings in the hall.

Mr. M. P. Mannon, president; Mr. H. Korf, vice-president; Mrs. P. Mathis, secretary.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

"In Tune with the Infinite." An earnest and sincere work, in the author's best style. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Price $1.35.

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power, by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyancee than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. CARLYLE PETERSILEA'S BOOKS.

Occanides.—A Psychical Novel.—Price, paper cover, 50 cents.—This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted inspired author. The question of soul mates, or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting. It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

Mary Anne Carew.—Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat cloth cover, Price $1. This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

"All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." By Eleanor Kirk. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., JUNE 27, 1908 NO. 970

J. S. LOVELAND.

Passed to the Spirit Life from San Diego, Cal., May 28, 1908.

Behold! a soul is born again—
Another world! Another joy!
And with the birth of a glad exclaim,
Which death itself could not destroy.

We send him greeting in that land
Beyond the confines of the earth;
Exalt with love the waiting hand
That helped him in his spirit birth.

Rejoice with him, O friends below,
Rejoice with all your ardent soul;
On him your wishes best bestow,
The spirit-world your love control.

"I care not yet to go," said he,
My work on earth is not yet done."
He spoke in part with prophecy—
For work, in truth, had just begun.

His work not done! Oh, no, not done—
Has only changed for time and place;
He's only left it to be gone
Behind Life's curtains for a space.

No doubt to him it now appears
Whate'er of life, to him is gain;
His mind not scourged with doubts and fears,
Nor spirit body racked with pain.

To him life's purpose had been true—
The purpose of a wise command;
"Go forth and preach! The truth pursue!
Give of thy wisdom to the land!"

Born when the nation was still young,
He saw the changes of the hour;
He heard the shouts of victory rung
From throats of men by those in power.

He heard the bondman's wailing cry,
The swish of lash, the pistol shot;
He heard the nation's harsh reply
When challenged with a slaver's plot.

He made the black slave's cause his own,
And worked with tireless will to win;
Nor spoke he in a softened tone
About the nation's grievous sin.

He sought to stay the hand of might,
The scorn of men in places high;
Reprove the wrong, inspire the right,
And soothe the orphan's moan and sigh.

He dared to think and swiftly plan—
Our brother of the modern thought;
He saw the God within the Man,
As a poet in deep vision wrought.

And as he saw, he spoke and wrote
With ever-ready tongue and pen;
Nor worked in vain to lift the yoke
Which blindly held his fellow-men.

He heard the voiceless cry of those
Who then were slaves to church and creed;
Whose Bible was forever law—whose
Love for Christ made priestly greed.

There was then need of action great
To free the soul of man as well;
To curb the power of church and state,
And save him from eternal hell.

He saw with vision keen and strong
The tracings of a wiser hand;
And sought to ever right the wrong,—
Thus with the world's reformers stand.

The world is better now than then,
Whatever view of it we take;
The sword must yield its power to pen,
And war no more of carnage make.

A still, small voice from out the air
Came ever with firm demand;
"Proclaim the spirit everywhere—
I am thy brother to command.

"Teach thou the world that we still live—
The truth that man lives after death;
And of this truth be free to give
In concert with thy latest breath."

He heard the call and boldly went
To battle in the world's broad field;
The spirit-world to represent,
With truth and wisdom for a shield.

His was the hand that led the way
Through mazy labyrinths of doubt;
And pointed out the breaking day,
And put our rising fears to rout.

His was the voice that bade us know
The solid ground whereon we tread;
And set our hopeful minds aglow
With spirit knowledge freely shed.

To him the beautiful and good
Were one with God, and God in Man;
The earth a kindly brotherhood,
The measured order of a plan.

Make room, O spirit-world, for him
Who gladly worked his mission here;
Renew his youthful fire and vim,
Extend his mission over there.

'Twas meet that he should pass to life
Amid the beauteous bloom of May;
And calmly close the earthly strife,
As sunset ends a perfect day.

H. C. O'BLENESS.

It costs more to revenge injuries than to bear them.—Latin.

There is not the least necessity in trying to prevent people from thinking. They are quite ready enough to do it of their own accord, and even rigid or indifferent without any external inducements. The huge dead weight of established prejudices is amply sufficient. We may say that free thinking is not only right, but a duty. A man, that is, is bound to be as reasonable as he can.—Sir Leslie Stephens.

Jealousy is a secret avowal of our inferiority.—Massillon.

Interesting Experiences

As Related by the Venerable William F. Nye, of New Bedford, Mass.

I will go back to my new birth. I don't mean that of eighty-four years since, but to that which the medium Jesus implied, when he said, "Ye must be born again." The revealments of this new birth from the hand of the Supreme, when in the heyday of my manhood, are to be no less astounding than to each of you doubtless when first that thrill of joy possessed you as the certainty of the continuity of life after the so-called death was made known. Like the ethereal forces that ever enshroud us from the skies, or the brawn and brain we draw from the revolving earth we tread, is this new birth into Spiritualism, this grand truth that is unfailing, lifting us from darkness to light, from night to day, and which is fast lifting the world from bondage to freedom, from the dread of a dark future into paths that lead us to the gateway of beautiful homes we have striven to build and desire to possess in the sweet bye and bye.

First Seance With Fox Sisters.

My investigations take me back to the cradle of modern Spiritualism in which the Fox Sisters were the infants, to whose heaven-guided innocence it is ever my joy to think I was led to listen. At my first seance with them, unknown to them or to the few persons present, utterly ignorant as I was of the new philosophy, I listened to Katie's interpretation of the tiny raps. In wonder I listened, as a gentleman seated beside me appeared to be receiving a message. Presently he stated: "This man was a major in the army—I held him in my arms when he died." I was startled, and impressively put the question to him: "Do you mean to say, sir, that you are communicating with one who is dead, who has gone from earth?" "I certainly am," was his reply, and to my every question he affirmed the truth.

Soon Miss Fox was interpreting some tiny raps upon the table, spelling out, "My dear uncle." It is for you," she says, "a spirit child." I could think of no spirit child who might thus address me, and so stated to those present, when a clairvoyant lady sitting at the table stated: "It is a little girl and she sits upon the table here in a wreath of flowers." Then it came to my mind that my brother in California lost a little girl years before. This being my first experience I was at a loss to question the spirit, but was told to ask questions either mentally or writing them upon slips of paper laying upon the table. I did both and every question was intelligently replied to, when voluntarily came this message: "I can hear and speak now, dear uncle." The meaning of this being questioned, I explained to those present that this bright little soul that passed away away at five years of age was both deaf and dumb from infancy. Had a voice from the throne of the Omnipotent spoken to me, my inmost soul could not have more effectually burst its fetters and leaped with joy at that eventful hour, and from that well-spring of perpetual youth I quaffed the assurance of eternal life.

From that time on I have been an investigator—a student—witnessing many materialization in spirit forms, of spirit messages and spirit writings, and, I may say, many remarkable instances of spirit indentity up to the announcement of the two perishing crews of the ships Vigilant and Mt. Wollaston in the rigid Arctic seas.

The Loss of Captain Nye.

My very dear brother, Captain Ebenezer Nye, of ship Mt. Wollaston, came at the audible voice seance of Mrs. Collin on the eve of February 22, 1889, when nothing was known of their fate, and revealed to us the sad intelligence in his own voice—painfully assuring me—in reply to my question: "Is it true that you with your hardy crew have perished and not to come back to us?" "Yes, dear brother, it is true that I am born to the life eternal. I am with mother in her beautiful spirit home." I said to him: "Hard indeed will it be to us if this is your sad fate;" his reply was: "I know it. That dear old father—he told me to make a short voyage and not make another, but tell him I will be the first to meet him when he comes over." This was his intended last voyage—his twentieth to that rigid icebound sea for the valuable bow-head whale.

Many times has this brother made his presence known to me, by taking my watch from my hand and by my mental request, placing it in the hands of all present in a dark room and returning it to me and then patting me on my head and shoulders. At times he has made the request at a seance where I was not present asking that they call me to meet him at a following seance, when he invariably came: and at one of these meetings his object was (as he stated) to tell me that I did just right in the adjustment of a matter that came before the court in the settlement of his estate. I think in this instance he fully sensed my mind and wished to relieve me of some misgivings I had, and I was glad to say to him that I did just as I well knew he would have done had he returned from his last voyage.

Message from Brother Ephraim.

My hero brother, Ephraim, who fell at Fort Steadman, at the end of his nineteenth battle in the war of the rebellion, very unexpectedly made himself known by loud raps on the table before me, after the tiny raps came from the little deaf and dumb child and gave me a lengthy patriotic message. Turning me from my questioning him as to the cruel manner in which he was shot down after surrender at Fort Steadman, he says, "But my dear brother, I died in a glorious cause—I died rejoicing that I stood bravely for my country now one and indivisible, that its flag now waves over a united people reverenced by the nations of the earth."

Another remarkable manifestation and no less an astounding revealment was given me at Lake Sunapee through a Mrs. Cadwell. She had come to Sunapee Lake camp on that day, a stranger to me. Finding she was to hold a seance in the evening, I climbed the New Hampshire hill during the rainy afternoon and gathered a very pretty bouquet of wildflowers and presented them to her.

That evening Mrs. Cadwell's little control, Maude, a mere child, came from the box where Mrs. Cadwell was chained by her own request, and began to prattle to the sitters. To me she said: "You brought my media a nice bouquet." "How did you know that?" I asked. "Well, I went with you all the way up the hills in the rain." The little spirit child's hair was flowing to her shoulders. When I asked her to let me feel of it, she asented, and as I lifted it in my hands, I asked her to tell me how it grew. "Tell me how the orange grows—then I can tell you," she replied.

Manifestation of Gracie Lawrence.

At another seance of Mrs. Cadwell on a very cold winter evening in New York, only the medium and a lady friend, a prominent spiritual gentleman from Brooklyn, and myself were present. The severe cold had prevented her usual attendance, and I said to Mrs. Cadwell that with so few present we wouldn't exact a sitting from her. "Oh, yes," she said, "I will sit." And here again I received a grand truth. From the cabinet in which Mrs. Cadwell sat, there came out a female form with water dripping from her garments—she appeared greatly distressed and motioned to me when asked to whom she came. I at once stepped to her and took her hand. It was wet and cold and the water ran into my coat sleeve and upon the floor. "Who is this?" I question. "Gracie," she replied, when at once all came to me. Gracie Lawrence, daughter of Reuben Lawrence, of my native village, Pocasset, despondent over family affairs, left her home at early morning and drowned herself in a shallow brook nearby. I recognized her without a shadow of doubt and said to her, "Gracie, I understand your sad distressed condition; you have come back through the same gateway you left this sphere. This is the law; you have lifted your cross and will feel much relief when you return, as wise spirits will help you to better comprehend the law now that you have expressed your desire to meet it." Her lips moved, but she could not articulate as she seemed to desire.

His Daughter Minnie.

And now let me go back to the audible voice circles of Mrs. Nelson Collins, where many conversed with us and many remarkable cases of spirit identity were made manifest. The departure of my own dear daughter, Minnie, the youngest of the family, cast over us the deepest sorrow. As she neared the border, I felt that my life would go out with her life, and though she was zealous as a church member and opposed to me in sentiment, I ventured to say to her a short time before she left: "Minnie, you know I think you will come back to me." "No, father, I shall not come back; do not distress me," was the faint reply. So I said no more, realizing her ruling sentiment was strong in a death. But a week had elapsed after her departure, when unexpectedly I was invited to another seance at the Collins circle. Only five of us were seated around the little table when to my unspeakable joy my precious daughter called to me in her perfect life accents, "Father, father," she said, a little distance above my head. My immediate response was: "Why, Minnie, this is your own voice." "Yes, father; it is me and no one else now talking to you." I responded, "My precious darling, do you know what an unspeakable joy you bring to me?" "Yes, father, I know it all now—I know I told you I would not come back, but when I found I could come I wanted to come; and, father, I want to tell you that but a few minutes after you held my hand and watched my last breath I awoke amid scenes so beautiful I cannot describe them to you. But, dear father, if you could only realize the beauties of the spirit world, you'd have no dread of coming." She came nearer and nearer to me as we conversed, then lifted my hand from the table. When I asked if she could kiss me. "I'll try," she replied; and presently kissed me as naturally as ever in life. Often has she come to me since, and I often feel her sweet presence.

The Disreputable Dis de Bar.

Again let me relate what I witnessed and received through the disreputable Dis de Bar. She had come to Onset unheralded. Few knew her, but upon our platform she proclaimed with what abnegation she was giving to the world the remarkable manifestations that were coming through her gift without price save a willing contribution. Availing myself of an early call upon her while yet at the restaurant breakfast table opposite her hotel lodgings, I was introduced to her as then president of the association. She promised me the first manifestation. I had witnessed the day before the spirit painting of a North American Indian in perfect garb and feather all in the space of eight minutes on a ten-inch cardboard, so I hastened to prepare my cardboard and took my seat in the hotel parlor holding two sheets together over my head—by her request—as in the case of the Indian portrait. Amid the disturbance of her child she had with her crying, and many coming into the room curious to witness what might take place, she walking the floor, fanning away her perspiration, she touched a corner of the sheets that, on account of aching arms, she told me to hold upon my knees. "Now," she says, "all remain quiet and you'll hear the writing to be given." This was clearly evident to us, and within five minutes more, she pronounced the finish. Both sheets were written over upon the inside as folded—one in heavy hand, signed Martin Luther, which was remarkably characteristic of the great reformer; the other was at length in a lady's finer hand, signed Athalia, a beautiful niece of our family, Athalia Calder, who passed away in Wilmington, N. C., leaving two children who at this time were visiting us in Fairhaven, and whom I had taken to my Onset cottage.

Her message read: "Dear Uncle Foster: I cannot tell you of my joy in meeting you all on this bright morning in this charming place and to thank you for all you have done for my dear children. Ever will I bless you. I am here with them and caress them, but they cannot see me. Oh! what a joy it would be to the world if they could but fully realize that they live on and that all will again meet their loved ones."

One of the most remarkable prophetic revealments I ever met with was at an evening seance I was invited to attend in New York soon after my awakening through the Fox Sisters. I was then attending a course of Sunday lectures by Emma H. Britten and other prominent speakers of those early days. Among the acquaintances I made at the time was a very intelligent gentleman of the city who stated to me that a daughter of his was making remarkable revealments in his own family circle, and though but sitting for development, kindly assented to my attending, though not to sit in the circle as that was exclusively formed. I invited to attend with me a favorite cousin, Captain Joseph Dimock, who chanced to be in New York with his vessel at the time. He occupied a seat near the entrance of the circle room. I was seated near the medium on the opposite side of the room. We were both utter strangers to the young lady medium, but turning in her seat she first gave the captain a veritable message from his brother, Lot, who had but recently died in Mobile, and who, through the medium, instructed him as to the division of a property he had left in Massachusetts. Here was a clincher to my previous discovery with the Fox Sisters, for how could Lot talk with his brother through this young lady medium, if he did not still live, and I was credulous enough to accept the fact that Lot still lived, for Captain Joe recognized all she said as true. He was but the soul of truth, the first to embrace Spiritualism in his native town. Closing her message to Cousin Joe she raised her head and looked intently at me across the room, saying: "And you, sir, are in a way that you scarcely know what you had best do—you are troubled over ill success of late:" I was in New York doing business with the South, and it was panning out bad. She said: "Drop all—go back to your home and that business you left there will be a success." I acted upon her advice which has proved true to the letter. "Who is talking to me?" I asked. She replied, "One whom you never knew."

These are surely evidences that the human soul survives after dropping the material form it has animated.

COMES TO LIFE IN COFFIN.

Man Kisses Face of Wife and Discovers She Is Still Alive.

London, May 21.—A woman named Mrs. Carton of Tonbridge, has been through one of the most terrible ordeals ever known. She fell into a trance after a short illness and was placed in a coffin in the belief that she was dead. She lay silent, unable to move or speak, while preparations for the funeral were going on all around her.

Mrs. Carton's husband was distracted with grief when, a few days ago, he found her apparently dead after a few day's illness. All arrangements were made for the funeral, a coffin was brought and the woman was laid in it. Then, just as the coffin was about to be screwed down, Mr. Carton asked to be left alone with the body for a moment. He bent over his wife to kiss her for the last time. The cheek on which his lips rested was warm. His wife was alive.

The man, dazed with joy and wonder, sent at once for a doctor, who confirmed his hopes. The doctor ordered her to be removed at once to the hospital. Her condition rapidly improved, and she is now well on the way to recovery.

"I knew everything which was going on around me," the woman said, "but I could not move. I could not even speak when I saw that they thought I was dead."

Even when she was put in her coffin, and it seemed almost certain that she would be buried alive, she was unable to utter a word to save herself. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

FORGIVE THE WRONG.

Dear boy, has someone done you ill,
Don't hasten to resent it;
Oft those who seek a swift revenge
Find leisure to repent it.

Though anger for a moment rise,
Far better to subdue it;
One moment lent to passion's sway
May leave you years to rue it.

Though anger loud for vengeance cries,
Again, again deny it;
Two wrongs will never make one right,
Howe'er you multiply it.

Although your wound may rankle sore,
Kind thoughts will soonest heal it;
Forgive the wrong with free good will
And soon you'll come to feel it.

A Baby Hercules.

A Physical Culture Baby Creates Astonishing Interest in Chicago.—How the Earth Could Be Populated with Human Beings Highly Developed Physically and Spiritually.—Preparations for Motherhood, as Set Forth in the Physical Culture Magazine.

A nature baby has astonished the residents of Hyde Park, Chicago, by his remarkable athletic feats. We have had a great deal to say in previous issues of this magazine of the value of physical culture in developing health and strength in infant life. Leland Anderson, who was born less than six months ago, can perform many feats that children several years of age could not accomplish. One of the Chicago papers, in commenting his feats, describes them as follows:

"Hanging on mother's fingers in mid-air.

"With body flat on floor passing up his head and chest from the floor with his arms.

"Putting a cane underneath his knees and holding fast, the cane in turn being held by his mother.

"Standing upon the hand alone, feet held by mother.

"Standing on his head, feet held by mother.

"When six weeks old he did acrobatic feats which even a four or five year old child might envy. He has muscles on his arms and back which stand out as if the infant were almost a trained grown-up. His tiny legs are solidly built, like an athlete's."

It is really deplorable that the average mother has not sufficient intelligence to bring about the conditions which are essential to the development of similar health and strength in her progress. This should not be an unusual baby. The average baby that we see before us at the present time should really be the exception.

Prudery must bear the blame for this crime—it is many times worse than a crime, for when you can fully realize that every baby in the land, with a rare exception here and there, could be as strong, or stronger, than this infant you will then understand the extent of the evil that this race has to contend with in its struggle against the ignorance and the vulgarism inculcated by prudery.

I thought my readers would be especially interested in reading the comments of both the father and the mother of this infant that seems so marvelous to the average mother. Their communications are interesting and will do a great deal to show other mothers how they might be able to accomplish similar results.

Letter from Mrs. Anderson.

To the Editor: While the articles contained in the daily papers concerning my baby boy, first styled by the Chicago Tribune as "the infant Hercules," have not been overdrawn, yet they have prudishly omitted to mention some facts which I believe your readers will be interested in. To begin with, I commenced preparations for motherhood more than one year before baby's birth, and during that time lived and acted in every way as naturally and hygienically as I knew how, all of which resulted in the bringing forth of a child the perfection of which, to me, is all that I could ask.

Since his birth I have given some attention to training him physically, but have never imposed any hardships upon him, as one "busybody" would have the Humane Society believe, but have given him his own freedom and while I have not encouraged him in his exercises I have not hampered him with tight or unnecessary clothing.

If you could only see his intense enjoyment while taking his physical culture exercises you would know that they could not be unnatural or overdone. When time for his gymnastics he commences to kick, coo, laugh and squeal with delight. He seems to realize that the exercises are for his good and there is no question as to the great benefits he derives from them, and if mothers would only devote a little time to such practice they would have no need for paregoric and soothing syrups.

There is no secret system about it or anything difficult to learn, but good judgment should be used in selecting such exercises as are calculated to bring all of the different muscles into play so as to insure a harmonious development of the body as well as of the mind.

Deep breathing is a natural result of vigorous exercise and the very full chest of my baby is doubtless due to his physical culture exercises. His stomach and waist are entirely free from the usual bandages and tight fitting clothes, which allows him to breathe very deeply, thus developing lung capacity and purifying and enriching the blood with the health-giving oxygen he inhales while sleeping out of doors, which he does even during the coldest weather. On account of its uncommonness it doubtless seems to many as though such treatment was too severe, and even cruel, but I can assure anxious mothers that their little ones will enjoy life ten times as much as the result of such treatment, to say nothing of the laying of a good foundation for a long and healthy life, for if a baby's health is good and its body strong everything else desirable must follow as natural result.

I have always given him a tub bath night and morning in water at about 8 degrees Fahrenheit, or even a little colder, which produces a reaction and he comes out of the tub all aglow, and anxious and ready for his exercises, which are followed by a sun and air bath, then an almond oil rub; after that a well-earned feast from the maternal fount, and then a sound sleep of three or four hours on the back porch in sunshine, snow or rain, from the inclemency of which he is, of course, protected. I have a thermometer near his cot, so as to observe the sudden changes which often occur, but never have found his face or hands the least bit cold, which is, of course, due to good circulation. When he sleeps indoors it is always near an open window, and this window has been open ever since he was born.

I really believe that Leland commenced his physical culture exercises before birth, and this was the only discomfort I experienced during the entire period of gestation. I never experienced the usual "morning sickness" even once and parturition was of less than one hour's duration and practically painless, all of which I attribute to a natural and simple life, as it relates to diet, dress and exercise.

I have never posed as an athlete or paid special attention to physical culture, yet I have for years practiced regularly and systematically such bodily movements and light gymnastics as were calculated to develop qualities of strength and endurance, not only in my own body but in that of my child as well and am delighted to say that the demands I have made upon Mother Nature have been most bountifully supplied, not with massive, knotty muscles of the professional athlete, but strong, solid and alert ones which never fail me, and if women will only persist in these simple exercises and live hygienically in all respects they will not only greatly enhance their own happiness but endow their children with that quality of strength and perseverance which means so much in achieving success in this strenuous, exacting world.

That all these things are of the utmost importance throughout life cannot be for a moment doubted by anyone who gives them a fair and impartial trial. An understanding of the laws of health has brought sunshine into my own home, and I am only too glad to give others the benefit of my experience in rearing a baby on hygienic principles. Of course, there never was such a baby as mine. Every mother who has lovingly bent over her first-born will understand why I naturally think so; but that he is entirely different and superior to most babies I do KNOW, and I also know that there are many good reasons for it. My baby is only six months old, yet he conducts himself far more decorously than most babies at two years. He goes to sleep between six and seven at night and sleeps until six or seven in the morning. He is always rosy-cheeked and healthy, and during his waking hours laughing and happy—a source of real pride to his mother and a wonder to all those who do not understand the results of natural law applied to babyhood both pre-natally and continuously.

Let mothers understand that if a healthy baby cries or has to be taken up unnecessarily (which should not be the case) the treatment it is receiving is wrong in some respects and should be changed. The barbarous custom of putting tight bandages around the baby as though it were necessary to squeeze it into shape is wrong and mothers should be taught to abandon this and many other detrimental and even murderous customs. The newcomer should be made as comfortable as possible in a common-sense way and Nature will do the rest. No wine, brandy, paregoric or other dope is necessary under ANY circumstances. An ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure, and the ONLY cures are to be found in Nature's way.

MRS. L. H. ANDERSON.

Letter from Mr. Anderson.

To the Editor: While systematic exercise, fresh air and sunlight are of vast importance, they are no more so than the subject of reproduction. This is undoubtedly the least understood, yet most important subject for prospective parents; but in spite of this fact it is usually ignored in textbooks on physiology, is not taught in our schools, not even in medical colleges, and physicians as a rule say but very little about it, for the very good reason that they know little or nothing concerning it.

It is indeed a sad reflection upon our supposed advanced civilization, upon this our new and much-lauded twentieth century of progress, that people should be left to live, propagate and bring up their little innocents in entire darkness, relying upon haphazard results solely on account of having been uninformed or not having been taught concerning this most needful of all subjects; while every other yet less important branch of physiology is taught.

So long has this subject been neglected and tabooed that it is now hedged around by a prejudice which is born of ignorance that few dare to try to surmount the barrier; and when they do, like your worthy editor, Mr. Macfadden, strike out boldly for the good of the race, they must suffer petty annoyances and unjust and tyrannical persecutions at the hands of the prudish fanatics employed by a sincere but misguided set of would-be philanthropists. Could these latter mentioned people, however, only be persuaded to lay aside their prejudice and examine the subject with unbiased minds, they could not help being fully convinced of its great value.

When I first became interested in pre-natal culture, some years ago, I was astounded at the almost universal ignorance and prejudice concerning it. This fact and the widespread interest which the public press has given the somewhat miraculous yet nevertheless perfectly natural feats of little Leland convinces me that a scientific study of stirpiculture as propounded by the different physical culture publications is of the utmost importance to the masses.

While pre-natal influence has been frequently briefly alluded to in medical literature, yet such references have been not only illogical but arrayed in such bigoted terms as not to be understandable by the masses, even if they were possessed of real value. Aside from such so-called scientific mention, a number of laymen have dealt with the subject in a popular form, but few have investigated upon a perfectly natural, hence scientific, basis, putting it in such form as to be readily understood and made practical by those who should be most interested—prospective parents. That priceless benefit would result from a proper handling of the subject there cannot be the shadow of a doubt.

It is a subject which is and should be of universal interest and of the most vital importance to all, whether it be considered from a physical, mental, moral or social standpoint, as it lies at the very foundation of all human improvement and progress.

Husbands and wives should desire to bring into the world welcome, healthy, well-born children both physically and mentally, but in order to do this they must be supplied with the proper knowledge. It is the supreme right of every child to be well-born with a strong, healthy, well-developed body and a clear, bright, pure mind, with only the seeds of goodness, nobleness and grandness sown therein. Such children have the right kind of a start in the world and with proper care, education, and culture are predestined to live healthy, happy and successful lives; a pleasurable existence for themselves and an unfailing source of pleasure to all those associated with them.

While Mrs. Anderson and I do not claim to have put one-half the amount of study and investigation into this subject that we should or would have liked to have done, or to have had the necessary will power to carry out all that we felt we knew upon the subject, yet the little we have done has produced marvelous results.

For many weeks we did not consider the playful antics of little Leland of any consequence, simply because we fully expected such results, but when neighbors and friends commenced to criticise and open their eyes in astonishment at his feats we began to realize that they were out of the ordinary. The many who have been attracted to our home, either through idle curiosity or with a firm desire to profit thereby, always say that they "could not believe such things possible without seeing them with their own eyes," which leads us to believe such things are unusual, to say the least.

As Leland's mother is the one who is responsible for the unspeakable and indescribable pleasure which it is our good fortune to jointly enjoy as the result of a "little stranger's visit to our home," I have asked her to give you a brief account of circumstances, which she will do with pleasure, being always more than willing to hold the light of truth up to all who are sincere and anxious for it.

GHOST IN HOKE SMITH'S MANSION

Governor's Wife and Daughter Both Saw It and Promptly Swooned.

Atlanta, Ga., June 3.—The ghostly gray-garbed figure of a young woman which appears at all hours of the night, is causing the inmates of the Executive Mansion of Georgia much perturbation, according to reports current here.

Gov. Smith is away all the time, engaged in a heated contest for re-election, and the mysterious ghost has been appearing to Mrs. Smith and her daughters.

The gray-garbed lady is said to be young and very beautiful. She was first seen by Miss Mary Brent Smith about three weeks ago, about 12 o'clock at night as the latter returned to the mansion. When Miss Smith entered the hall she noticed the gray figure before a long mirror. Miss Smith approached, but the figure melted away.

Miss Smith in alarm told her mother, but the latter ridiculed her daughter. A few nights later, as Mrs. Smith and her daughter were together, the gray-gowned woman appeared to both of them. Mrs. Smith and her daughter were so overcome they fainted. To a physician Mrs. Smith related the story of the vision. Since then it is said the ghostly woman has appeared frequently.

The negroes say the figure is the ghost of Miss Price, the niece of Governor A. D. Candler, who died in the mansion when her uncle was governor. It is said Miss Price was very happy in the mansion, and when dying said she would re-visit the place, where she was so happy while in this life.—Ex.

NUGGETS.

Tempus Fugit.

Let Tempus Fugit all it pleases,
We're wafted now by gentle breezes,
And sometimes we shall enter port,
And find our place of last resort.

The Open Door.

Christ's kingdom welcomes all the poor
Who enter through his open door,
While men of wealth in vain will try
To get there through the needle's eye.

Jealousy.

None in courtship are so zealous
As those inclining to be jealous,
Their ardor is increased by fear
That someone else will want their dear.

The Ouija Board.

A Highly Interesting Record of Experiments with It, Reported by Prof. James H. Hyslop, in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research, for June, 1908.

The following record largely explains itself. The reader will keep in mind that the experiments were with the Ouija board and were the result of personal curiosity mingled with the scientific. There was no special attempt to make them tests of the supernormal at first and only gradually did this demand grow upon the experimenters. It will be observed that the best of them were connected with the presence of entire strangers to Mrs. Quentin. The significance of this fact, in connection with the paucity of the supernormal and of secondary personality where its opportunities were great is commented upon in the notes at the end of the respective sittings. The other matter has a psychological interest as exhibiting the type of phenomena which we may expect in non-evidential inquiries. It is quite possible that, but for the questions pertaining to transcendental conditions of life and religious doctrines, the results might have exhibited much more of the supernormal. As it is, however, they manifest the usual conceptions associated with communications purporting to come from a spiritual world. What their value may be is left to the individual to determine according to his tastes. All that we require to say here is that they are not the work of intended deception on the part of the automatist. Any one is entitled to explain the non-evidential phenomena by fancy or imagination. There is no conclusive way to dispute that view, though time may come when psychology may have to give an account of hypotheses like this.

I do not mean to discredit such a theory, but only to indicate that it stands on the same level of all theories in such cases. It may seem to many that the alternative is between accepting them as the product of imagination and as the deliverances of spirits without qualification. But to the present writer neither alternative is compulsory. There is nothing opposed to the supposition that both factors might enter into the result, as well as abnormal mental conditions on the part of the communicator. There is no evidence in these records that such an hypothesis is true, but if other records suggest it we may inquire whether its application here might not remove some of the perplexities involved in the kind of messages which represent a supposed spiritual world.

Present: Mrs. Quentin, Mr. M., M. Quentin and Mr. F., Mrs. Quentin and Mr. M. working the glass.

Question—Who is here?

Answer—Mother. So long, so long.

Q.—You like to talk oftener?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—What have you been doing since last time?

Ans.—Work, thought, growth.

Q.—What is your work?

Ans.—Helping other souls, children sometimes.

Q.—What do you mean by thought?

Ans.—We develop by growth in thought.

Q.—How do you help children's souls?

Ans.—Infusing into their minds ideas of spiritual desires.

Q.—Where do we come from?

Ans.—You are all portion of the great spirit incarnated at the moment of beginning mortal life.

Q.—Is this great spirit incarnated in anything else except the human body?

Ans.—No, not the spirit, but life is.

Q.—What is the difference between life and spirit?

Ans.—The greatest difference.

Q.—Can you explain life?

Ans.—Li (glass jumped to word) life can be without spirit, spirit is mind.

Q.—Do animals have spirits?

Ans.—No.

Q.—Do animals live after death?

Ans.—No.

Q.—Are we the only ones that live after death?

Ans.—Yes, but in the process of evolution more may develop.

Q.—What do you mean by more?

Ans.—Ever living spirits.

Q.—Are there any spirits in the universe outside of this world?

Ans.—No, such a chain of coincidences brought life here as can never occur again.

Q.—Can you explain the chain of coincidences?

Ans.—Exact atmospheric conditions produced by cooling of the glacier ages, this is only one—the throwing off the moon by more rapid motion of earth is another.

Q.—Do you mean life is only a coincidence?

Ans.—Of favorable circumstances foreseen.

Q.—Do you mean the favorable circumstances were prearranged?

Ans.—Planned by the great mind.

Q.—What has the throwing off of the moon to do with life?

Ans.—Not with life but with atmospheric conditions favorable for its development.

Q.—Was the formation of human life the result of natural development or was it a miracle?

Ans.—There are no miracles; everything is the result of perfect laws.

Q.—Did Christ perform miracles or were they myths? (By Mr. M.)

Ans.—Boy, they were the perfect understanding of natural laws.

Q.—How did you know these things. You can't see the past.

Ans.—The past is present with us as well as the future. This is something you cannot understand.

Q.—Would you care to give us a test?

Ans.—If you must.

Q.—Can you tell us now what Mr. B. is doing? (9:41.)

Ans.—(9:43.) Reading in the library.

Q.—What is he reading?

Ans.—Could see his mind but it is not given me to perceive material things readily. Mind was on psychics.

Q.—Could you see anyone else?

Ans.—Did not perceive any other mentality. (The above is correct. Mr. B. was reading a book on psychics in library. Checked by telephone.)

Q.—You said it is not given to your mind to see material things; Can some spirits see them?

Ans.—Can read easily closed books, but the condition must be exactly right.

Q.—Can you read closed books?

Ans.—No.

Q.—How can we get the right conditions?

Ans.—Impossible. Coincidences of many powers.

(Was a question between Impossible and Coincidences which we did not record.

Q.—Can you make another test?

Ans.—Yes, but the conditions were exact for the last and may not for this.

Q.—Can you see the clock?

Ans.—Yes, through your minds.

Q.—Are you there?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—Who is this? Mother?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—Will you go and see what is in Mr. B.'s mind now and try and give us a full description of what he is thinking? (10:05.)

Ans.—(10:06¼.) This is in his mind: "I hope this will be successful. Can I impress my thought on Edith's mind?" Book of poems, I think, but am not quite sure.

Q.—What about the book of poems?

Ans.—He opened it.

Q.—How do you know it is a book of poems?

Ans.—In his mind.

Q.—Any particular poem in his mind?

Ans.—No. (Mr. C. was thinking of golf but was hoping that Edith would read his thoughts correctly.)

Q.—Who is in this room? (L. H. F.)

Ans.—Do you mean of this world of yours?

Q.—Who of your world?

Ans.—Only myself.

Q.—Who of our world?

Ans.—Three.

Q.—Can you name them?

Ans.—Yes, of course. Do you not understand they are all distinctly in your mind.

Q.—Can you see nothing but what is in our minds?

Ans.—Not the smallest thing.

Q.—Do you remember French?

Ans.—No, that has been tried many times but not successfully. (This seems to be an answer to the next question which we all had in our minds and had discussed.)

Q.—What have you to say about mediums who speak in languages they know nothing of?

Ans.—Low order of mind is more easily influenced, less complex.

Q.—Have you forgotten French?

Ans.—Not altogether, but as neither of you is proficient it would be very difficult for me to do it now.

Q.—What does Homologate mean?

Ans.—Man together. (Wrong.)

Q.—(Mental by L. B. F.) Why cannot I work the board?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—(Mental by L. B. F.) Can I work it with Mr. M.?

Ans.—Do not think so.

Q.—What don't you think? (By Mr. M.)

Ans.—Cannot convey the question from Lewis' mind to Edith's. (Lewis is a deceased cousin of Mrs. Q.)

Q.—Why not?

Ans.—There must be some things I cannot make you do.

Q.—Can't you tell us the question Lewis is asked? (By Mr. M.)

Ans.—No.

Q.—Do you know it?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—(Mental by Mr. M.) Who is sitting at the table writing? (Mrs. Q. and L. working the glass.)

Ans.—Not for a long time.

Q.—(Mental by Mr. M.) What time is it?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—What is Edith thinking of?

Ans.—Edith. (Correct.)

Q.—What is V. thinking of?

Ans.—Bobs. (Only indirectly.)

Q.—Is Sarah C. here?

Ans.—No.

Q.—Can you summon her?

Ans.—You can.

Q.—Will Sarah C. come here? Anybody here?

Ans.—Sarah says she has none of this power. She cannot perceive your minds.

Q.—Why can't she perceive our minds?

Ans.—Not sufficiently developed.

Q.—Ours or hers?

Ans.—Hers.

The first interesting incident is the communicator's denial of the persistence of animals after death. This is usually affirmed in alleged communications. But the communicator when living did not believe that animals survive, while Mrs. Q. is sympathetic with the view that they do survive. The use of the word "boy" was very characteristic as she always so addressed the sitter when she was living. The remainder of the record explains itself. The Lewis mentioned was deceased and was Mrs. Q.'s cousin.

March 21, 1906.

Present: Mrs. Quentin, E. Z. B. and Mr. Q., Mrs. Quentin working the glass.

Q.—Is Grandma here?

Ans.—What do you want?

Q.—Can you go to Niagara and find out what Bessie is doing?

Ans.—Try; hate tests. Time 8:30 p. m.)

Q.—Is my mother there? (By Mrs. Q.)

Ans.—Yes, dear child, I am near you always.

Q.—Why am I interested in scientific questions?

Ans.—Inherited tendency of mind. You know, I loved it and so does your father.

Q.—Can B. work glass?

Ans.—I do not know.

Q.—Is my mother in the spirit world? (By E. Z. B.)

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—Is she happy?

Ans.—Yes, yes. Much happier than you can know.

Q.—Can she speak to me directly? (By E. Z. B.)

Ans.—Very confused. She was confused in her head when she passed out and has not grown clear.

(Memory had very much failed for some time before death.)

Q.—Reading some lessons (it) think, Bessie. (Time 8:45 p. m.)

Q.—Is my father with you, mother? (By E. Z. G.)

Ans.—Yes, of course, just as we were in your life. E. Z., E. Z. You know I did not think just as much of the best things as your mother did.

Q.—Can you identify yourself to me?

Ans.—I did not want you to take up your present profession. (Correct.)

Q.—Can you give me another test?

Ans.—I see things differently now. I wish I had not been so determined that my way was the best.

(E. Z. B. says that if we had known his father we would know this as a characteristic answer.)

Q.—Do you ever visit the old farm?

Ans.—Often. I followed your mother about day after. I was with her when she passed over. (Pause.) Sat in my old chair by the sunny window.

(Used to sit in old chair often, but E. Z. B. does not remember sunny window.)

Q.—What are you doing now?

Ans.—I have my work but it would be hard to explain it to you. How you have changed. I can see you well as if through a veil.

Q.—How have I changed.

Ans.—Older, stouter, no mustache. (Mrs. Q. did not know E. Z. B. used to wear a mustache.)

Q.—Can you see the other children?

Ans.—Yes, one in spirit with us.

Q.—not that one, the other ones here?

Ans.—We see them all and watch them anxiously.

Q.—Are you troubled about any of them?

Ans.—Why does he not do it, but we are not as troubled as you because we see the end.

Q.—You answer, one in spirit. Where is the other one?

Ans.—I meant one in sympathy of course. We have the two here, sister.

Q.—Can you tell me anything about the end you speak about in the answer you gave before?

Ans.—We only get the influence of the final development of character which will go through deep places but which comes clear in the end. You know we cannot see the future but the influence projects itself.

(Last four correct, but perfectly unintelligible to any one but E. Z. B.)

Q.—Can you bring any message to me now from Mrs. B. as to what she may be doing or thinking now?

Ans.—Try. (Time 9:45 p. m.)

Q.—(Mental by E. Z. B.) Can I get any communication from A. B.?

Ans.—No.

Q.—(Mental by E. Z. B.) Do you mean that you will not talk to me?

Ans.—Long ago.

Q.—(Mental by E. Z. B.) Have you met my mother?

Ans.—Cannot tell, am hazy about it.

Q.—Who is talking?

Ans.—Abigail.

Q.—(Mental by E. Z. B.) Mother, can you tell me if A. B. forgives me?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—(Continuation of same question. Mental.) Please write the name.

Ans.—Before long.

Q.—(Mental by E. Z. B. Not recorded.)

Ans.—(Time 10:00 p. m.) Not Elizabeth is thinking of you and wishing you would come home—she said she was tired and going to bed.

Q.—Whom do you mean by Elizabeth?

Ans.—Name wrong; can't get it.

Q.—Why not. Who is talking?

Ans.—Father.

Q.—Do you know my wife's name?

Ans.—Mary.

Q.—Won't you try again?

Q.—Can't get it. Mar.

Q.—Can't mother help you get her name?

Ans.—Fanny.

Q.—Did mother suggest this to you?

Ans.—Can't get it.

Q.—Did mother suggest the name to you?

Ans.—No.

Q.—Ask mother to get the name for me.

Ans.—Ellen.

Q.—Can't you give me a test by writing this name?

Ans.—Am trying but can't get it, Jane.

(Note: Father did not know name well and mother not clear.)

Q.—Is my father here?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—Are you satisfied I have done right in not making any profession of religion?

Ans.—Your mother says she sees your mind clear as day and she knows you are well in every sense of the word; that is, mentally and morally.

The sitters present were entire strangers to Mrs. Q. and it will be remarked that the results were entirely evidential. All the facts stated through the Ouija board were declared by them to be correct. This was very reluctantly admitted by them, as they did not like to believe in the apparent interpretation of the phenomena. It is interesting to remark that the success was better than it usually was with her own intimate acquaintances. Where secondary personality had abundant opportunity to simulate well it failed, and when it could do nothing the supernormal appeared.

May 4, 1906.

Present: Mr. and Mrs. M., Mr. B., Mrs. Quentin working glass.

(No question asked, but thinking whom we should call up and were talking of Julia. "Julia" refers to Stead's "Letters of Julia.")

("G. P." are the initials of George Pelham, who was the chief communicator in Dr. Hodgson's Report on Mrs. Piper.)

Q.—What have you got to say to G. P.?

Ans.—Julia is all right and perfectly possible for Mrs. Q. to do likewise. Oh, if she only would, it is so much easier than this.

Q.—What is Julia's last name?

Ans.—Don't know; did not know her on earth.

Q.—How do you know her now?

Ans.—Not well. Our ways of knowing are very different from yours.

Q.—You say animals are not in your life and Bishop Wilberforce says they are; who is right?

Ans.—Let me explain; I said your animals die; they do; with us the desire for a thing creates it at once.

Q.—Is it any pleasure to you to know that your friends are thinking of you?

Ans.—Of course, that is what makes some unhappy, because they cannot get any communications from those they love. Oh, if the world is only ready, it will be such a great thing to do it easily.

Q.—How can you tell when the world is ready?

Ans.—None of us can tell; those things are all in God's foreplan of evolution; when the time is ripe it will come about.

Q.—Do you in your world cherish hard feelings against those who injured you in this life?

Ans.—Those things have to be overcome here as well as there.

Q.—Do you still cherish hard feelings against those who have injured you, but now repent?

Ans.—No, that is part of our heaven to forgive royally, perfectly. Is it not hell enough for anyone to perceive absolutely a sin and its consequences and heaven enough to feel the well done in the divine smile?

Q.—Do you ever get discouraged?

Ans.—Never, never, with our glorious end in view you know it rests with us absolutely whether we shall lose or kill it or whether we shall save it.

Q.—What do you mean by IT?

Ans.—Our own souls, read "your own souls in that first answer beginning never."

Q.—Would the encompassing love of the universe allow a soul to lose itself?

Ans.—Yes, alas, alas, after all is done some will not be saved; it is the immutable law of nature retrogression.

Q.—What becomes of the souls that are lost?

Ans.—Spiritual spark dies. I cannot explain this second death; it is beyond your ken.

Q.—Are you given plenty of opportunity?

Ans.—More than plenty, indifference at first is the beginning of the downward road, you who have the desire so strong in life to know and find the truth need have no fear.

Q.—How can we be happy if some are lost?

Ans.—When we have done our best and gone down into a veritable hell with a sin sick soul there is comfort in feeling all has been tried, you must not look for happiness except through effort.

Q.—What do you call hell?

Ans.—Hell is a condition.

Q.—Does it last forever?

Q.—The condition lasts of course shorter or longer for each individual soul.

Q.—Do the souls of dead Catholics need masses said, as per story, to keep them at rest?

Ans.—No, no, that was only projected materialization; that thing often happens.

Q.—Is Frances C.'s little Frances there?

Ans.—Yes.

Q.—Who is caring for her?

Ans.—Her grandmother.

Q.—What is her grandmother's name?

Ans.—Mary. The child is very lovely and very fond of the grandmother; she develops spiritually quickly.

Q.—Do you know her grandmother's last name?

Ans.—No.

Q.—Has she anything to say to her mother?

Ans.—Tell mamma not to fret. I am glad to be here; it looks so dark and cold down there.

Q.—Do souls lose hereafter by not having a longer material experience here?

Ans.—This depends on the individual soul; some are fitted for spiritual development at once, some are not.

Q.—Does a highly developed soul spiritually die more easily than others no so? (Refers to physical death.)

Ans.—Some souls are held tighter by their material envelope; the soul most in touch with its spiritual environment sheds its material most easily; don't misunderstand this; it is partly a physical process not a mental attribute.

Q.—Does this tire you?

Ans.—It exhausts the light after a time but does not tire in the sense you mean.

Q.—Summon Grandfather Oppenheimer.

Ans.—Who? (This not understood at first.)

Q.—W. H. Oppenheimer.

Ans.—W. H. O.

Q.—Any message? (By Mr. M.)

Ans.—Do not let the boys fool with pistols. (Good.)

Q.—Can you identify yourself to us?

Ans.—I am glad you buried my old wooden fingers. (Good.)

Q.—Give us another identification?

Ans.—Do you remember how Harriet used to make me get up to air

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.

A Remarkable Book.

This is a remarkable work by FATHER CHINIQUY. It exposes even to the minutest details the corruption that exists in the Church of Rome. It is a work of 832 pages, and should be read as a matter of history by every Spiritualist.

Price $2.25.

JIM, or The Touch of An Angel Mother.

BY CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Her dedicatory lines are sufficient to show the spirit of the book as well as the author, it reads, "Because my own children are all under the tender care of the angels, and my heart is hungry for the love of the young, I most lovingly dedicate this book to the children of the world." This book is full of soul elevating and interesting thought. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

COMMON SENSE By Thomas Paine. A Revolutionary pamphlet, addressed to the inhabitants of America in 1776, with explanatory notice by an English author. Paper, 15 cents.

A Conspiracy Against the Republic By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. Price, paper, 25 cents.

RADIANT ENERGY and Its Analysis, Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics, by Edgar L. Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California. This book treats upon a new branch of research into the laws of nature, and to the student or even an admirer of the modern astrological literature will surely come with great interest. Price, cloth, $1.75.

THE RELIGION OF CHEERFULNESS By Sara A. Hubbard.

This little booklet sets forth interestingly a religion which all may admire and experience with benefit to body and spirit. Very nice for a holiday present. Daintily printed and bound, in a case. Price 50 cents.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

DR. T. A. BLAND'S PUBLICATIONS.

In the World Celestial—With full page photograph of the Heroine Pearl, from a spirit painting.

"Three things that make this book remarkable: Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.

Cloth bound with gilt side stamp; price $1.00.

Pioneers of Progress.—"A broad-minded lover of his fellows. Dr. Bland delights in giving credit to those men and women who have said things or done things to help forward the welfare of mankind."—Chicago Post.

A Dialogue on Religion, Between Father John Jutz, a Jesuit Priest, and Dr. T. A. Bland.—This is a booklet of great interest, as it covers the entire ground of the difference between the creed of the Roman Catholic church and her daughters, the orthodox Protestant churches. Price 15 cents.

WOMAN: A Lecture Delivered to Ladies Only, By Mrs. Dr. Hulburt. On the present status of woman, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The divine law of true harmonial marriage, etc. Price, 10c.

Maxham's Melodies.

Arranged for Solos, Duets, Quartets, Also Six Poems.

This is a song book adapted to the popular spiritualistic taste, and is eminently fitted to do good service in the lecture hall or family circle. Price, 15 cents.

Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. Brance, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE NEW LIFE. By Leroy Berrier. An eminently suggestive work of excellent tendencies, treating of the mind's relations to the physical organism, and the power of thought in the upbuilding of health and character. Cloth, $1.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism A treatise on Human Culture. By Leroy Berrier, anthropologist and author. A very suggestive and instructive book. Price $1.00.

The Ouija Board.

my bed every morning, strip of carpet. I tell you I toed the line. (Good.)

Q.—Do you see the boys?

Ans.—Yes, in your mind. I am no good on theology or ethics; you must go to your mother for those things.

Q.—What are you good on?

Ans.—Just simple things.

Q.—Summon Mr. Robert B.

Ans.—R. B.

Q.—Can you give us some identification to-night?

Ans.—Gave the only one I could think of, that was a good one and ought to suffice.

Q.—Try and give us one more?

Ans.—So long; started Sam in business much against my will.

The notes in the record make this sitting intelligible without special comment, except the message, "Who." The intelligibility of this would have been clearer if it had been written at once as in the second effort. The communicator had always used his initials as making the relative pronoun and often played tricks with it. The names and incident were known to Mrs. Q., so that we can only mention their psychologically characteristic nature.

June 17, 1906.

Present: Mr. Y., Mr. M., Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Mrs. Quentin writing.

Q.—Who is here?

Ans.—I am here, as ever, dear children.

Q.—Summon G. P.

Ans.—All right, G. P.

Q.—Give us some quotation from this book and name page.

Ans.—"Heaven lies about us in our infancy," beyond the middle, about 200. (Not in that book.)

Q.—What book is that quotation in?

Ans.—Oxford. Look in the other. "Brides of Mavis Enderly Come Up Lightfoot, Come Up, Whitefoot." About the middle. (Quotation correct, but at end of book.)

Q.—Ask for Dr. B. (By J. W.)

Ans.—Well, my boy, what can I tell you?

Q.—Who is writing?

Ans.—M. B. (Not known.)

Q.—Who gave you the information you wrote me after I came to New York?

Ans.—Got it in a very roundabout way from two or three different people.

Q.—Give me the initial of one of them?

Ans.—S. M. (J. W. does not know if this is correct.)

Q.—Give me the last initial of the man named Grant?

Ans.—L. (Not correct.)

Q.—Give me the name of one.

Ans.—Samuel.

Q.—Can you remember the last name?

Ans.—No. John was not there. But I would rather not name them because it seems needless prejudice. The incident is past; why bring it to memory again?

Q.—Where is Harry P.?

Ans.—West. (Here J. W. broke in and said he was at West Point, and so spoiled the possible ending.

Q.—Summon my uncle and give us his name. (By L. W.)

Ans. William. (Not correct. It is thought that the grandfather's name was William.)

Q.—Who is this?

Ans.—Grandfather.

Ans.—John. (Correct.)

Q.—Identify yourself.

Ans.—Did not come to this country till well on in years. (J. W. does not know where he was born.)

Q.—Where were you born?

Ans.—England.

Q.—What part?

Ans.—Surrey.

Q.—What town.

Ans.—Can't give it. (J. W.'s grandfather was an Englishman but he does not know know where he was born.)

Q.—Have you anything to say to J. W.?

Ans.—Live straight as we all have done before you.

Q.—Get Uncle Harry. (By L. W.)

Ans.—Here.

Q.—Can you identify yourself?

Ans.—Do you remember the Christmas tree when you were a tiny girl, at your grandfather's? (Correct.)

Q.—Have you seen grandma? Tell me something about her.

Ans.—She is well now.

Q.—Tell me something for Aunt Louise.

Ans.—Do not fret. Time at the longest is short. We shall be together always.

Q.—Ask grandmother to identify herself. (By L. W.)

Ans.—Dear little girl, how I loved the children. (L. W. says this was just like her and correct.)

Q.—Who writes?

Ans.—Louise's grandmother. I do love your children and watch 'em constantly.

Q.—What is your name?

Ans.—Mary. (Not correct.) Do not remember coming to stay with us alone? (Not known who Mary is.)

Q.—Do not understand.

Ans.—When your mother was sick; when you were small; ask her.

Q.—Where is Carrie?

Ans.—With me. (She had a sister Carrie, L. W.'s aunt.)

Q.—Where is my sister Carrie? (By L. W.)

Ans.—I do not see her distinctly.

Q.—Ask my grandmother what she died of?

Ans.—Stomach. (The doctors disagreed.)

Q.—Get my Grandmother W. (By L. W.)

Ans.—Go ahead, my boy.

Q.—Identify yourself.

Ans.—Horses ran away. (He was very fond of horses but J. W. does not remember this incident.)

Q.—When?

Ans.—With your grandfather and me.

Q.—Where?

Ans.—Baltimore.

Q.—How old was I?

Ans.—Five. (Baltimore and age correct. Mrs. Q. knew nothing of them.)

Q.—Tell me more?

Ans.—I was interested in your school. (Correct.)

Q.—Tell me something I can remember?

Ans.—We went to games together.

Q.—Who is writing?

Ans.—Father. Your grandfather cannot recall life easily because of his illness.

Q.—Whose father?

Ans.—Maternal.

Q.—What is your name?

Ans.—Robert. (Correct. This was J. W.'s great grandfather on maternal side. Name not known by Mrs. Q.)

Q.—What is your daughter's name?

Ans.—Mary. (Incorrect.)

Q.—You have made many mistakes. Will you straighten them out?

Robert, your grandmother's father.

Q.—You wrote of incidents which occurred when you were dead; how do you account for that?

Ans.—I answered for your grandfather, who could not reply.

Q.—Summon Uncle Harry. (By L. W.)

Ans.—Here.

Q.—Who is my guardian angel?

Ans.—Her name is Lucia.

Q.—Who is Lucia?

Ans.—A spirit.

Q.—Where is Lucia?

Ans.—She inhabits your inner consciousness at times, and is ever near.

Q.—Who are you with?

Ans.—All those who have gone before.

Q.—Who is J. W.'s guardian angel?

Ans.—Noel.

Q.—Male or female?

Ans.—Male.

Who is Mr. L.'s?

Ans.—Elon-man.

Q.—Did he live long ago?

Ans.—I cannot go into those details; you must summon someone else.

Q.—Summon Ralph Johnson. (By J. W.)

Ans.—Ralph.

Q.—Identify yourself.

Ans.—Fraternity. (No meaning.)

Q.—What do you mean?

Ans.—My fraternity. I have it at heart. (J. W. does not know anything about this.)

Q.—How did you die?

Ans.—Accident. (Correct.)

Q.—What sort?

Ans.—Sudden. I hardly realized I was here. When I awoke I thought I was still alive.

Q.—Where was the accident?

Ans.—Train. (Ralph W. was drowned on La Bourgoyne.)

Q.—You were drowned at sea; why did you say train?

Ans.—Tried to convey means of transportation to medium.

Q.—Give me another identification.

Ans.—Tutored in Latin. (Correct.)

Q.—Have you anything to say to me?

Ans.—Do you remember our talks over our smokes? (J. W. does not think they ever smoked.)

Q.—Summon mother. (By Mr. M.) Tell us of guardian angels.

Ans.—You have been abusing your light this evening. You must not do this if you wish to continue. Your medium wants to get good results so earnestly that she strains for a point and defeats our object.

Q.—How has she been abusing her light?

Ans.—Trying for indefinite results from too many people. Things no mind was sure enough of itself.

Q.—Tell us more of guardian angels.

Ans.—I told you a great deal the last time we talked of them.

Q.—(Mr. L. asked.) Why has my feeling of my angel's influence diminished of late?

Ans.—You only think so. In reality you are more used to the voice and further away from the clearer light of childhood.

Q.—When conscience speaks, what is it? (By J. W.)

Ans.—That is the voice of your guardian, warning.

Q.—Did Mr. L.'s guardian angel live ages ago?

Ans.—As you count time, yes; with us time is not.

Q.—Who are my guardian angels? (By Mr. M.)

Ans.—I took the place of the one you were born with, by special permission.

Q.—What was the name of the one I was born with?

Ans.—Aloe— A lovely spirit so named because of her earthly experience—of this I must not tell you more.

Q.—Why have you never spoken of Alice to us. (By Mrs. Q.)

Ans.—I have been so anxious to use all the time for your enlightenment; there is so much to learn. Alice is a beautiful spirit—she was from the moment she was born—she was ripe for the spiritual atmosphere early.

(Mr. and Mrs. J. W. and all the facts relating to them contained herein were quite unknown to Mrs. Quentin.)

This experiment the reader will observe was a most excellent one. Mrs. Quentin knew absolutely nothing about the two persons who may be called the sitters. The notes in the record sufficiently explain the pertinance and correctness of the messages in many cases. The mention of the names of Guides has the usual characteristics about it. The names are enigmatical, and there is nothing whatever in the past reading or experiences of Mrs. Q. to give an easy explanation of it. If she had been familiar with the literature of Spiritualism, which she is not, having read little or nothing on it, we might understand this coincidence with the ideas of Spiritualistic literature in the past. But it is a curious feature of the phenomena that secondary personality should have to bear the responsibility of so common a characteristic the world over.

I repeat to the reader Mrs. Q.'s ignorance of the persons present and of the incidents appearing as messages through her. The success is again in marked contrast with her work when her own relatives are present and when secondary personality might be supposed to have been abundantly qualified for supplying the data for simulation of spirits. Just where the skeptic would expect her to show limitations she is successful in producing supernormal information and where she might simulate it in accordance with the skeptic's confidence in the wonderful powers of the subliminal she shows no special evidence of this at all.

May 31, 1906.

Present: Mrs. Quentin, Mr. B. and Mr. M.

(No question was asked but it was suggested that the glass might move by itself. It wrote,—)

Mother, if you did not do this our answer would be confused with the thoughts of your minds.

Q.—Can Mrs. B. give Mr. B. the message she was trying to give through Miss B. the other night?

Ans.—I do not think there was any; it was so confused. I think your father meant something else.

Q.—(By Mr. B.) Who is my guardian?

Ans.—Azeel. This is a very interesting subject because you all know these guardians as part of yourselves and know them so well.

Q.—Who is talking?

Ans.—Marietta.

Q.—How do we know them? (Referring to guardians.)

Ans.—I will let Matty answer that because she loves so to go into the depths of your minds and it is her province. (Pause.) They have been a part of our very being since the beginning. You think they are a part of yourselves, but in reality they are constantly talking to you through your sub-conscious minds, and influencing you for good. I have been striving ever since I left you to get your minds in these directions and I am only just succeeding.

Q.—Is it right for us to go to communion in the ——— church in view of our communications to us covering the divinity of Christ?

Ans.—The communion service is not of divine origin at all. It is only in memoriam of the greatest and most nearly divine man that ever lived. If you look upon it in this light it will remove your scruples and you can do as you please. I do not consider it an important point; it has become one of the forms and forms help some people.

Q.—What advice would you give us about church?

Ans.—You must uphold some organization. A churchless community would lapse into horrible immorality. Some minds must have it and you must do all in your power to help organization.

Q.—Should we leave the ——— church and form a new organization or stay in the church, unbelieving the doctrines?

Ans.—All religions are but sects of the great religion. If you undertook to form a new sect it might be pure in your lifetime, but would soon degenerate. Better do the best you can with what you have and sow the seeds of truths strong about you as you go, where Christ did not succeed you cannot hope to.

(It was here suggested to try the test of having the spirits tell us the contents of a closed box. V. M. took a magazine from the table and asked "Hatty" if she could not read, to send someone who could, as G. P.)

(In a short time the glass wrote: "SCHOOL."

Q.—Who is writing?

Ans.—G. P.

Q.—What page is "SCHOOL" on?

Ans.—Sixty-eight. This was correct.)

(V. M. took another box and said, "Give us a quotation on page 70 from book." Book was "A Woman's Hardy Garden.")

(Glass wrote: "Plant your borders first.")

Ans.—Ten "O." (Not on page 10 or 100.)

Q.—Quote from this book. (Foolish Dictionary.)

Ans.—Appendicitis, a modern pain costing about four hundred dollars more than an old-fashioned stomachache. Page 5 or 6.) Perfectly correct.)

Q.—Please try one more and quote from book M. B. was holding?

Ans.—"The Mettle of the Pasture"—Down the garden path in the evening dusk, she was beautiful. First page.

Q.—(Book right.) Quotation not on page one; try again?

Ans.—Idea only.

Q.—Please give us some quotations from some book in book case. Tell us book and shelf it is on.

Ans.—Sixth book from left, second shelf, "Blow thou winter wind." Page three hundred and sixty-five.

Q.—Which case?

Ans.—Third case from left. (Page 44 would have been correct. Book correct.)

(It was noted that the tests were not always right. In the last, the place of the book was right and the quotation, but not the page, the glass then wrote, MISTAKE, but I do not promise to succeed every time..)

Q.—G. P. was asked to quote from another book telling us place of book, page, etc.

(Book in position described was Dumas' "Count of Monte Christo;" we could not find the quotation on page 29.)

(Then the glass began to write without questions being asked.)

"Theology," "Nineteenth Century Questions," "Animals have souls," page 235, fourth shelf, about middle second case right.

(Following the directions given, we found "Nineteenth Century Questions," by Freeman Clark in the place described, but could not find "Animals Have Souls," and asked again what page.

Ans.—Middle of pen, put the book down and let it open.

Q.—This was tried and did not succeed, and we asked for further directions.

Little before middle of book. "Have Animals Souls?" on top of page. (Correct."

The notes in the record sufficiently explain the strength and weakness of this sitting. The experiments were those of clairvoyance and have their weight. How much Mrs. Q.'s memory of any special case from casual reading of the book may have affected the result will have to be left to individual judgment. To test her against objections of this kind, books that she never saw would have to be used. This was actually the case in some instances, and the errors in others rather favor such limitations for subconscious memory as would make many claims for its powers worthless.

SPIRITUALISM IN LOS ANGELES.

What the Friends of Honest Mediumship Are Doing.

According to Press reports, the California State Spiritualists' Association is having a hot fight with the faker element, headed by the so-called Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Association, which wants to incorporate and then be allowed to ordain mediums—a plan which would give them a free hand to extend the operations of fakerism. Mr. Robert T. Hale sends the following which will be of interest in this connection.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, Cal:

Gentlemen: At the regular monthmeeting of the Executive Board of the California State Spiritualists' Association your recent action in reference to the amendment to the license ordinance, was discussed, and as Secretary of the Association I was directed to write you a letter of commendation for your action in laying the proposed amendment on the table, also amendment offered by the Assistant District Attorney. We are also in hearty accord with the stand taken in the matter by Mr. Robert T. Hale. The ordinance governing fakers of our religious rights cannot be made too strong to suit us. We, as the recognized legal head of organized Spiritualism in the State of California have been working quietly along these same lines for some time and have accomplished a great deal in the way af educating the people at large as to where we stand on the question of protecting the world at large against the many frauds who cloak their nefarious work with the name of Spiritualism. To show you something of what we require of our workers, I quote the following extract from Article IX, Section 1, of our Constitution:

"Ordination. The Board of Directors shall have the exclusive power to ordain teachers and healers upon whom shall be conferred all the rights and privileges, under the laws, enjoyed by the clergy of all religious denominations.

Sec. 2 Applicants must be known as workers and members in good standing for at least one year, of a regularly chartered society, and be recommended for endorsement by the society to which they belong. Upon such application being made, the Executive Board of the Association shall designate a time and place where the said applicant shall appear for examination either before the Executive Board of this Association, or before a commission appointed by said Board. The basis of necessary qualifications shall be, proofs of good character for a period of five years prior to application. A standard of education sufficiently high to insure a creditable presentation of the phase of work for which the applicant seeks to qualify. A written agreement signed by applicant that he or she will advertise only in his or her own name, as a Spiritual Medium" or "Spiritual Lecturer or Teacher."

Section 4. Certificates of Ordination must be surrendered upon the demand of the Board of Directors, and will be forfeited if the holder is proven to be guilty of conduct unbecoming a minister after ordination by this Association.

Ordination certificates are issued only to persons who have held endorsement certificate from this Association for one year and have proven themselves worthy of ordination.

We trust your honorable body will fully realize that we are in sympathy with every move you make which tends to purify our ranks as well as others. We recognize in Mr. Robert T. Hale a powerful worker for the good of mankind, and as such we will work in perfect harmony.

We beg to be able to file with your office blank copies of our endorsement and ordination certificates. Also a complete list of names of persons in the County holding such papers.

By order of the Board of Directors of the California State Spiritualists' Association.

CULTIVATE THE BEAUTIFUL.

Hands That Help Are Greater Than Lips That Pray.

Hands that help are greater than lips that pray. There isn't an hour in the day that I do not repeat that thought. The only true expression of words is to live them. The true prayer, "a soul desire," is to see that desire lived. The only religion, the pure, unselfish life devoted to the upliftment and betterment of mankind. We, of all others, teaching as we do the broad philosophy of Spiritualism, knowing and understanding the weakness of humanity, the influence of circumstances, environments and prenatal affairs, knowing that within the soul of every brother there lurks that spark of divinity that makes us all a part of that great unbounded, limitless force we call God, should at all times recognize above all things that good, instead of dwelling at such length upon the weakness of our kinsmen—for are we not all akin? And we know full well we can only eliminate weakness by strengthening strength, or the good.

We have a beautiful garden, and as I look over it I am not blind to the weeds. I see the tares and thistles, but I also see the flowers of beauty and fragrance, and we can only rid our garden of the tares by cultivating the beauty; all nature teaches us this grand lesson.

Are we cultivating the beautiful? Are we lifting souls to the summit of spiritual unfoldment when we constantly hold the thought that they are degenerates and unfit to be called our kinsmen? We are only trying to rid our ranks of our weeds by cultivation.

When you and I give thoughts that are detrimental to our soul's expression, as well as the souls of others, we are cultivating a new life to the undesirable, and we through those thoughts are responsible for holding them where they are. Oh! Workers, we teach that thought is everything, are we living it? Are we as earnest workers for the grandest cause, and the greatest truth, making our lives a living example of what it really can accomplish? If it teaches us anything, whereby we are to profit by its lessons, it certainly brings the one message: Judge no one. "Am I my brother's keeper?" Can I afford in my weakness to sit in judgment of others? Am I certain that my private garden is free of all tares, and that all the weeds I see exist in my brother's garden?

Oh! friends, I do believe if we would only spend more time in cleansing our own minds, we could see more clearly the gems in others.

Those who understand anything of Spiritualism know its mission is to broaden the intellect and free us body and soul. It stands like a beacon light on the utmost heights of spiritual unfoldment, inviting all to bask in the light of truth and drink at the founts freely, and in doing so we unburden our souls, lay aside the manacles that have held us slaves to fear and vengeance, and robing ourselves in the truth and simplicity of childhood, that makes us see only that in our fellow-man which we can love and trust. When we can make this thought a chainless thought we have revolutionized the world; then indeed will a little child lead us; then in truth will all humanity see the glories of nature divine, and clasped in her strong arms realize the New Birth, and know for a certainty, Hands that help are far greater than lips that pray.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $3.

SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1908.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Fierce Anger of the Lord.

"Wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy."—Zephaniah 3:8.

Has The Progressive Thinker a single reader so grossly creed-bound as to believe the prophet Zephaniah was relating a truth when he thus described the Lord? "The whole earth to be devoured by the fire of his jealousy." And all who reject such brutal, senseless, demoniac teaching the church brands as infidels. Any disgraceful appellation is many times preferable to that of being designated as the worshiper of such a "Lord." "Oh, you misunderstood the text," says the pulpit-pounder. "The 'fire of jealousy' is a figure of speech, and does not mean what the words express."

Church chronologists give B. C. 609 as the period when the prophet wrote. Then for more than 2500 years his productions have been in the hands of his friends. They have been copied and translated many times. Each copyist and translator of course labored to give the exact meaning of the prophet, and still the meanest passion that dishonors humanity is ascribed to God, and the book recording it is idolized by the church as the inerrant "Word of God." Out upon such teaching. We'll have none of it in ours.

As to the anger part: "It resteth in the bosom of fools."—Eccl. 7:9.

Self-Impeached.

Writes a friend and patron, from Portland, Maine:

"In the Chapel of the great Catholic Cathedral of this city is a figure of the crucified one hanging on a cross. It is not a puny thing to escape criticism, but life-size, with blood running out of his RIGHT side. That is where the cruel Roman soldier is represented to have speared him. Directly opposite this ghastly image, where multitudes come and sigh over a slain God, is another life-sized statue of the same God, representing his descent from the cross, where the Mater Dolorosa holds across her knee the dead figure of her Divine Son. From out a gaping wound on the LEFT side, where the spear was supposed to have been thrust, flows a current of blood."

No one seems to note the absurdity of this ridiculous contradiction; but it is characteristic of nearly everything told of Jesus in the New Testament.

An Oriental Objection to the Bible.

It is said, were there no other objection in the East to the Bible than the fact that it usually goes to them bound in leather, that of itself would be cause for its rejection, because a a life has been taken to acquire that leather.

Should those same people read the book they would be still more horrified to learn that the Christian's Lord God, Gen. 3:21, made coats of skins for Mr. Adam and wife. There was no one else than Lord God, the Garden of Eden visitor to slaughter the animals from which he acquired those skins. Is it not therefore inferable that he opened the first butcher shop in Eden to supply that demand?

Loaded Down With Barnacles

Fifty years ago there was found in all well-informed clergymen's libraries, in several volumes, "Notes on the New Testament," from the scholarly pen of Rev. Albert Barnes. He wrote for the ministry, furnished facts for their sermons, and doubtless his publications can still be found in many a Christian library, matter true when he wrote and will remain such for all time. The following quotations, so completely in harmony with our own views we cannot refrain from publishing:

"It is not to be assumed by the Christian or the infidel that we have in fact, in our creeds and in our interpretation of the Bible, precisely the system which was revealed. That we have the true record in the Bible we are to believe, and the infidel may hold us to that; but that we have the proper interpretation of that record is not to be assumed as certain. Christianity has been transmitted to us from a far-distant age. It has come in contact with all the philosophical systems in the world. Its outward form has been much moulded by philosophy—much by its alliance with the state. The synods and councils that have determined the creeds of the church, have been, like other assemblies, composed of imperfect men—often of men more under the influence of philosophy than religion; often ignorant of the plainest rules of exegesis; and often seeking rather to establish a hierarchy than to promote the kingdom of Christ. As a matter of fact, we know that during that long period there is no absurdity of doctrine or interpretation which has not been embraced by the church; almost no error which has not been sanctioned by synods and councils; almost no truth the belief of which has not exposed him who held it to persecution by the church itself.

"Christianity has thus come down to us through the descent of eighteen centuries, collecting in its progress whatever of good or bad there might be that could in any way be made to adhere to it; adopting as its own the opinions in mental philosophy and the doctrines of science, true or false, which have prevailed in the world, and uniting all in its symbols of faith—taking the church at large, a vast and monstrous conglomeration of original sacred truth, and of the errors and absurdities which the world has accumulated in the lapse of ages. It is a ship, not now just sailing out of port, fresh and new, and clean, but one that has sailed afar, and HAS COLLECTED IN DISTANT SEAS, WHATEVER OF BARNACLES AND SEA-WEED THAT COULD BE MADE TO ADHERE TO IT. THOSE BARNACLES AND THAT SEA-WEED MUST BE DETACHED FROM IT IF THE SHIP IS TO BE MADE TO TRAVERSE SAFELY DISTANT SEAS AGAIN."

It is to the barnacles, the sea-weeds and the gross accumulations The Progressive Thinker has been directing attention, and urging their removal. Failing the ship will flounder.

Falsehoods to Foster Truth.

As the evidence is almost incontestible that Paul lived and wrote sixty-four years before the period ascribed to the birth of Jesus, there are other questions incidental thereto which demand attention. Among these is that of his Gospel. Several times in Paul's Epistles he mentions "My Gospel." Eusebius, in his Ecclesiastical History, Book 3, chapter 4, says:

"Paul usually referred to his Gospel, whenever, in his Epistles he spoke of some particular Gospel of his own, saying, 'according to my gospel.'"

It has long been the opinion of scholars that Matthew, Mark and Luke used an older gospel from which they made heavy drafts. Critics have thought it probable Matthew wrote a former gospel in Hebrew, and that this was the common fountain; but if Paul lived and wrote a gospel sixty-four years before our era, and discussed as flippantly about his Jesus, whom he saw in a vision as he was nearing Damascus, even discoursing about the "Lord's Supper," but never mentioning Jesus of Nazareth, then is there not something worth thinking about, in connection with the late gospels?

Why under heaven all the innumerable forgeries, and the multitude of gospels everywhere discordant, no two agreeing in statement? Do honest methods require innumerable forgeries and falsehoods to bolster the truth, and make its contradictory statements stronger. Think of it, honest reader, who has no creed to be fostered.

The Church Rejoices.

Billy Sunday, the baseball evangelist, is still pounding away making saints. He was last heard from at Sharon, Pa., where he got so excited—wouldn't crazy be a betterword?—during his closing appeal to the sinners to come to the aid of the church that "he pounded the improvised pulpit into strips, then plucked off a piece of board and wielded it like a baseball bat to drive his exhortations against the heads of sinful listeners. It was a remarkable exhibition of spiritual batting."

The church gladly welcomes any novelty in its service which will bring "souls" into the "fold of Jesus."

Books In India.

In India the printed book is regarded as vulgar if not irreverent, and no devout Hindoo would allow his sacred writings to be contaminated by contact with leather prepared from the hide of some animal's dead body. A leather-bound copy of the Bible is for him a remarkable illustration of Christian irreverence.—Churchman.

An Infallible Christian Test.

Jesus gave one infallible test for determining who are Christians, and it ought to be implicitly observed in testing candidates for the ministry. Mark 16:18 represents Jesus as saying, after his resurrection, but before going up:

"If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them."

Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, Book 3, chapter 39, says:

"Another wonderful event happened respecting Justus, surnamed Barsabus, who, though he drank a deadly poison, experienced nothing injurious through the grace of the Lord."

Now there is a test, easily applied, and infallible in its action. In every church there should be kept a solution of one grain of strychnine. Administer a full dose of that "deadly thing," and if the candidate does not go up, it will be safe to close a contract with him.

Discouraged Preachers.

The editor of The Standard, a Baptist organ of this city, is reported to have said he was told by a friend not long ago that "nine-tenths of all the preachers in his circle of acquaintances are discouraged, practically hopeless of accomplishing anything worth while for the advance of Christianity; that they are restless, discontented, and heartily wish they had never entered the ministry."

If that statement is truthful, and we believe it is, what must be the feelings of the educated ministry as the eye is cast over Christendom, and sees Billy Sundays occupying the evangelistic field, with their vulgar balderdash, and doing the principal work for the upbuildinf of the faith. It would seem but a step when the Holy Jumpers will come to the front as the worthiest of Christian defenders.

A Methodist Banker Horse Thief.

A telegram a few days ago from Indianapolis, Ind., said the grand jury had just found indictments against Robert H. Green, a Waynetown banker-horse thief, on the charge of stealing a score of fine horses and selling them. This action was taken at Green's own request, that he might appear in court immediately and plead guilty. He wishes to have his punishment begin and have it over with as soon as possible.

The banker-horse thief is vice-president of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Waynetown, and is a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Faith in Jesus saves the offender from guilt. Soon he will be shouting "Glory to God," and the clergy will tumble over each other in their zeal to see which can do the most to gain the thief's liberation.

Another Heretic.

Rev. Robert Hammond Cotton, an Episcopal clergyman, who adopts the heretical views of Rev. Crapsey, of Rochester, N. Y., has been denied a license to preach by Bishop Edsall, of Minnesota.

Rev. Cotten is a scholar, 67 years of age, and for 40 years served his church satisfactorily. As a gentleman of common sense, he repudiated the claim that Jesus was virgin born, and, probably, that he was dream-begotten. He also denied his material resurrection, if he was really dead.

If all clergymen would express their honest views on the same subjects, the pulpits where the men of brains minister, would soon be empty. Immaculate conception is too silly a tale in this twentieth century to be told even to the marines.

Returns to the Older Faith.

Rev. Samuel Freuder, a converted Jew, of New York, has tired of preaching what he does not believe, and has returned to the fold of his fathers. In a late address to a Jewish audience in Boston, Rev. Freuder said:

"If I ever preach in any Christian pulpit again may my right hand forget its cunning and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

To a reporter he declared:

"I would rather push a cart through the streets than go into a pulpit and preach Christianity."

If the clergy generally would rest for a time in the study of theology, and direct their researches into an inquiry for the truthful origin of the Christian faith, there would be a terrible sloughing off in the pulpit pounders.

What Constitutes Success?

A Mrs. Stanly, tempted by a $250 prize offered by a Boston firm for the best answer to the question: "What constitutes success?" gained the handsome reward by writing:

"He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty, or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration; whose memory is a benediction."

The world is continually growing better to all who are honestly trying to make it better.—Everett McNeil.

What Is Death?

A Beautiful Portrayal Thereof, by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C., as Seen by Her Guides in Spirit Life.

A hot and stifling atmosphere; a room barren of appointments and conditions such as make for the bodily comforts and the gratification of esthetic tastes; a few pieces of worn and plainest furniture, a low bed which bore the emaciated form of a poor woman whose lot on earth had been a hard one, the slave of toil, of drudgery; one who had lost health, courage and hope in the struggle for bread for herself and little ones. The world has many such; we do not have to draw on the imagination for a scene of this description. Deserted by her husband, forlorn and unhappy, in a great city, one child on the spirit shore, two still on earth, she is now in the last moments of her sojourn in the pallid physical frame. The dispensary doctor has made his last call and has told the neighborly women whose sympathy have drawn them to this upper room in rough but kindly attendance on the dying one, that he could do no more in the case, and that as soon as death ensues they are to send for the city undertaker who will attend to the body. The awed and crying children are in charge of the officers of a children's home, and the last act in a life of tragic sacrifice is about to end.

The poor woman has suffered to the depths; her crowning bitterness came in the moment, but a few days since, when the physician told her in sympathetic tones that her hours were numbered and that her little ones had better be sent to the "Home," as his influence could secure them a place therein. She was grateful, though loth to let them go, so dear were they to her heart; yet she knew they would be better off in the public home than left to the mercy of the street. She had made a good fight for them, had toiled early and late to keep them free from public charity and with herself—three years and five—such tiny things to lose a mother's care, but it had to be, and she knew it was best for them to go ere the breath had left her panting form.

What is Death? Who could answer her simple question? Reaching out into the unknown, she gasped as one who has a sudden chill. For days she had struggled. She had no wish to go. She knew nothing of the hereafter. Here two babies called her here. She wanted to stay, so she drifted on in silent struggle, paying no heed to the women in the room who thought that she did not know they were at hand. Ah! but she did know all that was going on. With quickened vibrations, with acute sense she was beginning to know many things that had been mysterious to her before. Fighting inwardly the great battle with self, she began to see more clearly why her life had been so hard, why sorrow had been her portion, why disease had laid its hand upon her form, why Death had come to claim her now.

In the gathering shadows that softly fell over mortal sense, came sweetly stealing a roseate hue, as beautiful as that of a summer dawn. Through the sound of the low murmurs of the neighbors' voices, swept the gentle cadences of song; melody floated everywhere. She had loved music and had never been filled with it. Street organs and rude instruments in the hands of indifferent performers had sometimes given her pleasure and sometimes pain—but THIS—THIS was music. ECSTASY.

So the hours of the night had sped, and now it is just before the dawn of a heated August day. A little breeze sprang up an hour ago and feebly entered the window; the women were grateful for its fetid breath. She did not notice its advance; but now, to her soul, all is beautiful; to her there are no walls to the room, no dingy sights around her. Her eyes, half closed, are beginning to take note of other things. The roseate hue is there, the soft and shining mist of a higher morn is around her; she feels its penetrating cool and fragrance; the sound of music is in her ears, the glory of the Inevitable is bathing her every sense in light.

The battle is fought. She has an inner feeling that soul has won, that death is after all but soul changing its base of operations and source of supply. This is her intuitive knowledge. She has had no schooling to speak of, only a few years in childhood, ere parents went the Great Way. Her educational advantages were of the humblest kind. She was not a reasoner nor a sage, only Love and Intuition now are telling her what death really is.

The music rolls on as the minutes pass; now sweetest of human voices are mingling in the strains; the glorious light deepens into finer beauty; there is nothing like it on land or sea of this earth. She is deeply conscious still of mortal affairs. She knows the women are waiting for the end; that her children are not by her side. The mother love is strong, she inwardly longs for those tiny ones, but not now with bitterness, with a calm serenity, a soft, sweet clinging to them in spirit, a gentle desire to be with them always with tenderness and blessing as a shield and guide. And the moments are passing; she can think so quickly; the thoughts of an ordinary day can be now spent in a few moments. And this is Death!

The splendor of the rising sun finds little reflection in this tenement room, but the glory of the Eternal Dawn is there, and now it is beginning to shine in the face of the dying; even the neighbors notice it, and nod to each other that the end has come.

She heeds them not, though she is grateful to them for their kindly vigil, and in all their days to come she will endeavor to aid and bless them, but now, the walls having given away and all things are bathed in the roseate light and fragrance; she is discerning a transformation scene. Gradually she beholds another apartment, a long room in which are many tiny cots and she herself seems to be drifting to one of them. All at once she sees that on it is her youngest child, her baby girl, fast asleep. How she hovers over it; now she is crooning a lullaby song and smiles, then baby opens her eyes, looks upward and holds up her arms to mother. She feels herself drawn to the next tiny cot; yes, Sadie is there, too, the little care-taker of baby Sue. Over this one she bends and whispers loving words and Sadie smiles in her sleep. The mother gazes long at the treasures of her heart; all the while the music and celestial singing goes on; all the while the roseate hue pulsates and throbs around her and she is steeped in fragrance. And this is Death!

She has no more consciousness of the narrow room, the neighbors' offices; she pays no heed to the undertaker's call and his work. She is with her children now; she sees them awake and knows when they are dressed. She stays by them through the day; they are now in a bath, then at the table of good but simple food, again at tiny desks where their study is like play, and she dimly remembers what she has heard of kindergarten schools. By and by, they are in a shaded yard and at happy play. Sadie is looking after little sister, and baby has lisped to her that mamma came in the morning time. They have not cried for mamma to-day and the caretakers are relieved, but the influence of mother love is with them and felt by their plastic souls, and that is why they do not mourn.

She is in the beauty realm of color, light, fragrance, music and love; she has felt no need, no hunger, no thirst, no weariness; she is happy to be where her treasures are. And this is Death!

She lingers with them; days pass—they have no weariness for her. She learns that her children are cared for better than she could look after them in the olden times. She hears that the children in this particular home are kept till they reach the ages of ten and twelve and that good homes in private families are found for them, where they are guaranteed school advantages and industrial training; she hopes her darlings may find a home together, but she will not fret about that now for intuitively she feels that she can minister unto them, that she can follow them wherever they may go, that she can be a force of light and sweetness and love between them even though they should be parted on this mortal plane.

So the days sped. The earthly form had been consigned to the dust of "Potter's Field." She neither knew or cared. Her few household possessions had been taken by the landlord for rent. She had no concern about it; she was with her darlings where her soul had longed to be. Now she knew that all is well, and satisfied that she could not lose her own, her thought began to wander to other things. Somehow she knew that "Death" had claimed her, but there was nothing in this experience to give her pain or fright. So far, everything had been beautiful, but what lay beyond? She is beginning now to wonder, to question, to want to know; and the light around her is changing to a delicate, glistening shade of pearl; she is floating away, but is not dismayed, for she sees a slender twofold golden cord—lengthening as she glides, but never breaking, threads linking her to her girlies and she feels that it will bring her back to them. So she speeds, and the pearly light grows more beautiful; her sight becoming adjusted to its vibrations, she perceives that she has company, a lovely woman of about middle age, a man who seems embodied strength and manly comeliness, and a beautiful boy about ten years of age. They are shining angels, and she does not question them. They are apparently leading the way and her only will is to be led. After awhile they are in what seems to be a grove, but the trees are not thickly set. Dwellings are here and there, and stretches of beautiful flowers. This is a world such as she has never seen, too lovely to be described. The atmosphere is soft but radiant; the light is delicate yet of glorious tint, the music is enchanting, its every cadence seems to echo—"HOME."

She enters one of the snowy dwellings. It is furnished simply, yet with what to her is elegance—perfume, light, color and refinement everywhere. She feels that she has come to her own heritage. She knows she is ignorant of many things; that there is much to be learned, that she must study, reach out, grow; she feels this, but she also feels that she is capable of growth and study. Now, she is stirred by an inward power which causes her to turn with more perceptive glance to those who had led her thither; gazing at them with her own Soul perception she realizes now their identity—the lovely woman is her own sainted mother; the sire she had never known to deny her childish desires in the far-off days, and that beautiful boy—oh! who IS HE? Again she gazes, and then she knows—knows beyond question, her own bright and darling boy, her first born who had died in the babyhood of his mortal life. HERE, THEN, IS HOME, LOVE, IMMORTAL LIFE, HER OWN PEOPLE! AND THIS IS DEATH!

The Fraud Must Go!

A Plain Statement of the Situation at Portland, Oregon.

To the Editor: For several years past when our good brother, Harrison D. Barrett has spoken in behalf of clean Spiritualism and declared the fraud must go, many mediums and Spiritualists have raised the cry that Harrison D. Barrett is trying to put a stop to mediumship.

Can it be that these mediums are tinctured with fraud and for that reason cannot bear the thought of legistion against fraudulent practices?

I have listened to Brother Barrett in three conventions of the N. S. A. I listened to him in his lectures through two camp meetings at New Era, Oregon. I have heard his lectures before the First Spiritual Society in Portland. I have heard him in Mrs. Lucy A. Mallory's parlors. I listened to him before the committee on "Health and Police" in the common council of the city of Portland, Oregon. I have listened to him in private conversation. I have read his various articles in your valuable paper, and in all of them when he had occasion to speak of mediumship he has declared himself against the fraud and faker, and in sympathy with genuine proofs of spirit manifestations, and honest mediums.

To-day in our far western city of Portland, Oregon, he is advocating the passing, by the city council, of what is known as the Cottell ordinance, that is almost the same as Chicago now enforces against the fraud and trickster. The fine is higher in the Portland ordinance, and the second offense calls for sentence to the rock pile, and some of the mediums of Portland are falsely accusing him of fighting for this ordinance so that he can put all mediums of Portland out of business. The president and vice-president of the State Spiritualists' Association are against him, and the new ordinance that licenses both the honest medium and fraud alike, while he is fighting to stop the fraud in his nefarious work of fleecing the innocent.

The fraud wears costly clothing and diamonds; the honest medium is almost a county charge, and barely able to live.

"Birds of a feather flock together." Is it not also true "that each class fights for its own kind."

You can readily see the tangle that has wound itself around the Spiritualists of Portland, Oregon.

The First Spiritual Society, the Ministers' and Mediums' Protective Association, Mrs. Congdon, an ordained minister of Spiritualism, your correspondent as missionary-at-large, standing firmly by Harrison D. Barrett in this fight against the fraud, while the state president and vice-president are against us. There are many others in the cause of truth and honesty I might mention, who are giving Brother Barrett their support in this trying hour. Should any one write to your valuable paper that Harrison D. Barrett is against honest mediums, just tell them for me the statement is untrue.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the N. S. A., has been fully informed of the situation, and is lending encouragement to Brother Barrett in his effort to send the fraud and faker from our grand city near the sea, or to the rock pile where they properly belong. These wonder-workers who locate mines for you, but utterly fail to locate one for themselves; who find for you a lost treasure instead of putting it in their own pockets, which they would do if they could find one; these frauds who go prying into the moral character of young men and women so they can tell you whether your sweetheart is true or not, when some of them have characters as black as midnight itself, these "seventh sons of seventh sons" who work under assumed names, will find the climate of Portland, Oregon, not quite to their liking when the Cottell ordinance is in effect, and they will either move on to the "next" or hit the rock pile, where honest work will be done on our country roads, even though that may be the first honest work done in all their lives.

Once more I declare unto you, I don't know why mediums will cry out against Harrison D. Barrett when he declares for honest mediumship and against the fraud.

ALL HAIL TO HARRISON D. BARRETT. THE FRAUD MUST GO!

Help a Worthy Worker

Perhaps many of the friends of our noble and worthy lecturer are not aware that Mrs. Hinsdale is a widow who has to be self-supporting, and I feel that many who know her would gladly and willingly aid her in her distress. In a letter to me she says:

"The recent floods have swept my place clear, fences, flowers and chickens all. Beside feed for cow and chickens, and provisions and clothing ruined, being in the mud and water—only a few things saved out of the wreck, and my house badly damaged. Just to think of it, five long hours on a frail plank, and it held by a barbed wire in a raging, roaring current in which neither boat, horse nor human being could reach me, a cold wind blowing and I shivering."

All who wish to assist Mrs. Hinsdale can write and remit any amount they donate to her address, Fort Worth, Texas, R. R. 5, box 141. I am sure any donation will be highly appreciated by her.

PALADINO AGAIN MYSTIFIES SCIENCE.

Wonderful Spiritualistic Manifestations Made Before Professors.

Naples, Italy.—Eusapia Paladino, the well-known Neapolitan medium, who was rather a failure when she appeared before the Psychical Research Society in London a few years ago, has just subjected herself to a series of experiments held under the auspices of the University of Naples and participated in by Professors Bottazzi and Galeotti and other well-known scientists. Eusapia is an ignorant woman, and is known to have received no education whatever. Nevertheless, while in a trance she is able to converse in several modern languages, and writes in each of them in a script that is like copperplate.

At the University of Naples the professors deliberately set traps for her, placing objects with which she could bring about effects within reach of her hand and fixing electric lights close by, so as to throw instant illumination upon them if she attempted to make use of them. A dish containing clay to receive possible moldings or marks was placed at a considerable distance from the medium, and her hands were carefully controlled by two persons, when she suddenly stretched out the three middle fingers of one hand, and, rubbing the under part of her fingers on the table in front of her, said:

"How hard it is! What is it?"

As there was nothing on the table she was asked to what she referred, and she replied:

"It is the hard clay. I wish it taken away. I do not need it."

When the professors came to examine the distant dish of clay it was found to have the marks of three fingers upon it, of which the movements corresponded exactly to those which had been made by the medium on the table, and it appeared as though she were able in some way to transmit the sensations of her own hands to a distance.

In one of the experiments the wrists of Eusapia were tied to two iron rings fixed in the floor; the cords that held her were knotted and sealed, and yet under these conditions a bottle of water was carried about, and a seat and large human hands were seen to appear. Prof. Galeotti declares that, while he was holding Eusapia by the hands, he distinctly saw a double figure in her place, with identical arms, which, however, were held in different positions.

Professor Bottazzi, the leader of the experiments, once touched the fingers of Eusapia and an electric light, the tap of which had been fixed inside her cabinet, but out of her reach, was lighted four or five times, and as many times extinguished. Professor Bottazzi also had a large and apparently natural human hand laid upon his neck, his head and his arm. Each time he was able to touch it, and when on his arm, to see it by suddenly turning on the electric lights, when it was not dragged away, but faded out of sight and touch as he held it.

In these and other similar experiments the scientific men present are agreed that fraud was practically impossible. They all, however, exclude any supernatural or spiritual explanation, and can only suggest that Eusapia Paladino's manifestations are biological phenomena, dependent on the organism of the medium, who at will can double or increase the range of her psychical personality, and even her physiological personality.—Special cablegram to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Externalization of the Fluid Body.

Experiments Made by M. Henri Christian and Others.

Translation from L'annee Occultiste et Psychiques, French, Edited by M. Pierre Piobb. Translated Especially for The Progressive Thinker, by Mrs. A. Monthon Tattersfield.

Some stange experiments have been attempted during the winter, 1907. They have been stated in the "Echo from the Marvelous" of July 15, under the title of Outings in the Astral. This is how they really took place:

Persons of no established mediumistic capacity, that is, people who, up to that time, never had given themselves up to any spiritual practices whatever, but of a serious intellectual culture and sound judgment, have been able to leave their bodies, externalizing their ego, and without restraint, to go at random to other places, and then after this promenade have again reinstated their bodies without any apparent fatigue or inconvenience. These experiments have been repeated several times, and each time have given results.

We are then in the presence of a phenomenon scientifically established.

M. Henri Christian, who is a literary man, relates thus his first attempts, which surpassed all expectations(?): "In the month of October, 1906, M. Pierre Piobb in the course of conversation was telling me of an attempt that he had lately made "to walk out in his astral body," that is, externalization and transfer to a distance of his perceptive faculties, when I expressed the wish also to try a few experiments. He gave me the necessary advice, and besides, in order to verify the facts observed during my astral's change of place, it was agreed that I should come to his house in the XVIIIth district on a fixed day and hour.

The first experiment took place on Friday, October 12.

1. These experiments have taken place at the instigation, and under the control of the author of "L'Annee Occultiste."

2. Communication especially written for "L'Annee Occultiste."

I was visiting friends, M. and Mme. M——, in the "quarter de l'Observatoire." At 9 o'clock, time fixed for the experiment, I tried in their presence to externalize myself. I was seated in front of a table, leaning my elbows on the same, with the palms of my hands pressed against my closed eyes. During the whole time that the experiment lasted, about ten minutes, my friends kept scrupulously the most profound silence. As soon as the experiment was over I wrote down the results in a note book "ad hoc," whose content I commuunicated to them as follows:

"Leaving M. M——'s house at 9 o'clock in the evening I experience a great difficulty in mounting the staircase in M. Piobb's house. I enter my friend's study by passing through the reception room, and notice the following: There is only one lamp lit, which is placed on the desk of Mme. Piobb, who is sitting near, working on something which I cannot distinguish. Piobb is moving about the room in the penumbra, and just as I am entering he is standing with his back to the fire place. Soon after he changes place. I stay a very short time." I only stayed a very short time, because "to be outside myself" seemed very disagreeable, even painful. This sensation, which is very common at the beginning of this kind of experiment, I experienced very distinctly.

"The facts that I have related have been proved to be perfectly correct. M. and Mme. Piobb had particularly taken notice of their actions and movements from nine o'clock to half-past nine. The arrangement of the room and how they were occupied agreed perfectly with what I had seen and written down from nine o'clock to ten minutes past nine."

A second experiment was attempted by me on Oct. 17, at 6:30 in the morning. I copy from my note-book: "Shortly after coming home, laid on my bed, I go to Piobb's. I notice on the road the following: The streets this time look differently from the time of my nocturned visit. Arrived at M. Piobb, whom I never had visited in the day time; I notice the same difficulty in mounting in the stairs as previously; the lighting of the steps was very feeble as yet, coming from the windows. Arrived at the door, I try to ring and to knock violently at the panel; the operation does not seem to have any results. I do not notice any noise. Besides, so far I have not had the sensation of hearing. I notice a very long, narrow loaf, with the middle wrapped in tissue paper, leaning against the door. I pass through the door into the passage which causes me a certain effort. The passage is dark. At this moment I experience a feeling of fear. I am afraid that my friend, awaked by my imagined knocks, may attempt by some magic ceremony of defense, to hurt me, and after a short walk round the reception room, where I notice that the light comes through the windows, I go away, passing through M. Piobb's study, which is dark."

The verifiable facts, those especially relating to the head, were acknowledged strictly accurate. A note from M. Piobb, put in my memorandum book, with regard to the results written down by me immediately after the experiment says:

"The loaf was really to the left with the tissue paper wrapped in the middle." As to the darkness in the passage, the passage has no window." With regard to the reception room; the blinds were not drawn. The curtains are not yet fixed. On the contrary, in the study the curtains were drawn, not allowing any light to penetrate.

"I should add that I could not have any notion from memory, nor to imagine the manner in which the stair-case and reception-room were lit up; neither could I know anything about the loaf, its form, position, etc.

"Finally I would say that my sensations in the course of my externalization were very different from facts of memory.

"Thus the streets that I passed through between my starting point and M. Piobb's house had not the same appearance as they have in my memory—the appearance they present at the hours when I am familiar with them—but quite a particular look—in a kind of commercial way. On the other hand I experienced a sensation of floating at the height of a few metres, that I never do when, in memory, passing a road that I have gone before. I pass much less quickly from one point to another in the astral than I do in memory.

"My recollection of a street, a place, etc., is synthetic; my vision in the astral is analytic, even when it is wanting in clearness and precision.

"Then in memory I can always go through and see again the places that I know; but I cannot always, far from it, externalize myself, and experience particular sensations of change of place and vision that I do in this case. Mme. B—— has only tried one experiment—which she relates as follows:

"One evening this winter, however very slightly convinced to succeed, I tried to go out in the astral according to the manner indicated by M. Piobb.

"At dark, about 5 o'clock, I was reclining on the sofa in my apartments in the third district, where reigned the greatest calm.

"With my will power strained to the utmost pitch, I went to one of my friends who lives in America, a journey that I often make, and which is very familiar to me.

"At the end of a few minutes of immobility I lost consciousness of the place where I was and saw myself standing in the middle of the room, and in a hurried, feverish manner putting on cloak, hat and gloves. After reaching the staircase, down which I was sliding—not walking step by step—I found myself in the street, lifted from the ground, pushed along with rapidity like by a violent wind; I went on and on, rather bent forward, getting ahead of hurrying people. Hypnotized by the aim to reach my destination, I arrived at the railway station, took the train, got off, and if I really accomplished this, I followed a street, and was soon at my friend's house. I went through all the rooms of the flat, which I found in great disorder. She had just been removing. I saw her standing with upturned sleeves in front of a linen closet, arranging linen on the shelves above. I went home, got up, walked to and fro to come to myself, deeply impressed with what had just happened. I was extremely tired, and like stunned. I looked at the clock. My journey had hardly lasted twenty minutes. The following day I went to my friend and asked her what she was doing the day before in the evening, between 5 o'clock and 5:30. 'Yesterday,' she said, 'yes, I was arranging my linen closet,' which I most certainly had seen."

M. Henri Christian, really a surprising subject, does not restrict himself to such attempts which we have quoted here. The experiments pursued, having for aim only the study of the human faculties of a being thus externalized. The results were very different, but the impressions of the experimentalist were always similar to those that he has described.

These experiments lead to several questions that he takes upon himself to solve one after another.

Question—Does real externalization take place?

Answer—Yes; all experimentalists have experienced the feeling to be liberated from their bodies, to be lighter and still retain consciousness.

Q.—Is not this externalization a phenomenon of dreaming?

A.—No, because facts seen in the state of externalization are controllable.

Q.—Is it not a phenomenon of memory?

A.—No, because facts seen are new and present.

Q.—Is it not a phenomenon of imagination?

A.—No, there is a feeling of reality of what one perceives; nevertheless all the experimentalists being acquainted with the working of their imagination to which they are in the habit of having frequent recourse, have been able to recognize that seen facts approach slightly facts of imagination, with this close difference, that facts of imagination are not controllable, while facts seen in the state of externalization are mostly controllable.

Q.—Could not the phenomenon of externalization be telegraphy or vision at a distance?

A.—Everything depends upon what is understood by these words, telepathy and vision at a distance; phenomenon of a far away perception, externalization giving these results, can be ranged amongst these facts. However it seems more logical to say that telepathy is the fact of having a sense of the same impressions as another being, more or less distant, received at the same moment; and vision at a distance is the fact of perceiving, without changing one's place, what happens at a distance. But while being externalized one does not have any more impressions than in the normal state; one does not vibrate in unison with a beloved being (that is what constitutes the telepathic fact), and there is a sensation of changing place, traveling through streets, as in the normal state, and to perceive successively the visual sensations, as in the way of reality.

Q.—What becomes of the body during externalization?

A.—To those present at the experiment the body of the externalized seems to be in a calm, death-like sleep, similar to the sleep of old people; however there is nothing to betray externalization. Any how, on this point physiological proofs have not been pushed very far. A scheme for physiological studies about the body, when in a state of externalization, has just been worked out, and ought to be undertaken at once. It will be interesting to compare the weight of a person when in the normal state, with that of the state of externalization; to feel his pulse, take his temperature, and experiment with his sensibility, etc. For the one that operates, the body is of no account; he has no feeling. An experiment tried in a rheumatic crisis has shown that the experimentalist in a state of externalization, has no sense of physical pain. Has he the same requirements? Experiments as to this point have not yet been undertaken. Strange thing, but the body has no feeling and nothing concerns or interests it. M. Christian has been able to walk around his own body. He seemed to have before him any kind of anatomical piece, a body that did not belong to him. This would tend to prove that the Ego is outside the physical domain, and without connection with the body. Moreover, the greatest lightness, as experienced by the experimentalists, matches equally the sensation of the greatest liberty; the physical body should then be an inconvenience, an obstacle.

Q.—Is, then, perception brighter in a state of externalization?

A.—No, it seems identical with that of the normal state; nevertheless it is keen. The faculties of the soul work without trouble; one perceives, judges, reasons, deliberates, wishes—indeed, all the senses of psychological facts are accomplished the same as in a normal state, but no better.

Q.—Which are the ordinary senses that the astral does not possess?

A.—One can neither hear nor smell, and has no sensation of feeling. Taste has not yet been experienced. The only sensation one has is the visual one. But is this a sensation? Is it not rather a perception? One sees, that is certain, with ease, color and dimension, but the color is considerably weakened, like one who should wear smoke colored glasses. Then, in reality one sometimes feels rather than "sees" a person occupying a place. Thus M. Henri Christian perceived one of his friends laid on the couch without really seeing him.

In this order of ideas experiments ought to be pushed very far, for they would clearly define the line between perception and sensation.

Q.—How does the change of place seem to work?

A.—The externalized body has the sensation of leaving his body by every part of the latter; in fact to go out of every pore. Once outside, he does not touch the ground; he soars at a certain height.

He can never travel very high.

M. Henri Christian, after having soared, in the course of several experiments, at the height of the first floor of the houses, could without difficulty rise above the roofs. To begin with, in the feeling of change of places there is a sense of succession of visual perception similar to when one is traveling very fast; no resistance is experienced. Afterwards there is an easy gliding sensation.

In the beginning the operator is astonished not to feel the beating of the wind in his face, as is usual when one is running. Solid, compact objects are not embarrassing; door-panels, partitions and walls are gone through; but this passage through solids makes one experience a curious sensation; it seems like one should be divided in an infinity of molecules, and gliding between each one of the molecules of the solids; it is a very distinct difference, this passage through solids, and the passage through the air; while the passage through the air operates in one single piece, without division of the being, the one through solids seems to operate by infinitisimal fractions. What does this sensation mean? One does not know. All the experimentalists being persons of culture, none of them ignorant of the molecular theories of matter, it would be to incriminate this sensation to say that it is tainted with the "already known," or "already experienced." The change of place seems to be accomplished without the effort of the will. It suffices to think: "I wish to go there; to travel at once to the place desired." Change of place is executed so rapidly that the operator going at this quick speed, and not understanding how to moderate it, can easily lose his way; this happened one night to M. H. Christian. To get an idea of the swiftness of execution, it might be compared to an automobile or a bicycle driven very fast. Then it is sufficient only to think on which side of the road one wishes to go in order to instinctively turn the steering wheel to make the instrument turn at one's pleasure and desire. Finally the reinstatement of the body takes place in a manner identical to the going out. Very little fatigue is experienced. But the experiments, so far, have not exceeded half an hour.

Q.—Besides change of place, what outside phenomenon can the externalized produce?

A.—None! So far a leaf of a cigarette paper, put up on the table by means of a plait in the middle, could not be turned over by the breath, nor by the touch. Equally bells could not be set in motion.

Q.—What are the thoughts that haunt the operators?

A.—The thoughts during externalization are nothing special. There seems only to be a fear with the experimentalists not to be able to reinstate the body, and then to be obliged to remain in this state; this fear, without doubt, comes from lectures and conversations, telling how very dangerous such experiments are. Mme. B., who had least read or heard people on this subject, experienced less fear than the others.

Q.—Can the experiments be undertaken under any conditions whatever?

A.—It does not seem that the operator need to be especially gifted to externalize himself; nevertheless several persons have tried without succeeding; besides, they were persons in a state of constant nervous agitation, and contrary to what one might have supposed, they were less qualified. For all that, it would be interesting to find out under which physiological or psychological conditions an individual is capable to externalize. Climatic conditions—heat, cold or dampness—do not seem to have any influence, neither barometrical pressure. Anyhow, on these points experiments ought to be very strictly tested.

Astrological conditions have been very much better studied. It seems that the Arabian system of the planetary hours plays a certain role. It is said that in this system each hour of the week is attributed to a planet; these hours count at the rate of twelve diurnals and twelve nocturnals for each day, but to be reckoned from the rising to the setting of the sun; they are then unequal and changeable. But the scheme of birth of a subject being given, it is noticed that at the time fixed by the planet corresponding to the house VI of the said scheme or Home, the operator could externalize himself, but could not go beyond the limits of his habitation; that at the hour fixed by the planet corresponding to House VI. (house connecting the fluid body with the physical body, the operator tried in vain to externalize himself; while at the hour fixed by the planet corresponding to the house IX. (house of change of place), externalization operates quite naturally.

Q.—To what extent do these planetary hours influence the individual; in other words, what role does the "cosmic moment" play in the phenomenon of externalization?

A.—There is a question as yet very little studied, which ought to be followed up closely, for it is interesting in the first principle.

Whatever these experiences may be, in spite of all imperfections that they could have presented, and though they are hardly begun, these experiments are of great importance from a psychic point of view.

In brief, they consist in attempts of separation of the Ego from the body, and the hypothesis should then be that the Ego has the faculty to leave his physical body and move about, covered only by the fluid or astral body. Photographs taken by means of vibro-radiant plates, would anyhow, prove if the hypothesis is true. Externalization takes place on the physical plane; no experimentalist has ever seen ghosts from the astral plane.

This would prove that the individual can externalize on any plane.

It is to be wished that the operators do not stop there but that they continue their experiments and that their number increase.

DEAFNESS

Successfully Treated

By the Simplest Methods Yet Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of the cases of deafness brought to our attention are the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed relief is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of specialists to always effect a cure. Neither can ear drums cure deafness. But there is a scientific treatment for deafness and catarrh which is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the vibration of sound. Actina is also very successful in relieving ringing noises in the head. We have known people afflicted with this distressing trouble for years to be entirely relieved by a few week's use. Actina has always been very successful in the treatment of hay fever, asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds, headache and other troubles that are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina will be sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. Our advice will be free as well as a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease. BELIEF IN FUTURE EXISTENCE.

Written for a Literary Society of Lake Byron, Beadle County, S. D.—In 1894; the Writer Passed to Spirit Life June 4, 1908.

Most people have experiences that they fail to comprehend at the time; afterwards they are often able to attach to them a spiritual significance. Every person who believes in immortality has reached the belief by a trend or drift of thought peculiar to his own organization. The process of investigation that convinces one, not necessarily convinces another. That we all have an existence, after the death of the mortal body, has always been taught, and quite generally believed.

The advent of Modern Spiritualism has had a tendency to dispel doubts, and to intensify the belief of immortal life. Some are led to it through the study of botany. To such, beautiful flowers seem to exalt and lift the mind, from the so-called material to the spiritual.

I knew of a man who was led to believe in the reality of a future existnce by delving into Entomology, or that part of zoology that treats of insects. Another came to the same conclusion by trying to comprehend the law of shadows. In fact, there is not in the great laboratory of nature—in the innumerable variety of subjects that exist, there is no branch, or part but what when investigated, leads some minds to a belief in a future existence.

The study of phrenology did more for me towards establishing that belief than all the sermons I ever listened to, and more than all the knowledge I could gain from reading the Bible. (While I am aware that there is so much to consider in connection with phrenology in character reading, as to make it not altogether reliable.)

From my earliest recollection I was skeptical, naturally so. Whilst it may be difficult for some to see how phrenology connects with the idea of immortality, it is perhaps as difficult for me to see how botany, astronomy, or zoology forms a connection therewith.

To quite an extent the belief (in my opinion) is intuitional. As before stated, the best hold or grip that enabled me to start on the road leading to my present plane of thought, was an investigation of the science of phrenology, I will briefly state how phrenology (as I look at it) harmonizes with spiritualistic ideas. In doing this I am mindful of the fact that nothing is out of harmony with spiritualistic ideas, and whilst I attempt to illustrate the application of phrenology to such ideas, I sincerely hope that others of this harmonious circle will exemplify the same idea from their own individual points; for it is an old adage that all roads lead to Rome; that is, all things in nature lead to Spiritualism. I wish, however, to preface my remarks with this brief statement:

Before taking up phrenology I had occasionally experienced impressions that took a deep hold upon me. I will will not go into details, but there were times when I would become almost oblivious to my surroundings, and the atmosphere would seem musical—not the music of any particular tune—but a soft, plaintive, harmonious music that my gift of language is totally inadequate to express. This proved to be a good preparation for the reception of spiritualistic ideas. I often wish those moments of almost complete ecstasy could come to me now—but perhaps I do not need them now as I did then, for I was then an infidel to nearly everything I could not see and touch, whilst now I know that all comes from that which is invisible to mortal eyes.

In the summer of 1836, when I was fifteen years old, a pamphlet upon the subject of phrenology fell into my hands. It was from the pen of a Mrs. Miles. She dwelt chiefly upon the natural language of the different organs of the brain. But strange to say, Mrs. Miles failed to carry out and illustrate the very idea that the reading of her publication had suggested to me. I think the application I will make did not occur to her mind at all. I will name a few organs that we possess in common with the brutes.

Alimentiveness—appetite for food. Inhabitiveness—attachment to home. Adhesiveness—friendship. Combativeness—courage. Cautiousness—fear, carefulness. This is enough to show what I wish to show. We need all these organs—we could not get along without them—they are in every human organization, stronger or weaker—they are excessive with some—deficient with others—entirely lacking in none. We are not born with all these wants, and no means provided by nature for the gratification of them. Nature makes no such mistakes We may indeed be placed where we cannot get food. We may be homeless or without friends, but nature affords all these, and nearly everyone secures them; thus it is plain that the functions, or outreachings of every organ of the brain, has within the realm of nature the means for gratifying or satisfying that want. This is true of all the organs. I have only mentioned a few, and they belong exclusively to the material plane.

Now I will call your attention to veneration. Hope, spirituality, sublimity, ideality, conscientiousness, etc; all situated and located together. What are the wants of this spiritual group? Are they not forcing each one of us to ask: What am I here for? and what is to become of me?

The means for the gratification of this group are not to be found on the material plane. They are throwing out feelers beyond this mortal life. If there is nothing for us beyond this life, would such wants ever have found lodgment in our brains? If means are provided for the gratification of one set of organs, and not for another, it would be a complete infraction of nature's law.

I have used the word nature instead of God, because I prefer it. I do not claim to have presented anything new. Perhaps the same idea might be reached by a different road, in a manner that would give better general satisfaction. I am a thorough believer in the return of spirits as exemplified in manifestations since 1848, when the raps through the Fox family attracted such marked attention. I write this to show that many people were fast getting ready for the advent of what is called modern Spiritualism, many years before 1848.

ALFRED W. BIRDSALL.

Report of the Golden Rule Society.

The last three meetings of the Golden Rule Society were well attended On May 17 the speaker was Mr. Harry Burgess, who gave an interesting lecture, and the best word we can give for Mr. Burgess is, that each time he is with us the better he is liked and and the bettter his lectures are appreciated. His explanaion of the lives of the Indians and their modes of religious worship makes one feel that he would like to know more of our red brothers. Messages were given by Mrs. Adie Clybourn.

On May 24, Mrs. J. L. Fravel of Austin, gave us one of her beautiful inspirational lectures, which was highly appreciated by her many hearers. Messages were given by Mrs. Edith Harper and Mrs. Nora E. Hill, which are always good.

On Sunday, May 31, the closing Sunday, the speaker, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, holding it as a memorial, the services were beautiful. The hall was decorated with the American flag, and red, white and blue bunting. The service was impressive. Mrs. Edith Harper read from articles and Mrs. Hill read from flowers. All were recognized.

The Golden Rule Society has closed the meeting until the first Sunday in September. Notice will be given in due time. The officers wish to thank everyone who helped to make the society a success for the last year.

The Society gave a reception and circle combined, Monday evening, June 8, in honor of Mr. George A. Letford, the "Drummer Medium." All had a good time and he gave many messages, and we hope some time in the future to have his genial presence with us again. With a hearty wish to all workers in the field and a God speed, we close for the present.

CORRESPONDENT.

"Immortality, Its Naturalness, Its Possibilities and Proofs.'" By J. M. Peebles, M. A., M. D., Ph. D., Contains the address rejected by the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, with Introduction and Explanatory Letter. Price, 15 cents.

"Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death." By Frederic W. H. Myers, edited and abridged by his son, Leopold Hamilton Myers. This is an invaluable work on the subject of Spiritualism. Price $3.00.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Rev. Sophia B. Seip, president O. S. S. Association, lecturer and platform test medium, desires a change. She will answer calls in any state, or at camps for a short or long period. Address her at No. 302 Alisky building, Portland, Ore.

The sixth grand picnic will be given by the Spiritualists' Society Light and Truth, assisted by the singing society, "Eintracht," on Sunday, June 28, 1908, at Hoerdt's grove, 2 E. Belmont avenue, Chicago, Ill. Bowling, footraces and all kinds of amusements for young and old. Western, Clybourn and Belmont avenue cars run direct to the grove. Everybody welcome. Tickets, 25 cents a person.

We are reluctantly compelled to condense reports of secretaries, and omit numerous resolutions of State conventions. Too much space is required for their publication in full.

Mrs. Dean wishes her friends to know that she has changed her residence to 426 West Ohio street.

J. C. F. Grumbine and Swami Matook from Bombay, India, expect to visit Lily Dale, Lake Brady and Chesterfield Camps, from July 25 to August 15. They are engaged at Lake Brady. Associations wishing a drawing card will do well to correspond with Mr. Grumbine at Brookline, Mass.

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes "At Universal Occult Society, 77 East 31st st., our large audience received spiritual truths from the lips of the speaker, Dr. Burgess. His subject was 'Woman,' and we should all feel proud to belong to an organization whose president has such a high regard for woman. The lecture was followed by spirit messages by Mrs Weaver and Mrs. Thompson of the west side, Mrs. Seybold, Dr. J. M. Temple, Mrs. Hillis, Dr. Burgess, and your correspondent. All were satisfactory. Music by Mrs. Adler, accompanied by a young man on the violin.

W. H. Mitchell writes from Topeka, Kans.: "I am pleased to read your articles in defense of pure mediumship and Spiritualism, and denunciatory of the spurious and fraudulent. Every genuine Spiritualist, who has the welfare of the grand philosophy at heart, owes you a debt of lasting gratitude."

Kate Heussmann-Harveston wishes to express her special thanks to her friends at San Diego, Cal., for their kind and helpful thoughts, which proved a great blessing in time of need. After nursing her husband to better health, she herself became very ill. Her present address is 1627 Grove street, Oakland, Cal.

Eugene Hendricks of St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Mrs. E. B. Price, of 110 Courtois St., celebrated her fifty-eighth anniversary on June 11, and she was very much surprised by her society, when they handed her a handsome silk dress, and a beautiful bouquet of roses. The home was packed with her many friends, each bringing a present as a token of love for her. The evening was spent in singing, and Mrs. Price was taken by one of her controls, who recited a very beautiful poem about the flowers and the givers. The supper was grand and the table was filled with the finest of fruits and cakes, and everyone seemed so well pleased that they all wished her many more such happy birthdays."

Laurie V. Reed writes: "Rev. Mary C. Ward of Cleveland, ministered to the people of Harveysburgh, O., in a very acceptable manner recently. On Tuesday evening she gave a very able address on the "Power of Thought;" and on Wednesday evening a powerful discourse on "Immortality a Demonstrated Fact." She also gave many tests of spirit return."

The Nineteenth Annual session of the Ashley, Ohio, Camp will commence August 9 and close August 30. For particulars and Programs address Will Randolph, Secretary, Ashley, Ohio.

Pierre L. O. A. Keeler writes as follows to Mrs. Mary T. Longley: "Referring to the Carrington report to the American Society for Psychical Research, I think my best answer can be made in three words, quoting those of Mr. Harrison D. Barrett: "Verify the facts." I shall continue to be at my several posts of work, and some of the thousands of persons who have had slate-writing with me during the past twenty-eight years, and the thousands who have not, will have opportunity to visit me and have sittings, and thus see for themselves whether or not Mr. Carrington reported my mediumship correctly." Mrs. Longley writes as follows to this office: "The foregoing note from the well-known slate-writing medium of Washington, D. C., speaks for itself. I have his permission to send it to The Progressive Thinker. Having personally known of a large number of intelligent and reputable people who have had satisfactory slate written spirit messages from Mr. Keeler under absolutely test conditions, I addressed him, relative to his attitude on the recent "Carrington report," and received this answer in response."

Mrs. C. S. writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The Church of Divine Light held its regular service Sunday evening, June 14, at Hart's hall, Gates avenue and Broadway. Although the weather was very warm, there was a goodly number present. The lecture delivered through our pastor, Rev. Emma C. Resch, was enjoyed by all, and each one present received light along the lines of Christian Spiritualism. A solo was most ably rendered by Mr. P. J. Loeb, who is ever ready to assist in the work for God, humanity and truth. A number of messages were given by the pastor to the strangers, and each one was readily recognized. The service closed with the singing of the doxology, accompanied by Mr. Loeb on the cello, and the pronouncing of the benediction by the pastor. On Sunday evening we will hold the closing service of the season, at which time Miss Resch will take a much needed rest. Services to be resumed early in September. The Progressive Thinker is for sale at all services."

A. W. Clayton, secretary Psychic Research Society, Victoria, B. C., writes: "Rev. Mary A. Stein, pastor of The Earnest Workers' Spiritual Society, of Detroit, Mich., has been lecturing under the auspices of the Psychic Research Society of this city for the past week. Every available seat in the hall was occupied, and even standing room being at a premium, which fact testifies in a measure how the eloquent addresses of Mrs. Stein are appreciated on the Pacific Coast. A very pretty feature of the service on Sunday evening, June 7, was a flower christening of a number of children by Mrs. Stein, and many parents took advantage of the occasion by bringing the little ones to participate in the beautiful ceremony. Mrs. Stein left for Detroit via Seattle and Spokane, on June 8."

J. H. McDonald, of Minneapolis, one of the most enthusiastic and earnest Spiritualists on deck at the present time, was a caller at The Progressive Thinker office, Friday, June 19, and was happy as a school-boy. He came down to meet and escort to his home, his daughter and litte baby grandchild. Mr. McDonald is as young in spirit as ever. He seems blessed with good health, too.

Mrs. Sarah C. Scovell writes from Galena, Kansas: "I have received a number calls for field and camp work, but cannot tell when, if ever, I shall take up the work again. The business of my mother's estate will hold be here."

Mrs. Dr. Caird, recording secretary, writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club held a very interesting meeting at its hall, 70 E. Adams street, Tuesday, June 9. Arrangements were made for the picnic to take place July 4 at Lake Bluff. All are invited. Bring your lunch. For one day, leave the noisy, dusty city behind, and enjoy the cool breezes of Lake Michigan. Coffee will be served free. Take the electric car from Evanston. Fare 40 cents for round trip. The next tea party will take place Tuesday, June 23. Good mediums will assist. Mrs. Dr. Caird will serve. Don't forget the date and place, Lincoln hall, 70 E. Adams street."

Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes: "On Tuesday afternoon and evening, June 21, the members and friends of the Band of Harmony met at the home of our pastor, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, the occasion being the "Summer Social." A large number were present, and every countenance was radiant with joy as we listened to the inspiring words that fell from our pastor's lips. Mr. and Mrs. Alexanderson, two of our members, are soon to depart for Sweden, there to spread the "soul teachings," and were bidden Godspeed on their journey. An interesting letter was read by the secretary from our former vice-president, Mrs. Goodrich. At six o'clock a bounteous collation was spread, and enjoyed by all; then a happy hour was spent on the lawn of this beautiful home, where the song-birds and squirrels find a welcome in the leafy branches of the trees. Progressive euchre in the evening was enjoyed by those desiring to play. At ten o'clock we said good-night. There will be no social the week of the 4th. Time and place of our next meetings will be found in a later edition of this paper, in the column of General Survey."

The Fort Wayne, Ind., Ministerial Association and the Fort Wayne Medical Society are to have a joint meeting Tuesday evening, June 30. Dr. H. V. Sweringen has been selected by the president of the medical society to read a paper representing the medical profession, and the Rev. Dr. Frank Fox, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church, has been selected to read a paper for the ministers. Dr. Sweringen's subject will be "Psychic Research" as related to medicine and theology.

Mrs. Belle L. Curtis writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club will hold a Rummage Sale on Wednesday and Thursday, June 24 and 25, at 709 Grand avenue. All friends of the Cause are requested to donate: If you have anything you do not want, send or bring it to the store early Wednesday morning, or drop a postal to Mrs. B. L. Curtis, 615 Otto street. Take any westbound car and transfer to Robey street, and walk one-half block west, or the Grand avenue car will take you to the door."

N. S. A. Convention at Indianapolis, Ind.

It is somewhat premature to announce the convention of the N. S. A. to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 20 to 24, 1908, but it is early receiving so much attention, and so many are interested that it is best to state the exact date, as above.

The convention will begin on Tuesday morning, and conclude not later than midnight of the following Saturday. Many who are now arranging to attend, and as delegates desire the facts of the coming important assembly, will appreciate this advance notice, if my corresspondence warrants such a conclusion.

The early interest in the annual convention is certainly an indication of a grand one to be held this year.

Announcements will be made soon; and these suppled to all who may desire. The addition of a Monday night reception, and the following Sunday mass-meetings, will increase the desire of many to attend.

Letter from Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, President of the State Spiritualist Association of Texas.

To the Editor: For a year now I have been entirely dependent on my own efforts for a living, and I had been raising chickens and flowers for a living. The flood swept all away, even up-rooting flowers in the yard. I was injured worse than was at first thought, and I have not entirely recovered from the shock, for I am still too weak to be up all day.

But let me say this: I have had rheumatism in my left hand for years, and it has been a long time since I have been able to hold even a cup of coffee in that hand, yet it was my left hand which held on to a wisp of the horse's mane for really more than two hundred feet, the horse all the way falling into deep holes, and rearing and plunging, while I with that weak left hand clung to a piece of his mane not larger than a man's finger.

A stronger force than mine held me; of that I am assured, and any one who knew the condition of my hand and arm would not doubt it. The horse would plunge me under the water, and twice when I strangled, I felt myself losing conciousness, but he would toss me into the air, and I could breathe again.

I have not been able to answer the many kind letters of inquiry, for I have been confined to bed most of the time, and this is almost the first letter I have written since the accident.

Spiritualism in Texas seems to be at a standstill. At no place in the state, except Houston, have lectures and services been held for a number of months past.

I have done very little work as president of the State Association for the past year; for personally the year has been my Gethsemane, and I have not been able to give my mind and heart to the work.

Since the flood the Spiritualists of Fort Worth have shown me every kindness, and have given benefit circles for me. Indeed I cannot tell what I would have done, but for the promptness with which they relieved my urgent need.

One can scarcely imagine the complete destruction of my place. Parts of my furniture fell apart, the glue dissolving in the water, and all of it was more or less injured. Even clothing was ruined, for the water which flooded my whole house, was thick with a fine slime that ruined all it touched. I am slowly getting stronger, and hope to yet do some good work for Spiritualism and humanity.

With my best wishes for you and yours, and for the greatest educator, the grandest paper, doing the most helpful work of any in the world, The Progressive Thinker, I send earnest hope for continued growth and success.

She Talked With the Spirits.

Our dear mother, after an illness of nearly eight months, has passed to spirit life. She was not a Spiritualist, but in the past ten years I have had charge of her she learned much of our beautiful philosophy, and the last six weeks of her life talked with many of her loved ones gone before. She was conscious until a few hours before her death, and all believed that she did see and converse with my father and others gone from the body many years ago. We miss her strong personality, but could not ask her return into a body which was racked with pain for so many months.

COURAGE.

Take courage, Oh, my soul, and let reliance plead,
For God's love sufficient is for every need;
With sure, unswerving hand, He doth our footsteps lead,
And with His daily bread, our famished bodies feed.

He gives us strength to melt the gathering mists of wrong,
To help some heart, sad and discouraged, to grow strong;
He dries the tears, and in their stead gives day of song,
And with His love, dispels the murmur of the throng.

He teaches us that death is not a dreamless sleep,
But a condition where the eyes have ceased to weep;
Eternity a Heaven, boundless, vast and deep,
Where Time with cruel cycle has forgot to reap,
Where liberty is gained by trusting souls at last,
And Life and Death are lost and numbered with the past.

J. S. LOVELAND.

Tribute From Those Who Knew Him Well.

J. S. Loveland, the grand and noble worker and true friend of humanity, laid down the armor of earthly warfare on the morning of May 28, and passed to the beyond. He came to San Diego a few days previous to his ninetieth birthday, hoping that our grand climate would restore wasted physical energies, but after a short time he began to fail, his hold on life gradually weakening until the final end. He bore his suffering with fortitude; not once was he known to complain, but did express the wish that expected money would arrive which would enable him to secure the services of a strong man as nurse, relieving his niece and her young daughter who were his only attendants.

Probably no man was more loth to give up the fight, nor more determined to live than himself, and until the end came he often expressed the desire to recover in order to "finish his work." His physician repeatedly counseled him to "let go" and finish his work where there were grander opportunities and no diseased body to contend with, but this he would not do, and only fourteen hours before dissolution, he declared to myself that "for the past two days I have improved.

In accordance with his oft repeated desire, the mortal remains were incinerated. The commodious chapel at at Evergreen cemetery, Los Angeles, was filled to overflowing with friends, among whom were a goodly number who formed his acquaintance on the grounds of Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

It was a somewhat remarkable coincidence that the principal speaker was Dr. Adah Patterson, who with myself were his co-laborers at Clinton camp twenty years ago, Prof. Loveland being president, Adah "Sheehan," vice-president, and myself secretary at that time.

Mrs. Ives, of Pasadena, also paid a touching tribute to his memory on this occasion. A memorial service was also held in Burbank hall, Los Angeles, Sunday afternoon, June 7. Here, too, were gathered many of his old-time friends, among whom was a lady (Marietta Palmer) who heard him preach sixty-seven years ago, while laboring as a Methodist minister.

The opening address was given by J. C. Dryden, who paid an eloquent and glowing tribute to the life and work of our ascended friend and brother, and was followed by Mrs. Ives, Mrs. Horman, Mrs. Cobb, Mrs. Kratz, Mr. J. C. Craig, and Will C. Hodge. The beautiful solo, "I Shall See Them Face to Face," was finely rendered by Mr. Barnes, as was the song "Only Remembered by What I Have Done," by Brother and Sister Prentice. An original poem was also given by H. C. O'Bleness, which appears on another page of this issue.

But, while all true Spiritualists are willing, yes, delighted to honor the man and his work, the sad fact remains to be told that after sixty years of noble and faithful service, J. S. Loveland closed his earthly career practically penniless. Property he had, but it was not available, and not a single dollar was at his command when the supreme moment came. Money which he should have had and which he confidently expected, failed to materialize, and friends were called upon to meet the emergency. Right nobly did they respond, as more than sixty dollars was raised on this occasion, while the friends in San Diego, including the Children's Lyceum, have also generously responded, leaving a balance of about thirty dollars to be raised. This will be done, and San Diego will later on hold a memorial service befitting the life and work of this "Grand Old Man" in Spiritualism.

As it devolved upon myself to take entire charge of funeral as well as incineration, I wish to express sincere thanks to all who responded to the needs of the hour, including the People's Psychic Society of Los Angeles, which, under the able leadership of Mrs. Nettie P. Howell, is always ready to respond, not only with sympathy, but with dollars whenever human needs demand.

Our brother, teacher, friend, is not dead, only passed on to that spiritual expression of life, where he can "finish his work," which he so much desired to do; and it is a source of great gratification that in the closing scenes of his earthly life, his every wish and desire has been faithfully carried out, while to abler pens than mine will be committed the task of recounting his virtues and faithful services in the upliftment of humanity, the only end and aim of his Spiritualism.

Simply a Correction.

To the Editor: My esteemed Brother G. C. Love of Oregon, had a beautiful little argument in last week's Progressive Thinker, on the subject: "Shall a medium charge for her readings?" He seemed to imagine that he was arguing with me. Wake up, Brother Love! Here is a chance to get back part of that $2,000:

I will give $10 to be shown that part of my article wherein I make the statement that a medium shall not be compensated for her mediumistic work.

Another $10 to be shown any rule made by the Missouri State Association wherein a medium is forbidden to accept a fee.

She is, however, forbidden to solicit patronage by advertisements or by having a sign out, and my article was simply questioning the ethics of such methods.

I would suggest, Brother Love, that you read and DIGEST my article first before rushing again into print.

Yours very sincerely,
PAUL McARTHUR.

A WORKER'S OPINION.

It Is Forcibly Expressed in Commendation of Two Correspondents' Views.

I have just finished reading the June 20th No. of The Progressive Thinker, and I was greatly interested in two very important letters, those of Mrs. Longley and Mr. G. C. Love, in which they treat of commercialism—hurrah for both of these worthy and excellent workers. Long may they live—and as Joseph Jefferson always said in his toast—and be prosperous.

Mrs. Longley says: "Were it not for our mediums there would be no spiritualism." And how very true are the words. And the mediums—"Message-Bearers," if you please, get the least credit of any workers in the field, and as Brother Love expresses it, are a target for Dead-Heads—Mr. Love does not use just these terms, Mr. Editor, but means much the same.

Mrs. Longley says: "Were it not for our mediums (message-bearers, say I) there would be no Spiritualism.

And I am now going to speak along the same lines of thought, but relative to the camps.

Were it not for the message-bearers there would be no camps. While I, with thousands of others, enjoy a good scientific lecture, such as Elizabeth Harlow, Thomas Grimshaw—such as Mrs. Colby Luther, Warren Chase and a host of ohers long since gone to the higher grades of study. But with all this intellectual array of speakers, the various camps would be nothing without the test mediums, or "Amanuenses," if you please—of the shadow-world.

I love our late president, H. D. Barrett's methods, in many respects, of ridding our ranks of fakirs, and those only who have no spirituality outside of charging from one to five dollars for a reading of their own make-up, or what some one has told them. But I am with Sister Longley and Brother G. C. Love. "If, when giving a reading a spirit loved one calls, and tells a friend who has come for information, where they can better their condition, either financially or physically, I do not understand why we, as message-bearers, should not give it.

To whom can we look for guidance and help, if not from a loving father, mother, sister or brother, who has preceded us to the higher realms of thought and action, and where they have no incumbrances whereby they would otherwise be retarded in giving the knowledge, which is most essential to them, and ofttimes their future happiness.

Back to the Camps: Upon speaking of our camps, I remarked, were it not for the message-bearers there would be no camps. And yet, friends, and co-workers, the message-bearers are taxed, sometimes beyond their actual means for ground and rent, and many other expenses that a speaker does not have to think of. (I am a lecturer, and know whereof I speak.)

Do not understand me that mediums are not willing to pay what is just and right, and what is more, they should, but when it comes to having them, the independent workers of the camps, and which actually bring and draw the crowds to our camps. Not even some of the best and grandest of the old message-bearers, mentioned in the programs of the present season's camp doings, it seems rather deplorable in the extreme.

But, co-workers for the dear departed, we can rejoice and be glad, for we are God's ministering angels, and were given the grandest of all gifts that mortal could be heir to, when we were, at birth endowed with the gift of prophecy.

But let us not forget, though we have these gifts, that we are as naught without charity and love.

There is not a message bearer scarcely, that is not most generous, and if true to the cause and their gifts that would not give you their last cent or their last piece of bread.

As to any organization, creed or society making laws to compel mediums to give readings free of charge, just to please the dear public, I am not one of them. And as the song goes, 'Nothing like that in our family tree,' and I am sure that every honorable and true message bearer will sing the same song.

Well, I think, while I have not said half I would like to say, I had better ring off and let some one else have a chance.

Brother Francis, were it not for your most valuable paper I do not know what we workers that are so over-worked with plus-force, would do. I am reminded right here in speaking of our communicatns between the two worlds, of what our good Brother Dr. George B. Warne once said in one of his eloquent lectures. In defending the honest mediums and expect, and sometimes demand a five dollar reading for ten cents, and he surely hit the nail on the head.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for space in your most liberal paper now as in the past, I am most gratefully,

DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago, Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

Lyceum Lesson Suggestions.

Spiritualists, Speakers and Mediums: Two numbers of Lyceum Lessons have gone forth, and from what we hear they are well liked. It is now time to prepare the next issue, and it occurs to me that the preparation of lessons should not be confined to a few, but should be the work of each and all. I therefore appeal to you, each and all, to get your thinking caps on and write us a lesson for the next issue, or if you cannot possibly take the time to do that, then just tell us the subject that you think would make a good lesson and we will be glad to try and work it out.

Nearly everyone can think of a topic that would suit; now as you love the children, please help us to give them the best which it is possible to get.

Lyceum conductors are in position to know sometimes just what kind of lesson would suit their particular schools. Just tell us what you like, and we will do our best to furnish it.

Interest in the child of to-day is very marked; efforts are being made upon every hand to provide for the child according to need, and we as Spiritualists cannot afford to be behind the rest, but rather we should lead on in the great work for future generations.

I sincerely trust you will gladly respond and send all lessons and communications to

OBITUARIES.

Passed to the higher life on June 15, Mr. David Speight, aged 47 years., from his home, 3308 Wabash ave., Chicago, Ill. Mr. Speight was born in North Carolina. The end came to our friend and brother very unexpectedly, being ill only two days. He has provided well for his wife. He leaves a wife, brother, mother and a host of friends. The many floral pieces were beautiful. Our sister, Mrs. Speight is a medium and a member of the Progressive Spiritual Church (colored). She realizes that he has not gone, but lives in spirit. Interment was at Oak Hill, Ill. Services were held by the writer.

BARBARA HILBERT.

W. T. Jones of Benton Harbor, Mich., passed to the higher life April 27, 1908, aged 79 years, 9 months. He joined the Spiritualist ranks in 1865, about 20 years was passed in San Francisco, Cal. He gave much of his time to the cause he so loved. Much can be said of him as a true friend and fellow-worker.

MRS. P. L. MODIE.
San Francisco, Cal.

Austin Swan was born in Windsor, Vt., September 29, 1829. Passed to spirit life May 9, 1908. He was an old soldier, and was not afraid to go, as he knew it was not death, but life to him. He is at rest.

MRS. AUSTIN SWAN.
Guthrie, Okla.

Alfred W. Birdsall was born in the town of New Hartford, Oneida Co., New York, in 1821. He became convinced of the truth of spirit return long before the rappings at the Fox home in Hydesville. His life (while not filled with the blessings of earthly goods) was certainly a spiritual one in every way that the word implies, and stands as a monument to truth and morality. He passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. B. Chase, McIntire, Iowa, June 4, 1908. Six daughters and two sons mourn the loss of a kind and loving father.

ARTHUR L. BIRDSALL.

Sally Ann DeWitt passed from the mortal life at Leon, Wis., with heart disease, Thursday morning, June 11, 1908, surrounded by all her children—four daughters and two sons. Sally Ann Thompson was born in Ellisburg, Jefferson county, N. Y., July 17, 1823, and in the year 1840 was united in marriage to Richard DeWitt. To them six children were born, four daughters and two sons, which all survive them. Mrs. DeWitt was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was a tender and devoted mother to her children and grandchildren. In her religion she was a Spiritualist, having been converted to its phenomena fifty-two years ago and taking up the study of its philosophy and religion she remained ever steadfast to its sublime gospel. Funeral services were held at the home on Sunday, June 14; floral offerings were very beautiful. The home was crowded with old friends and neighbors who came to pay their last respects to our dear mother. Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, of Plainview, Minnesota, officiated, giving comfort in her own sweet way.

Mrs. Mary Rutherford, wife of Councilman J. S. Rutherford, passed to spirit life at her home, 218 Bell street, Beatrice, Neb., after an illness of several months. Mrs. Rutherford bore her suffering with fortitude and passed away as though falling asleep. She was was a woman of noble character, and one who had a wealth of kindness. Those who knew her best, loved her most. Her death will be deplored by her host of friends in this city and county, where she was well and favorably known.

The Pentecost, or the New Heaven and the New Earth.—Price 10 cents.

The Jubilee Lectures.—Celebration of Fiftieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. Price 35 cents.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead." These words stand out on the cover. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet the author, Edward C. Randall, believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50.

SCIENCE AND A FUTURE LIFE.

By Prof. James H. Hyslop.

This work is one of the most valuable acquisitions to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. It is scientific in its method, profound in its ethical deductions, unanswerable in its logic, and above all sympathetic to the truth whatever it may be and wherever it may be found. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

By Minot J. Savage, D. D.

This is a view of the world's beliefs on the subject, a consideration of present conditions of thought and feeling, leading to the question as to whether it can be demonstrated as a fact. To which is added an appendix containing some hints as to personal experiences and opinions. 8vo, cloth, 342 pages. $1.50; postage 10 cents.

W. J. COLVILLE'S PUBLICATIONS.

Universal Spiritualism—Spirit Communion in All Ages, Among All People. This work has two distinctive features: 1st. A resume of the Spiritual faith and practice of Egypt, India, Persia, Greece, China, Japan, and other ancient nations, not excepting Europe during Christian centuries. 2nd. A summary of recent experiences in America, Great Britain, Australia, France, Germany, Italy, and other modern lands, all tending to show the persistent continuity of spiritual revelation. Clairvoyance, Telepathy, and Psychic Phenomena in general is dealt with in separate chapters at the end of the volume, making it a highly useful text book for all who are interested in the great question of Human Immortality. 352 pages; price $1.00.

Old and New Psychology.—Comprising the substance and spirit of 24 lectures. 365 pages; price $1.00.

Fate Mastered and Destiny Fulfilled. A dainty book of 52 pages, bound in heavy white cover with cat-tail decoration. Contents: Fate Mastered. Interior Force. Its Practical Evolution. Thought as a Shield. The Human Aura. Price 30 cents.

THE LEADING WORKS OF E. D. BABBITT, M. D.

The Principles of Light and Color.

Superbly issued, royal 8vo, with over 200 engravings and colored plates. Price $5.00; in massive binding, imitating half Russia, 50c. extra. "An imposing volume of nearly 600 pages. Shows a great amount of research on the part of the author. Will prove a great acquisition to Scientific Libraries"—N. Y. Herald.

Human Culture and Cure.

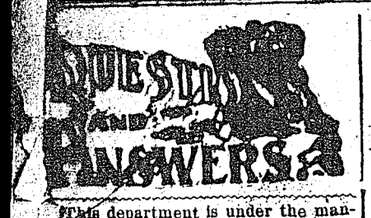
In six parts, five parts being already issued. PART I. The Philosophy of Cure, including Methods and Instruments; 75 cents.

PARTS III and IV in one volume; $1.00. Part III treats of Mental and Psychological forces; Part IV of the Nervous System and Insanity. "This work discloses for the first time the chemical mystery of mental phenomena, throws the first clear light upon the nature and processes of hypnotism and all kindred psychological phenomena which have never before been explained or understood. Dr. Babbitt has here not only given the rationale of hypnotism, psychometry, clairvoyance and mental science, including the mysterious subject of memory, but has furnished abundant illustrations of their working. The subject of Phreno-physiognomy alone is of priceless value as enabling us to understand our fellow beings around us."—Prof. W. C. Bowman.

PART V. "The Bodily Organs, their Diseases and the Great Natural Methods for Their Cure," aims to be the most practical work on healing thus far given to the public. Price, $1.

Health and Power.

Brief Natural Treatment for 110 Diseases. Price, 35 cents. "Worth its weight in diamonds."



SOCIAL UPBUILDING. Paper, 15 cents.

RELIGION.—A most thoughtful and excellent work. Price, cloth, $1.10; paper, 60 cents.

THE TALMUD Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentaries, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polano. 359 pp. Price, cloth, $1

MOLLIE FANCHER,
The Brooklyn Enigma.

An authentic statement of facts in the life of Mary J. Fancher, the psychological marvel of the nineteenth century. Unimpeachable testimony of many witnesses. By Abram H. Dailey. With illustrations. Price, cloth, $1.

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondants, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Arthur E. Wilmot:—Q.—What evidence is there that the solar system is moving around the polar star, and how is the velocity measured?

A.—There is no evidence that the solar system is moving toward, or around the polar star. The theory advanced by Herschel and since maintained by many astronomers, is that the movement is toward the constellation Hercules.

The solution is one of the most difficult, as the data are obscure and scarcely obtainable. If the stars were at rest and the solar system alone was speeding on its course, the widening spaces between the stars approached, and the narrowing between those left behind might be measured, and the solution a simple matter of observation. But all the stars are moving in every conceivable direction, and this complicates the calculation. However, as they all have varying movements, it is assumed that these cancel each other and may be set aside. It will be seen that until the distance of the stars can be more accurately determined, the movement of the solar system in space can be no more than approximately arrived at.

Struve reached the conclusion that the solar system moved through space 154,000,000 miles in a year, or 420,000 a day. As this result rests on the ESTIMATED distance of the stars, the REAL translation may be more or less. It is probably more.

The DIRECTION of this motion as measured is rectilinear—in a straight line. It may, however, be curved. The conjecture is that it is along an orbit, circling the center of this stellar cluster, or what we call the universe. This being so, having a center, there must be a circumference, and limitation, which leaves infinite space beyond, in the remoteness of which other "stellar universes" duplicate in endless succession?

E. DeLorm:—Q.—Who was the author of the sentence: "Death is the commencement of immortality?"

A.—This sentence occurs in the last speech of Robespierre, delivered before the convention the day before his arrest, two days after which he was executed. He said: "No! Death is NOT 'an eternal sleep!' Citizens! efface from the tomb that motto, graven by sacrilegious hands, which spreads over all nature a funeral crepe, takes from oppressed innocence its support, and affronts the beneficent dispensation of death! Inscribe rather thereon these words: 'Death is the commencement of immortality.'"

Mrs. E. C. Lewis:—Q.—Is it true that the Greek church has no pope, and, and a distinct godhead from the Roman Catholic?

A.—The Holy Catholic Apostolic church, a name which both Greek and Catholic claimed for several centuries, embraced all Christianity. This Greek church claims all the apostles and all the fathers, and at present holds all the countries of the East, its early seat of power. It is the state church of Russia, and the Czar is its nominal head, or pope. Its membership is 80,000,000. There was a steady separation of the western or Catholic from the Eastern or Greek. The Greek church was the stagnant, stationary element, the Catholic the advancing. The devotees of this religion are the most ignorant and superstitious. It would probably be difficult for nine hundred and ninety-nine in a thousand to explain wherein the two churches differed, yet they are intensely bigoted and intolerant. Morality and religion are not combined in the Greek religion. The seat of church government has been from the first at Constantinople, vested in a patriarch. The patriarchs at Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem have almost equal power, yet the first is deferred to.

It will be inferred that there is not that unity and solidarity in the Greek as in the Catholic church; it is a patriarchal oligarchy, just the scheme of religion to uphold the autocracy of Russia. The ostensible head is only a shadow, and the many nationalities each have independent religious rules.

Both Catholic and Greek accept the dogmas established by the councils to the time of the Nicean, and hence the triune God is worshipped by both, yet the definitives of the theology of each really make different Gods.

Wm. Phillips:—Q.—Is there anything in science indicating the origin of spirit forms? Is there necessity for the objectiveness of the human spirit? To give the spirit a beginning, seems to me to admit an ending.

A.—These questions are discussed at length in Arcana of Spiritualism and Psychic Science. If Spiritualism is true, spirits have an objective individuality. They are individualizations of spiritual elements and forces, and the crowning product of the energies of organic life. They, in other words, are the final term of evolution. Speculation is futile, and the whole question resolves into the central fact: Do spirits exist after the death of the body and have they ability to communicate with us? If this be demonstrated, all other questions, as dependent, are answered.

Hence the answers to all these questions is contained in the demonstration of individual immortality.

In the Realm of Science.

Interesting and Instructive Article Pertaining to the Constitution of the Physical, Mundane Sphere of Expression, to the Different Spiritual Spheres of the Universe, and to the Life or Soul Sphere of Expression.

To the Editor: In your issue of April 25 appears an article by Dr. G. B. Cock under the above heading. If you will allow me, I should like to correct a few incorrect statements which appear in the article and also offer some explanation in regard to the real nature of radio-activity. This subject being so new to the scientific world, is still very little understood, and the terminology which scientists have invented to describe the phenomena are not especially calculated to clear up the mystery. Having investigated the evolution of the chemical elements from a much deeper aspect than is possible by physical experimentation, and having known the fact of radio-activity or group-expulsion a number of years previous to the discovery of radium, I may perhaps be able to shed some light upon these phenomena.

Previous to the discovery of radium, the chemical elements were considered to be composed of what were called atoms, each such atom was considered to be the smallest, indivisible particle of matter; a combination of such atoms was called a molecule. When radium was discovered it was found that particles were ejected from a small mass of molecules containing radium atoms, in fact some of them were very much smaller than hydrogen atoms, which, up to that time, had been considered the smallest of all atoms.

It was calculated, judging from the velocity with which these particles were ejected, that the mass of some was only one one-thousandth of the mass of the hydrogen atom, while that of others was twice that of the hydrogen atom. Now, instead of correcting their hitherto mistaken idea, that the smallest elemental particle was an atom, and admitting that it must be a group composed of a large number of atoms (indivisible particles of matter), they retained this erroneous application of the term atom, and invented a new term, ion, to describe these smaller particles. This term of course does not explain the phenomena any better than any other term invented by scientists explains anything whatsoever. They merely confuse the investigator, and retard the explanation. The elemental atom should therefore be designated as the elemental group, while the application of the term atom should be transferred to the ion, until it could be proved that even ions were not single particles, but a group containing a large number of still smaller atoms. If an atom is an "individual particle of matter," then it cannot properly be applied to any element, because all elements are composed of hundreds, and some of thousands of atoms. It is therefore more proper and explanatory as well as descriptive to designate the "elements" as "groups." These elemental groups are made up of one main group, and a varying number of minor groups, each minor group being in turn composed of a varying number of atomic groups, each of which is composed of probably six individual atoms, which pertain to the physical, mundane sphere of expression, but each of these physical atoms is surrounded by hundreds of smaller atoms, which pertain to the different spiritual spheres of the universe, and these spiritual atoms are in turn surrounded by still smaller atoms, which pertain to the life sphere of expression; these should be designated as life or soul atoms.

This then is a full description of the parts which go to make up any chemical element, such as gold, lead, iron, copper, arsenic, aluminum, bromine, chlorine, oxygen, nitrogen, lithium, etc. Lithium is the lightest or smallest element by weight which contains a full set of minor groups. Hydrogen only contains atomic groups. Now it was found that radium, uranium and thorium ejected particles, which agreed in their weight and mass with a gas called helium; not only did they agree in weight, but they also agreed in regard to their inability to combine again with other elements, which is characteristic of helium, neon and argon. Hence these three gases have been called "inert," which of course is also a misapplication of terms. Because inertia means inability to move or change places. All atoms are necessarily in perpetual motion, which motion constitutes their life. But the longer the atom, the slower the motion, and vice versa. This life-motion of the atom expresses itself in the shape of axial rotation. And although an atom cannot change its place in space, when alone, it is able to change the place in space of other atoms when coming in contact with them, and these in turn may change that of the first, so that really no atom is inert, or else they are all equally inert, in so far as they are not able to change their own individual place in space without the aid of other atoms. The three gases, helium, neon and argon, are made up of atoms, which I designate as crude atoms. They are crude, because they have not yet attained to a sufficient degree of refinement and development to be capable of entering into any atomic groups. They only serve as central atoms, which keep the atomic groups together to form minor groups, of which the heavier elements are composed. And hence, after they have once been released from the elemental group, they are unable to form a new combination, because they are too large, and their motion is too slow and sluggish to make connection with any of the more refined atomic groups.

The weight of these helium atoms is twice that of the hydrogen group, and the "ray" which carries these atoms has been called the "A" or "alpha" ray. The ray cannot and does not pass through all substances, as glass, the most solid rock, the hardest steel, etc., as stated by Dr. Cock. In fact, this helium ray is completely stopped by a sheet of aluminum only five one-hundredths of a millimeter in thickness, about the thickness of good writing paper. And I for one venture to contradict Dr. Cock when he asserts that the helium ray is the source of the ultra violet rays of light (for there are a multitude of them, not only one), or that it affects, exclusively, the photographic film. It may affect the phtographic film, under certain conditions, as this film is affected by a large number of rays, but the ultra-violet rays must necessarily be composed of smaller atoms than helium, because the helium atom has twice the weight of the hydrogen group, and hydrogen has a spectrum containing several rays in the visible blue and violet, besides one red and one green line, showing it to be made up of a considerable number of atoms, each of which would be capable of producing its own ray under favorable conditions. But generally the spectrum rays are produced by atomic groups. This is proven by the fact that a continuous spectrum from red to violet may be obtained from almost any element by subjecting it to pressure during the observation. And this fact also disproves the statement cited by Dr. Cock from Prof. Wallace saying: "Light is now explained as being due to vibrations of ether." There was a time when scientists thought that electricity was merely an undulation of the ether, but they now very reluctantly admit that there are individual atoms, called by them electrons, which produce all the electrical phenomena. And after awhile, I have no doubt, that they will be forced to admit that the phenomena of light are also due to the intense vibrations or rather axial vibrations of individual atoms, which are smaller than those which produce electrical phenomena. That the helium rays are not concerned in the phenomena of light is farther proven by the fact that their velocity of translation is only one-tenth that of light.

But the helium ray is not the only ray which issues from radium. There is another called the B or "beta" ray. This moves ten times faster than the helium ray and very nearly equals that of light. Another ray or rays are th so-called "Y" or gamma, rays. These are composed of atoms so small that they are able to find a free path through between the crystals and groups of molecules of solid iron, having been known to penetrate a foot of iron. These gamma rays may be concerned in the production of the ultra violet rays. But even if so, it would not prove that they exclusively affect the film; the lecta rays are probably more concerned in this process than the gamma rays. At least the lecta rays, if identical with the light rays, produce visible rays, and would therefore produce a visible picture, while the gamma rays, if identical with ultra violet rays, produce invisible rays, and therefore invisible pictures. However these invisible pictures may be rendered visible by chemical solutions which are capable of reducing the vibrations of the invisible picture by covering it over with atoms of a slower velocity of vibration, which comes within the vibratory limits of our organs of vision and thus render them visible.

Now a word in regard to ether. The phenomena of light are now by most scientists considered the result of ether vibrations. This, however, is impossible. Because in the first place, a beam or ray of white light must necessarily contain as many different sizes of atoms as there are different fundamental colors in the beam, each size of atoms having its own peculiar rate of axial rotation, produces its own peculiar color. But the ether, which fills all the space between the particles or atoms, and is therefore not composed of particles, but is perfectly homogeneous and unparticled throughout, could not possibly give rise to all these various vibrations, but it might be thrown into these various vibrations by various sized atoms, and then carry or convey these atoms to any distance within its own extent. In the second place, an ether vibration could not be reflected or refracted, because all bodies such as glass or anything else are as pervious and penetrable to ether as a sponge is to air. Ether would simply pass through all bodies without reflection or refraction. But the light atoms (which should be called lumin-ous, in contradistinction to electro-ous), these luminous then cannot penetrate all bodies alike. Some of them are absorbed and turned out of their course, others are reflected, and still others pass through. And hence we have objects of different colors. All the reflected luminous are arranged in a certain definite manner in relation to all the others and their neighbors, and in this definite manner of arrangement they pass through the lens of the eye or camera and form the same picture in the focus of the lens as they did when reflected from the object, except such picture is upside down and right to left. From the focus of the lens, the picture or the atoms composing it, are conveyed along both optic nerves through the crossing and over to the opposite side of the brain, the optic nerve then turns over upon itself so that the under portion comes uppermost, and thus the picture is righted, so that the right side of the object appears on the right side of the brain, and the left side on the left side, and upper side up with care. However another correction is required. The right side of the object appearing on the right side of the brain would impel the subject to use his right hand to strike an enemy on the right cheek. This would of course be wrong. And hence the left side of the brain is made to control the right side of the body and the right side of the brain controls the left arm. This is accomplished by having the motor nerves of the right brain cross over to the left side of the body and control the motions of the left arm and viceversa. And this is the explanation of the mystery of the ages, which has baffled scientists and doctors for lo, these centuries. The luminous composing the pictures are then stored away in the dark room of the brain for future reference, thus forming the memory. An ether vibration could not, of course, be thus stored away. Nor could an ether vibration form any image or picture whatever. The ether merely acts as common carrier, and also (and which is more important) it acts as a regulator and adjuster of atomic velocities of rotation, compelling each atom to revolve at such a speed as will produce the same friction and no more than any other atom. And hence different sizes of atoms revolve at different velocities, the smallest at the greatest velocity. And now in regard to the final postulate of Dr. Cock, that "all things have come into being through ether vibrations acting on the primal elements by chemico-vital-affinity, I would say that it is not well stated. An ether vibration cannot build bodies because merely of the fact of its vibration. For ether cannot vibrate itself. It requires a rotation of material particles or atoms to throw it into vibration. The atoms therefore being the cause of the vibration, the vibration could not possibly control the atoms; for an effect cannot control its cause. But the action of relatively stationary ether, which fills all the spaces between the atoms, results in the phenomena of attraction, because of the fact that it surrounds and connects all atoms and regulates and adjusts all friction, and has a constant tendency to reduce all friction to a lowest possible minimum.

This is the true cause of all body-building, all growth, all evolution, all development, all progress, and I can prove it by the laws of mathematics. It is also the cause of radio-activity, an explanation of which we shall have to defer to another time.

Clinton, Iowa, Spiritualist Society.

On Sunday afternoon, June 14, 1908, the Clinton, Iowa, Society of Spiritualists closed its meetings for the season of 1907-1908 at Mt. Pleasant Park by holding a memorial service consisting of vocal and instrumental selections by local talent, which was greatly appreciated. A little child was beautifully consecrated to the service of the truths contined in Spiritualism, after'd which Mrs. Alice C. Barry, the president and speaker for the society, gave a fine message service. Mrs. Barry is exceptionally gifted in this line of work, and gave many beautiful messages of love and good cheer from those who have gone before us, bringing joy and gladness to many hungry hearts on this side of the vale.

It was a beautiful day and the Park pavilion rostrum had been decorated with green leaves and branches. The platform was a profusion of flowers, the birds were singing in the trees, and the audience was in an exceptionally receptive mood, all of which made it an occasion of great joy and gladness, and the large audience dispersed feeling that it was good to be there, and with many expressions of thankfulness toward Mrs. Barry for the grand work she is doing.

At the closing of the meeting, Mrs. E. N. Abbott, vice-president of the Mississippi Valley Association, whom Mrs. Barry invited to dismiss us, went upon the platform and gave Mrs. Barry a grand message from her father, who is in spirit life, which was a fitting closing for this beautiful occasion and was enjoyed by all present.

The past year has been a very successful one for the society. Under Mrs. Barry's guidance it has been built up to a remarkable degree. We have a membership of about fifty. Peace, harmony and good will prevails, and the society is in a good financial condition, and it is the general feeling among us that we are in condition to make greater progress for the coming year than ever before.

The members of the Sunflower Club, an auxiliary social club, have worked untiringly for the good of the society and have been a great factor toward its advancement.

The society will resume its meetings in the early fall, down town, in the G. A. R. hall, corner 6th avenue and 2nd street.

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS.

My mind to me a kingdom is,
And oft a royal guest
Comes to my side at eventide
And brings theangel Rest.

What time these heavenly guests abide
I walk as in a dream,
And all the air thrills with the prayer
Of faith and love supreme.

I have no fears of life or death;
I know what is, is best,
The Father holds us in His hands,
What should we do but rest?

Rest in His love the while we strive,
His will on earth to do,
That will we learn and toward it turn
As duty we pursue.

Well may we trust a power supreme,
That every atom finds,
And soul to soul in wise control
Through ways mysterious binds.

Thus find I oft the angel Peace,
With healing, heavenly balm,
While dews of love from founts above
Sift down their deeps of calm,

Till I am calm as seem the stars,
That light heaven's azure fields,
While every care and seeming snare,
Some grace or gladness yields.

And thus my mind a Kingdom is,
With royal pleasures blest,
Nor frowns of fate, nor scorn or hate,
Can rob me of my rest,—

The rest of love that seeks the good,
In labor or in pain,
And great or small, sees good in all
And nothing made in vain.

BELLE BUSH.

SUMMER CLOUDS.

Slow-drifting, 'neath an azure sky,
Veiling earth with softer glow,
The white clouds sail far overhead,
With stately mien, majestic, slow.

Banks of foam, shell-tinted, fair,
Drift across the broad blue space,
Then move apart to take new form
Of added beauty, filled with grace.

A castle fair, with turrets high,
Huge birds with wings outspread,
Are changd to forms of stately ships,
On waves of blue o'erhead.

These drift apart, to join once more,
Like friends long tried and true;
The fleecy mass now swings apart,
To let the bright blue through.

And thus they drift, the changing clouds,
The long, bright summer day,
Till sunset's glory change their hue,
And twilight hides the clouds away.

Kansas State Association.

Report of the Eighth Annual Convention of the Same.

In the Christian Church, N. Topeka Ave., Wichita, Kan., June 5, 1908, at 2:30, Spiritualists and friends assembled, were called to order by the president, Mrs. Bessie Bellman, of Winfield, Kansas.

Meeting was opened by congregational singing, which created a vibration of religious feeling and harmonious condition.

Following the singing was an invocation beautifully expressed in a gentle voice, so appropriate for the opening session, by Mrs. Bessie Bellman.

The president then called for Secretary's report, which was read and adopted, the Secretary being highly complimened on excellency of report.

The president next introduced Judge S. M. Tucker of Wichita, who responded with the address of welcome, which was well delivered and heartily applauded.

The president then gave report of her work during the year, showing good results. Many towns were visited and interested with splendid lectures and messages, weak societies were strengthened and encouraged, and two new societies chartered with the State Association; and twelve new members added to the membership list. While there exists some inharmony and many unpleasant conditions yet the president feels strenghened to go on.

Following the president's report, came appointment of Committee on Credentials, Finance, Resolutions, and Amendments:

Following appointments of committees the president called for short talks from several persons, all of whom responded in an interesting, enjoyable manner that was pleasing, and each received hearty applause and praise.

Following came Max Hoffman with many messages from spirit friends, who made glad the waiting hearts of earth's mortal children.

The president then read the program for evening, and after a few remarks, there being no farther business, meeting adjourned.

The instrumental music furnished by Mrs. C. L. Perkins at the close of each session, while friends were exchanging greetings, was most agreeable.

Saturday, June 6, 3 p. m., the session began with music on the pipe organ by Mrs. Perkins, while old friends renewed acquaintance and new friends were met,

President Mrs. Bellman then called the meeting to order and asked the congregation to join in the old familiar hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," after which Mrs. Louise Brown of Plainville gave a short invocation.

Report of committee on resolutions was read and adopted.

Report of committee on credentials was read and adopted.

Treasurer's report read and accepted Amendment Committee reported as follows: Recommended that we add to Article VIII—'Persons belonging to the religious denomination of Spiritualists shall have all rights and privileges of persons belonging to other religious denominations, and the exercise of all spiritual gifts and power by Spiritualists shall in no manner be interfered with, nor shall Spiritualists who possess spiritual power be prevented from accepting compensation for their spiritual ministrations.

We wish to add this for the protection of our ministers against the ordinance that prevents them from fulfillment of their mission.

Resolved, That each local society appoint a committee to wait upon the city authorities for the purpose of inserting said article in the City Charter of this particular city.

MRS. MAUD GATES.
EDNA E. McARTHUR.
W. P. SAILING.

After discussion, Article VIII. was amended by unanimous vote.

Committee then offered amendment to Article VI. Section 3, regarding personal membership. Amendment was read, discussed and referred back to the committee.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Mrs. Bessie Bellman President, Winfield, Kan.; Mr. J. V. Wood, Vice-President, Wichita; Josephine A. Bruer Secretary, Sterling; Jacob Hey, Treasurer, Overbrook. All were re-elected by unanimous vote.

Trustees: N. F. Shaw, Plainville; H. W. Henderson, Lawrence; Etta S. Bledsoe, Kansas City, Mo.; W. P Sailing, Winfield, Kan.; Judge J. S. Tucker, Wichita. All elected by unanimous vote.

Miss Etta S. Bledsoe then made a motion that we create new office for Lyceum worker and elect officers for the same, which motion carried and Mrs. Louise Brown of Plainville, Pa., was elected State Superintendent of Lyceums.

Mrs. Brown is one of the new workers, having assisted Mrs. Bellman in her tour over the State, at various places and has made a warm place for herself, with credit to all. We are hoping for a good report from her next year.

By unanimous vote, Wichita was chosen as meeting-place for next annual convention.

Friday evening, June 5.—The service of the evening was opened by the president in a few well-chosen words of greeting, and welcome, which was followed by instrumental music by Mrs. L. Perkins on the pipe-organ, which produced an atmosphere of harmonious vibration.

Mr. and Mrs. Childs then rendered a duet, "Sing Me to Sleep," in a sweet, expressive way that was greatly appreciated.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman lectured upon "The Philosophy of Spiritualism." Needless to say the lecture was inspiring, instructive, impressive and consoling.

There is but one Mrs. Bellman, tender and pleading in voice, gentle and winning in manner, endearing herself always, to old friends and delighting the new, speaking the right word at the right time and the right place.

Saturday, 8 p. m.—Services were opened by instrumental selections which created a splendid vibration for the workers of the hour. Mrs. Minnie Martindale was first on the programme. She read the poem "Betrayed," in a very pleasing manner and was highly complimented aand heartily applauded.

Next came your humble servant and I quote from the Wichita Eagle report of the meeting.

Mrs. Josephine Bruer of Sterling, Kan., Secretary K. S. S. A., was the speaker of the evening. She spoke of "The Spiritual Needs of the Day." The subject of the lecture being, "The Spirit of the Age and its Demands." Her talk was clear-cut, concise, and she held the undivided attention of her audience, while she expressed to them her views of Spiritualism.

Sunday, June 7, 3 p. m.—Service opened with impressive musical selections by Mrs. C. L. Perkins, followed by a sweet invocation by Mrs. Bessie Bellman.

Next came the Symposium—Subject: "Glad Tidings of Great Joy," led by Dr. Jose Montoya, followed by Edna E. McCarthy, W. P. Sailing, Mrs. Louise Brown, W. H. Henderson, Josephine A. Bruer. Each expressed different thoughts and ideas as appealed to their individual consciousness, and it was not only interesting, but enjoyable. Many beautiful thoughts were given expression. After the Symposium came the ordination of Mrs. Maud Gates of Winfield, Kan., by the President, Mrs. Bellman.

The servxice was conducted according to the Ordination Usages, Form No 2, and was beautiful and impressive, especially as the president scattered the rose petals over the bowed head of the new minister with a tenderness that brought tears to many eyes.

Mrs. Gates then addressed the audience and expressed many sweet thoughts regarding the beautiful truths she promised to support and sustain. As she finished I arose, and as Secretary of the K. S. S. A., and an ordained minister of Spiritualism, extended the hand of fellowship and welcomed her among us. I never felt closer in touch with with the angel world than while I clasped her hand and admonished her gently to hold high the pure white banner of our beloved Spiritualism with its letters of gold so symbolic of the purity of the soul, with its heart of gold. I never felt more inspired than at that moment. I felt it was impressive and the message from the angels to my sister worker found an echo in my heart. The words of congratulations and blessing were indeed a benediction from the many-mansioned home of angels.

One of the sister workers said the service was truly beautiful, and the words so uplifting and inspiring, were so appropriate, she had never listened to so many beautifully expressed truths in so short a time. We have but to open the door of our hearts and then let the angels in, then can we realize the bliss of Paradise.

Following the ordination the president introduced Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe, who gave messages. How glorious it is to daily walk the mount of Beatitude and commune with angelic hosts. Mrs. Bledsoe has won unbounded praise, for every message so beautifully given in such a convincing way was thoroughly appreciated.

After announcement of the evening programme, meeting was dismissed by benediction. On all sides we heard the remarks, "My! What a glorious meeting; wasn't it just splendid? Such a spiritual feast.

Sunday, June 7, 8 p. m.—Meeting opened with instrumental selection by Mrs. C. L, Perkins, which hushed all sound and breathed the breath of tenderness over all. Mrs. Etta Bledsoe then followed with a beautiful invocation.

Next came Miss June Bellman, daughter of our president, looking as sweet as a June rose and sang her solo as sweetly as only the June girl graduate can. She was very much appreciated and generously applauded.

Mrs. Bellman then introduced Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe of Kansas City, Mo., as one of the best inspirational speakers in the field, and the eloquent lecture which she gave, her subject being "Superstition," was proof that she had not been unduly praised. Mrs. Bledsoe has few equals as a speaker. She was interrupted a number of times by the applause which greeted her, which bespoke the appreciation of her hearers.

Max Hoffman followed with messages, and warmed the hearts of many with glad tidings from the spirit side of life.

Mrs. Bellman then spoke kindly to the people for their interest, enthusiasm and courteous treatment, and thanked each and all for their assistance.

We are very grateful to Mrs. Jerry Simpson for so kindly entertaining us, and for the assistance she rendered in so many ways, and for the twenty dollars' subscription, she sent in even as we thank the friends who so kindly donated funds. The attendance was good, the church was not large enough to accommodate the evening crowds. Harmony and good will prevailed throughout every session and in every respect we felt our Convention was a success.

Financially we are in a better condition; there were more societies sent dues to State and N. S. A., larger attendance of delegates and visiting friends, and the outside interest was great. We are grateful for the pleasant weather and realize it was a great aid to success.

The workers feel much encouraged and look forward to the future with a faith that is secure, believing that "Spiritual Spiritualism" is gaining ground.

We are always loth to part after so joyous a session, and it was sadly we said "Good-Bye, God be with you and angels guard you till we meet again.

Thanking you in advance for your kindness, and wishing you unbounded success. Cordially and sincerely,

Spiritualists Annual Meeting

Misstssippi Valley Association Will Meet at Clinton, July 26 to August 23.

E, L. Kilby of Ottumwa is President of the Association, Which is Almost National in its Scope--The Program.

The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association of which E. L. Kilby, of Ottumwa, is president, will meet in its twenty-sixth annual session at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia., from July 26 to August 23.

The association meeting is not unlike a big chautauqua, in fact it is a Spiritualist chautauqua, and its field of endeavor covers the entire Mississippi Valley. Each day a program will be given consisting of a lyceum, conference, lectures and spirit message service.

Organized in 1882.

The association was organized and incorporated Nov. 21, 1882, as the "Iowa Conference of Spiritualists," and on the first day of April, 1885, the corporate name was changed to "The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association."

The remarkable growth of the Association necessitated the change in name as it has reached out from a purely state organization until it takes in all the states in the Mississippi Valley, and bids fair to cover the entire American continent with its influence ere many more years pass. The magnificent grounds at Clinton, Mt. Pleasant Park, are owned by the Association and the thousands of visitors who attend the annual meetings of this association enable the management to provide the very best talent on the Spiritual platform.

The Officers.

The officers of the association are: President, E. L. Kilby, Ottumwa, Iowa; vice-president, Mrs. E. R. Abbott, Alliance, Ohio; secretary, Mollie B. Anderson, Clarksville, Mo.: treasurer, Mrs. Christine Cooper, Clinton, Iowa.

Trustees.

Will M. Kellogg, New Boston, Ill.; Minerva Aiken, Clinton, Ia.; Wm. John Ward, Clinton, Ia.; N. G. Omstead, Webster City, Ia.; J. C. Blodgett, Clinton, Ia.; G. B. Holbert, Iowa City, Ia.

The Woman's Union is an auxiliary organization of workers composed of women who are laboring incessantly for the advancement and success of the Spiritual Cause. Each year a day is set apart known as "Woman's Day" and a program appropriate to the day is furnished by the "Woman's Union," who have full charge of the literary and social functions, and "Woman's Day" is always one of the most enjoyable during the camp.

Mount Pleasant Park.

Mount Pleasant Park, where the association meets, is located upon a high bluff overlooking the city of Clinton, Ia., and a fine view of the surrounding country may be obtained from various points of vantage. Two deep wells supply all with an abundance of pure sparkling, cold water. Plenty of water for general purposes is brought there by the city water works, hydrants being placed at convenient points. The grounds are now brilliantly lighted with electricity. Grand old forest trees protect with their cooling shade, which with the cosy private cottages, comfortable tents and commodious buildings for public entertainment, combine to make an attractive summer resort to which all are welcome with overflowing good will.

Constant improvements are going on and better facilities are being provided each year for the entertainment of those who visit the grounds.

Several cab and baggage lines ply between the depots and steamboat landings and the park, while the electric street cars pass the main entrance to the grounds, making them readily accessible to the city.

Talent of the Best.

The talent secured for the Spiritual platform is among the best in the country. Probably the leading attraction from the lecture platform standpoint will be Dr. J. M. Peebles, of national fame as a lecturer, author and traveler. Dr. Peebles is characterized as one of the greatest stars whose light has shown upon every nation of the earth, having traveled four times around the globe, he will come to the Mt. Pleasant meeting freighted with habits, customs, religions and phenomena of every nationality. Dr. Peebles will deliver a special lecture on "India and Her Magi."

Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond will be at the assembly at the opening and will give four of her incomparable lectures. She has been a lecturer and medium from childhood.

Inspirational Speaker.

John W. Ring, who will also be at the assembly during the early part of it is an inspirational speaker whose thoughts are clothed in the purest and most chaste language. It is said by those who have heard him that his lectures will be a rich treat.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman, president of the Kansas State Spiritualists' Association, is a speaker of ability who will assist on the program. She is said to have a charming personality.

After an interval of years, Edgar W. Emerson has consented to come to the meetings and serve as message bearer during the last five days of the session.

Mrs. Emma A. Sauer, of St. Paul, Minn., who has served many years as state missionary in Minnesota, will make her first appearance at Mount Pleasant Park this season.

Other Speakers.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig, who two summers ago served the association as message bearer will again receive a hearty welcome this summer. It is said her mediumistic powers have undergone a marvelous unfoldment and many will find solace under her ministration.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, Ohio, national superintendent of lyceums, has been engaged during the entire season. She extends a special invitation to bring the children.

On August 18 Miss Elizabeth Harlow will appear on the assembly platform. She ranks as one of the most forceful speakers and finest orators on the Spiritualistic platform. For her subjects she chooses the ones of vital interest to all classes of people and those who hear her will be assured of an intellectual feast.

A series of six lectures by Ben F. Wilson on "The Life Message" will be delivered between July 30 and August 4.

Mrs. Laura Jones will serve during the first week of the meeting as message bearer. She is an entire stranger to Mt. Pleasant Park but her renown as a medium has gone before her.

Tents will be rented by the management for a nominal sum by the week or season. A lodging hotel will also be conducted on the grounds.

A DAILY THOUGHT.

The girl who sent in this beautiful poem wrote below it: "The Each and All Spirit."

Let me to-day do something that shall take
A little sadness from the world's vast store,
And may I be so favored as to make
Of joy's too scanty sum a little more.

Let me not hurt by any selfish deed,
Or thoughtless word, the heart of foe or friend;
Nor would I pass, unseeing, worthy need,
Or sin by silence when I should defend.

However meagre be my worldly wealth,
Let me give something that shall aid my kind—
A word of courage, or a thought of health,
Dropped as I pass for troubled hearts to find.

Let me to-night look back across the span
'Twixt dawn and dark, and to my conscience say—
Because of some good act to beast or man—
"The world is better that I lived to-day."

Ohio State Association

SECRETARY'S REPORT

To the Officers and Members of the Eleventh Annual Convention of the Ohio Spiritualists' Association, Convening at Columbus May 29, 30, 31, 1908, Greeting:

In submitting this, my fourth annual report, I would like to bring certain truths as I find them, to your attention and consideration. It has been said that there is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune. As it is in the affairs of men, so it must be in the affairs of organizations, as these organizations are subject to nature's immutable laws, and must rise or fall, as they are observed or violated. Our organization is no exception to the rule, and can profit by a study of her moods, and of how to take advantage of them. When this association was new, every one was enthusiastic, meetings of auxiliary societies were largely attended, members were constantly on the lookout for new recruits, and the tide was at its flood. However, as soon as the novelty of the situation wore off, the enthusiasm began to flag, attendance decreased, and now it is impossible for for some societies to hold meetings at all. Some societies and some members seem to forget that, eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty. In short, they did not take the tide at its flood. How could they expect to reap any adequate reward? And they wonder why Spiritualism is not more popular. It may be stated here, that the tide of truth seekers at the present time is unquestionably on the rise.

A careful study of daily papers, secular and spiritual, as well as magazines from all parts of the country will disclose the fact that there is a feeling of optimism everywhere. Those societies that fell by the wayside have all been invited to send delegates to this convention, to be resuscitated into renewed life and vigor. The true and tried warriors are still right on the firing line. There is every reason the world to feel encouraged at the present outlook and the State Association should place itself in shape to take the next tide at its flood. In the meantime, the order should be: "Close ranks and forward march." It is necessary, however, to have a full quota of scouts in the field in order to ascertain the strength and location of the opposing forces, that the traps of the wily antagonist may be avoided.

Human foresight can avert many troubles, but the time comes to most of us when our plans go astray and we face failure; then is the time when you really show what you are. It is not hard to keep on going ahead as long as the sun of prosperity is shining and the solid ground of successful effort is beneath our feet; but when the tidal wave of adversity has swept over us, whether it comes in the shape of financial reverses or in the shape of jealousy or egotism, or in fact from any cause, there is a time when you must summon all that is in you and meeet the loss with spirit and determination. Determination, grit, perseverance and ambition are the weapons a true Spiritualist needs and must have if he wishes to rebuild what has been destroyed. With these tools many a good, successful society has been reared on the foundations of a disrupted society.

I want to say to you, who have these good qualifications that you will have to work hard and quick for there is no time to be wasted in repining and regretting. No matter how great the misfortune that overtakes an organization, if there are only a handful of true men and women left, they can weather the storm and soon be ready to re-enter the fight, stronger than ever, for they have the knowledge and experience of adversity which nothing can take from them.

Now, if I should have in the past written or spoken to hurt one's feelings, I beg their pardon, as it has been furthest from my thoughts to injure any one, but as secretary of the O. S. A. you are compelled sometimes to step on somebody's toes. I thank all who assisted me in any work, which has been arduous but pleasant to me. I would urge this convention to instruct that all delegates to report to their respective societies for them to have the secretaries of all auxiliaries to be more prompt in answering letters, also to keep up correspondence with the state secretary, who can often be of benefit to them. Some of our secretaries did not answer one letter during the year.

The society in Chillicothe returned its charter; a new charter was granted to Akron. One mass meeting was held in Columbus and two in Cleveland. Your secretary assisted in all three meetings, spoke twice in English and once in the German language, visited the different societies in Cleveland and addressed them whenever requested to do so. Also visited Lorain Society once, held one funeral service, and consecrated two little babies to the tender care of their spirit friends.

Answered all correspondence to the best of my ability. All the work the convention at Sherwood requested me to do, I have tried to do. Have kept in touch with the N. S. A., assisted Brother Harrison D. Barrett to locate as near as possible all organized societies in the state, auxiliaries to the N. S. A., as well as all other societies, to find out how many Spiritualists who are not afraid to acknowledge what they think for the United States census bureau.

Mrs. Mary C. Ward was appointed as state missionary, also H. Stevens and Cora Stevens. It is my honest conviction that if the O. S. A. had the financial means to put energetic missionaries in the field, a great deal of good could be accomplished and the number of auxiliary societies greatly increased. Spiritualism will never have the same prestige in the eyes of our law makers and others, with orthodox church societies until they show the strength numerically, we positively know exists.

The last convention instructed your secretary to have slips printed for collection for missionary purposes. I have done so. All returns made to me up to date is from Wellington, amounting to twenty-five cents. In conclusion your secretary desires to express his sincere thanks to the Spiritual press, to all the secretaries of the auxiliaries, to the officers of the O. S. A., and each and every other individual member who aided and co-operated with me in the discharge of my duties.

Now I beg of all officers, delegates, and visitors to go home and drop all petty jealousies, and put your shoulder to the wheel and assist in bringing our glorious Cause to that lofty height its truth deserves.

The financial account of your secretary not being completed, will give supplementary report later.

Respectfully submitted,
C. A. SOLLINGER,
Secretary O. S. A.

A MEDIUM'S VIEWS.

The Question of Medium's Compensation.

In reading The Progressive Thinker of June 20 I notice the views of Rev. G. C. Love. I would like to say a few words in answer.

To be sure the laborer is worthy of his hire and should be compensated according to his labor. And again, a man shall gain his bread by the sweat of his brow; so if you do not ask a reasonable price for your labor, wherein are you going to gain your bread and care for the many wants of the family?

But here is another question. Do not the mediums overdo in their charges? I think they do. I am a medium and have never made any charges except to exchange readings with other mediums, but if I had to depend on it for a living I should feel justified in charging a reasonable price. But where are the people of the working class who can afford to pay $1.00 for one-half hour's time, when they are getting not more than 25 cents for a whole hour? This to me has always seemed out of reason.

And again, if mediums were not allowed to charge more than they earn, you would not have so much trouble separating the tares from the wheat. If people read for the good they did humanity in general, and were willing to take what was right for their labor, there would not be so many frauds—it is for the love of money to satisfy their unreasonable pride, instead of the good they can do to their fellowbeings. I think it is a grand, good thing to stir up the Spiritualists, and when they have debated long enough, and all thrown in their views on all points, perhaps they will select out the good on all questions and settle down on one rule, and walk along hand in hand together, and try to do good to the Cause as well as to each other.

We should not read for nothing, nor should we charge more than a poor person is able to pay; we should lend a helping hand to those who are not able to pay, as well as the widows and invalids and cripples who are not able to make a living, let alone paying $1.00, and from that up to $5.00 for something their poor souls long to know, as well as those who are able to pay. To those who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, it shall be given. If I had depended wholly on the preacher or the power of prayer for my knowledge, I would still be a Methodist; but I must admit there is where the angels first got hold of me—thanks to the angels.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power, by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyancee than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. CARLYLE PETERSILEA'S BOOKS.

Oceanides.—A Psychical Novel.—Pricce, paper cover, 50 cents.—This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted inspired author. The question of soul mates, or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting. It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

Mary Anne Carter.—Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat cloth cover, Price $1. This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 4, 1908 NO. 971

THE EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Progressive Spiritual Society of Chicago.

In closing our meetings for the season we thought it best to make a short report of the work accomplished during the past year, with the gratitude we hold for all the friends who so willingly extended their help, our only prompter.

When we reflect upon the eight years of work done, as a society, we can see how successful we have been in spreading our Truths, and how many friendships we have formed whose influence brightens our lives.

'Tis true, we are chartered with the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association and hold a certificate from the Chicago Spiritualists' League, but we do not hold this as the reason why officers and members of both these Associations do so much for us, as we number these people among our friends, and know they are Spiritualists in every sense of the word whose aim is to do good in every way possible.

Dr. T. Wilkins, President of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, is one who sees good in all things, and to hear him speak is to be furnished with a new incentive for well-doing.

Dr. C. A. Burgess, President of the Chicago Spiritualists' League, is one of those forceful men who excel in in correctness of message-giving, and who, without money and without price use their entire energy for the comfort of their hearers.

Dr. J. H. Randall, ex-Secretary of the League, is another sincere man, who never fails to impress his audience with the truth. He has retired to a country home in Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bloom, members of the League, are always ready to assist—Mr. Bloom with his speaking, and Mrs. Bloom with her message giving—to add to the spiritual uplift of our society. These two friends work with us a great deal and none can appreciate them more than we.

Eugenie Rouble, Secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, never poses as a speaker, but usually finds a way to present some new views to show how Spiritualism has thrived under proper organization.

Added to these are Mr. J. H. Cozate and Mrs F. J. Wilson, exponents of New Thought, who give us much to think about and accept. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Howes have been called upon only to show they left a trail of the finest for the future.

Mrs. Alice Moore, an exceptional psychometrist, has gladdened many a sad heart.

Harry Burgess, a young man who has spent much of his life among the Indians, comes as a champion of the Red-Man, bearing us a message of their inborn belief in immortality, and their inborn desire to help the pale-face to a happier hunting-ground. With what we have learned of the Red Man from Mr. Burgess, we stand with him to a unit in a suggestion to Spiritualists especially, that they study the Indian if they would learn of a purer faith in the future and a better loyalty to our neighbor.

Miss Lena M. Schanbacher, a recent graduate of the Morris Pratt Institute, who was with us at our last three meetings, is a living exponent of Spiritualism, pure and undefiled, as well as a living eulogy to the Morris Pratt Institute. Her lectures show the training and pains-taking investigations made by thorough students, and her principles are those of the M. P. I.—Altruistic. Her honest and earnest convictions court a wonderful inspiration, and prophecy that she is in the work to stay. Her aim to keep the banner white and afloat. This takes courage and ability, but Miss Schanbacher has both, so the story is told. We look for her again in September, as her Chicago friends are eager to have her locate here indefinitely. We were pleased to see Mr. Jas. Metcalf in the audience, an attentive listener to Miss Schanbacher's last discourse. Mr. Metcalf is also an M. P. I. student, who expects to remain in Chicago until school opens.

We hear pleasing reports of the various students who graduated at the M. P. I. this year. One, Mr. Lawrence Hansen, is busy in Minnesota, and we hold a Milwaukee daily paper that tells how another student, a Miss Eula Golden, of Angola, Ind., held her audience deeply interested and made a marked impression in speaking of "What Is Lacking in a Girl's Education."

The Pastor, Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, and the officers of the Progressive Spiritual Society, have done their share. Mrs. Hilbert is always to be relied upon in every way, and but for her enthusiasm and good hard work, our officers would not be so active.

Everything has been done to make the meetings pleasant aand instructive. Our faithful Mr. John Faustch, seeing that we were supplied with flowers—both in quantity and quality. Likewise our good sister, Miss Eva Longley, whose interest in our meetings is so great that she gives her time and talent to furnish us with music.

The Progressive Thinker has been one of our truest missionaries; it kept our announcement fresh and up-to-date, besides furnishing our members with the best spiritual literature extant.

We have enrolled several new members and taken up the Lyceum work under the auspices of the State Association and League.

Mrs. Bloom is chairman and Mrs. Hilbert and Mrs. Schwahn, members of the North side committtee, one of three committees appointed by Dr. Wilkins to carry on the work, and we have every evidence of a fine Lyceum in September.

We realize we could not have done all this alone, and in making this report, say again, "We are first for the State Association; first for the League; first for The Progressive Thinker, and first for the Morris Pratt Institute, and all the time for the higher and larger Spiritualism.

BERTHA HANSEN, Sec'y.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

What It Is, and What Its Influence in the World.

To the Editor: In reading the article signed N. F. Ravlin, in your valuable paper of March 14, I am somewhat surprised at the sectarian mind expressed by a liberal and advanced thinker, causing me to say to the writer: Come, now, remove the goggles from your eyes and let us reason together. What is this wonderful bugbear call religion that you should be so afraid of it or of the name? And what has it done to enlighten and uplift the world of humanity.

To me it is now, and always has been Spiritualism, and its mission has ever been to raise, enlighten and benefit mankind. Let us see, for "by the fruit shall the tree be known." In as brief a way as I can, examine the fruit, we will open the old book of Time to find mankind in an inactive position—no teachers, no books, no learning save that to destroy, kill, subsist, live, die and go out as though they had not been. Such, I think you will agree with me that was the condition before we had any of those awful things called creeds or declarations of principles, to bind men and hold them together as a brotherhood, which constituted their religion.

Moses, as it appears to me, was chosen by the spirit forces to lead the people out of bondage. He was given the decalogue which has stood the test, and to-day is acknowledged to be good law and religion. Moses seemed to believe that he was in direct communication with God, which was not at all strange, as we are at this late date often deceived by the influences controlling.

To me it seems plain that from Moses down to the present time, the spirit world has been active and in earnest to help man up to a higher plane, and as it is a hard proposition to get the stream higher than the fountain or source, so the spirit world furnished such food as the physical world could digest. Like the little brook starting away up in the mountain of cold, snow and mist, or darkness and superstition, its course was towards warmth, light and strength. We follow it until we see it a mighty river, flowing onward towards the great reservoir or ocean, Truth. Each new religious creed or declaration of principles adding to this river and helping to increase its volume of usefulness for the benefit of this physical world of ours, and as I see it our own beautiful Scientific Spiritual Religion is but another branch flowing unto this mighty River of Truth, whose course is ever toward the great ocean of all Truth; and that it is necessary for us to have a declaration of principles to hold, unite and bind us together as a brotherhood, for the upbuilding of true living, true doing and an honest upright life. That in all life there is good, and that our religion is to cultivate, develop and beautify the good, withholding all support in thought or action from the wrong, remembering always that all men are our brothers, and as such have a demand on us and we on them.

Brothers, would you be ashamed to call that your religion? To me it seems necessary that we should have some way or be known in some way to the world whereby they could separate those that take our loose fitting and easily worn cloak to wear for their own personal benefit and our discredit.

We must have a declaration of principles and that declaration must be subscribed to by each member, and it will to them then become their religion, and the laws of the land will recognize it as such, and we will have a legal standing.

You ask, "What has filled the world with modern achievements? Has church done it? Has religion had anything to do with it?"

Answer: Yes, much, very much in the way of progress and advancement of mankind, Religion is credited as being the father of our public school system, our asylums, hospitals, homes for the destitute, orphans homes, almshouses and many other ways and means for the betterment of man's condition. To bring them together—care for each other, to live and lead a better life, to care for the family, be true to the wife, to love God and their neighbor as themselves, has always been the church, religion and Spiritual teaching. Until modern Spiritualism can form a better code of ethics, to me it would seem wise to follow the teachings and examples of our Elder Brother and Teacher, Jesus, and not spend so much energy in tearing down, but more in trying to follow and live the teaching and example set by that Brother and Teacher. When we are able to more fully digest the religion he taught and practiced, we will then be better fitted to formulate a new code of ethics, to elevate mankind to a higher plane. The tree is known and appreciated by the fruit it bears.

Again I quote from the writer: "The United States as a government is rushing on to the doom of great Babylon of old at a fearful rate of speed. Almost every department of government carries enough inbred corruption to sink the ship unless it is thrown overboard."

Again, brother, are you not unnecessarily aroused, or may not your digestive organs be impaired? Let us look back and judge the future by the past. Less than sixty years ago we did not have those "awful multi-millionaires," we did not have the "woeful emigration from all countries" that are not cursed with the trusts, live on ten cents a day, combines and millionaire, where men But we did have our own people working from sun-up to sun-down for fifty cents per day. We did pay twenty-five cents per yard for calico, and other goods in proportion. The farmer did sell his wheat for thirty-five cents per bushel, his corn at from five cents to eight, his pork from $1.25 to $1.50 per hundred pounds dressed, and all other farm products in proportion.

A gradual change came, and how? By a few men banding together, pooling their capital, forming a combine and building a short piece of railroad, then more and more and more combines or trusts. With the railroad came the development of the country, the increase of capital and the increased demand for labor, and the flood gates were opened and the poor from all countries found here a home and a welcome.

As money increased in quantity and decreased in interest value it went to building factories of all kinds and the price of labor advanced according to the demand, until to-day, notwithstanding the immigration from all countries, it is bringing a higher price than it ever has in the history of this glorious good country of ours.

Is there any good reason why the past should not be an index to the future? It is true men have grown very rich during the last fifty years, but are we not as a people receiving the benefit from their accumulation? Think of the contributions made to help advance mankind. I need not cite you to them; they are everywhere apparent.

The great aggregate of capital centered in manufacturing, making it possible and in fact has reduced the price on all goods to a per cent below what any single individual in a small way can produce (a little hard on the small dealer or factory), but the greatest good to the greatest number is good law and good religion.

So, brother, let us open our door to the less fortunate brother as long as in so doing our own children are not suffering thereby even though he may come from that "any" country and can live on ten cents a day, so long as he will conform to and obey the law, in this his new home. For we are all brothers. For "round and round we run, and ever will right come uppermost, and ever is justice done."

PRETTY GOOD TEST.

Spirit Hears Distant Conversation and Answers Same.

As Dr. H. V. Sweringen has related a good test of spirit return, and as I think we all ought to tell of good tests, to help straighten our course, I wish to relate one given to me and my brother long years ago.

I will first state that my brother was a good writing medium. He would go into a deep trance and spirits would write through him for hours.

About the year 1861 my brother held Spiritual meetings in Wisconsin, and one DeWitt Perry lived with him, and a man came one night and wanted the spirits to tell him what he had lost. DeWitt Perry went into a trance and told him he had lost a cowbell. The next question was, "Who has got it?" And the spirits wrote out, "We do not come back here to make trouble between man and man. We will not tell you who has it."

In the spring of 1864 I and my brother crossed the plains by wagons to Montana. We were in the flour trade when the miners took all the merchants had. My brother went to Salmon river, and I went to Deer Lodge, but my brother came to Deer Lodge about five years later and took up a homestead about four miles from my place. Dr. O. B. Whilford's son and his hired man, Ol. Colvin, attended my brother's evening circles, and one day my brother came up to my place and wanted me to go down to his place to see Colvin. He said the spirits had then held Colvin under control nearly three days, and he was afraid it would injure him, and he wanted me to go and see him. When I got there Colvin was walking around out in the prairie below the house, and my brother and I went across the public road to his cow corral, and sat on the fence. This put us fifteen or twenty rods from Mr. Colvin—so far that it was impossible for anyone to hear us talk, for we talked in a very low tone, and my brother said: "Charley, this spirit that is controlling Colvin says he is the same one that used to control DeWitt Perry in Wisconsin," and Colvin, or the spirit through Colvin, hallowed back—for he had to hallow to make us hear—"Yes, yes, I am the same spirit that used to control DeWitt Perry in Wisconsin, But I did not give my right name then. You recollect I said my name was Plato; but my true name is John Ming. And you remember a fellow came one night and wanted me to tell him what he had lost, and I told him what he had lost, but would not tell him who had got it."

Just then my brother said to me in an undertone, "Charley, you must remember that fellow's name. Let us see, what was it? The spirit hallowed immediately back: "Hold on, don't you tell him his name. I can tell him his name"—and he hallowed the name Haskal back to us; and I said to my brother, "Yes, that is the man, for I traded him a plow for a watch just before I left." Now this medium Colvin was so far off that it was impossible for him to hear me and my brother talk; but you will see that he or the spirit controlling him knew every word we said; and it surprised me at the time to see how he could answer up just at the right time of our conversation.

This I shall always have to consider a remarkable test.

A NEW CONCEPT OF THINGS.

Spiritualism, the Dawn of a New Civilization.

All the world does move, and any part thereof that does not move, must perish.

Spiritualism is as old as the universe, the life-giving and life-preserving part thereof. Spiritualism is, as the term is used, one feature of that phenomena termed electricity. Electricity has two genders, as the term is used, the positive and the passive. When these two genders commune harmoniously, developments result as storms in the clouds, vegetable and animal life. This development proceeds by by the law of affinity and the survival of the fittest.

The sun as a great positive magnet, casts its positive electric waves, seeking their affinity in the passive earth and atoms of matter that surround it. The passive elements responded; planets were conceived and born and by the same laws that evolved them into existence, planets have evolved vegetable and animal life. Spirit life is the latest development, that has been evolved from animal life, as the animal evolved from the vegetable, and the vegetable from the mineral. Spiritual life is the realm of thought, the science of the mind. It is as closely connected to animal life as the animal to the vegetable, the vegetable to the mineral. A wireless telegraph battery generating electric waves to transmit thought through space is a practical demonstration of a mental mental battery to transmit thought from mind to mind. It is as logical as the laws of gravitation, or that two and two make four.

A new era is now dawning upon human kind. Spiritualism which is the study of the world of mentalism, the latest development of organized existence on this earth, is coming to the front as the potent factor in organizing this world's ideals of happiness in this life and in the life to come, and the practical application of them to society and government.

Spiritualism must not be confounded with religion. Religion is a priestcraft trust, composed of faith, fear, ignorance and slavery with its votaries, and ministered with despotic power and relentless cruelty on the part of its devotees. SPIRITUALISM IS PURE AND HALLOWED AS THE SUNBEAM'S KISS TO THE MORNING ROSE, AS DEMOCRATIC AS THE WIND THAT BLOWS, AS JUST AS NATURE'S LAWS, UNCONTAMINATED BY PRIESTCRAFT, BIGOTRY AND MARTYR'S FIRES.

A man evolves from the material to the mental. He conceives some ideal to promote his happiness, and satisfy his wants. If he is a fully developed man, that ideal is the positive magnet of his existence, like material to build a house, the material being the passive element. The man who is positive becomes the creator of a house.

The priest being positive, looks over the passive chumps that surround him, and informs them that he is ordained by God to tell them what to do. If the chumps will obey the priest, he will send them to live with God and be happy when they die. If they don't mind him he will burn them up in hell. Of course the passive chumps don't know anything about it, and they acquiesce. The priest now takes up a collection, every tenth goat or whatever he can get. Right here despotism and capitalism commenced. Here the priest created despotic power for himself, imperial religion and wealth for his tools; slavery, ignorance and misfortune his handmaidens.

Religion may also be defined as hypnotism, as a snake hypnotizes a bird or a dog till it falls an easy prey. As a platform hypnotist controls his subject, so priestcraft, by wonder and amusement, faith and fear, gets control of the minds of its victims and compels them to upbuild the power of their oppressors and perpetuate their misfortunes and suffering.

Spiritualism seeks wisdom from nature's boundless sources of information. It drew the lines of geometry and astronomy; it inspired Bruno, and Christian religionists burned him at the stake because he was wiser and better than themselves. It has inspired the sage with wisdom, and nerved the patriot's arm. It sings our songs of love and devotion, adorns life's vales and towers, and baptizes with holy incense of life's choicest flowers; but this does not imply that there are no shucks and chaff mingled with Spiritualism.

The world's Christian religion, both Catholic and Protestant, are now combining to suppress free thought, free speech, free press, and indirectly the liberties of the American people. Spiritualism is marked as its especial victim. Society and government are in a transition state. It is time for true men and women to awake and come to action. Those who are not in favor of government by a church and state aristocracy in the interest of concentrated wealth; should unite against such government.

Calls Heaven a School for Higher Mathematics.

East Hampton, Mass., June 14.—In his baccalaureate serman at Williston Seminary to-day the Rev. C. H. Hamlin announced that in future heaven will be populated by up-to-date souls. Death, he said, was really a kind of graduation, a passing from one spiritual condition to a loftier spiritual condition.

The more rarefied the mind at death he declared, the more justifiable its expectation of a greater rarefaction in paradise. "The more advanced minds," said he, "see in the Eternal City a place of endless duration to be joyously employed in attention to the higher mathematics.

As "figures never lie," it is natural that heaven should be their home.

HER VISION CAME TRUE.

Striking Experience of a Young Lady in Nebraska.

To the Editor: I will relate to you a vision which proved to be true. I was then fifteen years old, and taking a summer course in a college in W———, in 1905. One afternoon I was coming from the Com. room, and well warmed up with study, entered the library, and seated myself in front of a large window, where the breezes came in and playfully fluttered the pages in my book. I was gazing out, enjoying the cool breezes when my gaze rested on a bare trodden spot where basket ball was played. I noted the ground would seem to rise and fall, reminding me of the waves on a lake. Thinking it was the wind blowing the dust, I again resumed my studies, but my eyes would involuntarily gaze on that bare spot; it was useless to resist it; my eyes were held like being drawn by magnet force.

I was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and at the time knew it was spirits working and wanted me to perceive what they would show to me. I gazed on that spot and again noticed the earth forming in waves; the waves would lash up against the grass and disappear; it was kept up until it appeared as a lake. Suddenly a boat appeared that held a group of young, merry-looking people. It then seemed to disappear or turn over, then the waves were flowing more rapidly and appeared confused and broken. I then noticed a throng on the shore, and from out the crowd came two or three men carrying a boat, put it in the water and rowed rapidly, then stopped, lifted a form out of the water (it appeared lifeless), hurriedly rowed to the shore. I then saw a bowed head as though in a great grief. It all disappeared, the little bare spot was as before. I then went to my class, doubting but what it was a vivid imagination.

The next or second day news was brought to a family that their son while rowing with a group of young people in Omaha was drowned, in fact it related the news as I had seen it in or on that little spot of ground.

I then went to the funeral with my college chum, and the corpse appeared in form and stature as I had clearly seen taken in the small boat. Above in the front pew, where those mourners sat, with head dropping in keenest grief, were what I had also seen on the shore, near the small spot of ground.

I could write more of my experience, but will not take up more space in our valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker. I would be pleased to receive letters from some of our men and women that harvest in the Spiritual field, as in our little village, mother, brother and I are the only Spiritual workers, and receive a goodly share of jeers. But "the sword of truth cuts both ways."

Yours for righteousness,

The Winnowing Process.

With each succeeding issue of your excellent paper, I see more closely and understand more fully, the grand visions and lessons given me by my angel guides.

Years ago I was shown how angels working upon mortals, would turn the inside of all fraudulent and corrupt practices out to public view, to become agitated, passed thereon, then removed from general practice, etc. This is proof to me that you are working on your lines of service to the public, jointly with the immortals, to cleanse this wing "Spiritualism," of its corruption, perpetrated under the banner of Spiritualism and pretended mediumship.

I am very, very sorry that such are in our ranks, but the world's people, in all their dealings and avocations, are being turned to the surface, which means a better condition is ahead, when these unpleasant things have been duly ventilated. In these merging processes going on all about us, the impure is pressed forth from all covered recesses, and by the vibratory to and fro force currents, is removed and dropped into the grinding processes of God's mills, to be fitted for useful service again, on planes of their degree of manifested life, substances and force.

I have often been shown in clear vision, the operations of the regenerating processes of mankind, as well as of substance and force. They are all seemingly paradoxical, receding and advancing being the processes of these grand interactive force-plays. I know therefore, that the world's people are advancing, while seemingly going backward.

Mind is gaining every day, in its grasp upon great universal truths, and the science and laws of nature.

There are no losses and no retrogression. Onward is the course of all things we behold and take cognizance of.

As I write the foregoing, I am approached by a spirit that says; "The present is a time of greatest importance. Heaven and Earth have joined forces for the forth-bringing of eternal truths and the winnowing of the chaff from the pure grain. All who fearlessly wage war against workers of deception and wrong, on any lines, become thereby crowned as immortal heroes, while yet residing in forms of clay; but discretion as to the wording of preferred charges, especially against those who pose as mediums, is necessary, for reason, that all such work, to some extent, jointly with earth-bound spirits, a class intelligent in a way, but possessing no spiritual unfoldment. These are ever on the alert to search in the morals or general status of those who bring the impurities of their so-called mediums before the people, and they sometimes visit unlawful harm upon such true and noble workers, if, perchance, they find an open gap about them.

"Now, as to those possessing at the outset some mediumistic powers, but are not persons of good morals or principles, they are in many cases used as makeshifts in these merging processes above referred to. When such parts, wherein they could so serve, are finished, this power is withdrawn.

"It is then that they resort to inventions purely mortal. This they do to their undoing, to bring themselves to justice, to be prohibited from such practices. Many were called as workers in these interactive spiritual labors, but not many were found absolutely true and faithful to this calling, hence results as they are realized prove this sad fact."

OPPORTUNITY IN LIFE.

He Who Bends His Knee Before Aught Else But God, Acts as the Fool Who Throws Away Opportunity.

The token of maturity in this earthly life is the recognition by the individual of the fact that things are not what they seem, to use the common phrase, and that it is dangerous to take them at their face value. The child follows impulsively the influence of the moment, an influence controlled almost invariably by its animal or lower nature.

As the child develops towards maturity, the ideal of its life striving rises higher and it finds, on looking back, that the satisfaction of success in this mental activity far outlasts that formerly obtained in tasting the sweets of successful animal desire.

Later on in life, the higher human natures, struck with the purely ephemeral and earthly attributes of the successful exercise of ambitious activities, continue seeking further for a higher goal toward which to direct their efforts.

They turn toward their innermost consciousness for the answer their perception is not yet capable of seeing reflected throughout the whole of Nature around them on every side.

By continually questioning thus their Higher Self, their mental perception broadens out and decides ever with increasing Justice and increasing Love.

They cannot do this long without applying these two great principles they find within themselves to the manifestations of the objective world without, with the result that, struck by the greater and greater reaches of thought influence which open up to them, they forcibly come to the conception of a Sublime Influence which MUST be the embodiment of Justice and of Love. In other words, they have been brought to realize that there is a God above us who contains us all together with all the wondrous manifestations of force and matter we find ourselves surrounded by!

Unfortunately, the animal nature still predominating in material earthly life, it is only the few who reach the latter stage before they pass away. By far the greater mass of mankind never get beyond the first stage, the rest reaching the second.

The predominating influence before which those in the first stage bend the knee and the goal they recognize for their efforts, is mere physical satisfaction.

That of those in the second stage, is mental satisfaction.

That of those in the third stage, is spiritual development which, through the following of the dictates of our higher selves, recognizes alone as paramount and guiding influence for the individual the certainty of successfully ever coming nearer to that Sublime Influence of Love we call our Father in heaven.

It is thus evident that, if we bend the knee at the behest of any lesser influence, we are thereby losing the opportunity for spiritual progress and putting off the day when we shall become ourselves the embodiment of Love in our very Being, thus attaining the highest happiness it is possible for us to conceive of in our present earthly state.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH SOCIETY.

First General Meeting is Held.—A Possible Test for Death.

The first general meeting of the Canadian Society of Psychical Research was held at the residence of Mrs. Flora McDonald Denison, 22 Carlton street.

Friday evening, 1st inst., Dr. John S. King, the president, read a very interesting and instructive paper on "Hypnosis and Some of Its Phenomena," which was followed by hypnotic demonstrations by Mrs. Denison and a general discussion of the subject by the members.

By unanimous resolution the paper was ordered to be printed in the society's journal.

The Secretary, Herbert O. Paull, read a very interesting letter from Prof. Elmer Gates of the Elmer Gates Laboratories, Washington, D. C., relative to the reports which have recently appeared in the papers affirming that Dr. Gates has seen through the X-rays the "soul of a rat."

Dr. Gates denies that he said he had seen the soul of a rat, but says:

"What I therefore discovered is a new method of diagnosis; I also found that short electric waves find a living body opaque and a dead body transparent, and this is therefore a possible test of death.

"It may be that some of these waves would find a soul-organism (if there is one), opaque, and we would then have a new method of psychic research, but I did not say that I had seen the soul of a rat."

The next general meeting of the society will be held in September.—Sunday World.

THE HIGHER MEANING.

What It Is to Be a Spiritualist.

I hope you will let me speak to the Spiritualists who read The Progressive Thinker, and I wish all Spiritualists did, for I am sure it is a wonderful educator. I want to ask what it is to be a Spiritualist? And do we as a class realize as we should? It is not alone to have been convinced that the soul or spirit of men is given by the God of nature or laws of the universe a continued conscious existence with power under the law of returning and proving its identity, but that we as spirits now, should live the noblest, purest—love justice and virtue, that we can appreciate or conceive of. That progression is the law of life here and now as well as in the future life, and that we should by all means in our power strive to unfold our soul life to be the better for being a Spiritualist.

Let us not be envious of one another, let us not be revengeful and for some fancied wrong done to us live to make it unpleasant for the one we think did not do right. Who of us is perfect—who but makes mistakes? And how can we afford to cherish unkind feelings toward another? Surely we poison the springs of our own being if we cultivate such feelings.

I would that all could see that only loving kindness should be our return for wrong done to us, and so many times a misunderstanding is all the cause of inharmony between you and your friend.

Oh, Spiritualists, rise up into higher life, the nobler thought and action here and now. The reward is imminent—you cannot have a generous thought or do a noble act without its first blessing yourself and then others.

Let us live the radiant life, let us make heaven here, for it is sure to be here—let us help to bring it. If we purify our own lives, strive for nobler attainment, to live the golden rule, it seems to me all the fakes would be weeded out. If all who bear the beautiful name of Spiritualists should stand before the world as honest and true, as reformers, as striving for soul growth, as lovers of fellow men, as helpers in every good word and work, feeling that to be in this class means to be a reformer of one at least—what a grand upliftment would be felt all along the line.

Oh, for a spirit of renewed consecration to serve suffering humanity in aid of the dear spirit friends and who work so unselfishly, so continuously, whenever they can find a channel through which to give expression of their desires. This to me seems the only excuse for our living—to unfold into the divine. I know some will have so much farther to go to get there, but let us all be on the road—all sisters and brothers, loving and aiding all, especially the lowest.

THOUGHT A LIVING FORCE.

The Science of Telegraphy and Telepathy.

It is admitted by many of our most critical scientists, who have made a study of the actions of the human mind, that a telepathic influence of mind over mind is often exerted, regardless of propinquity. If a sympathy between minds be established, by affection or interest, the action which takes place is akin to that of wireless telegraphy, when the receiver is keyed in a somewhat perfect tone with the transmitter. With that sympathy the thought of one may be transferred to the other so as to direct his thoughts in certain lines, and to even unconsciously govern his actions.

It must be understood that we live in a universe of forces. And, also, that thought is a force which is organized into an entity. Worcester defines thought as a "creation of the mind capable of an existence independent of the mind that created it." In this lies its superiority above other forces. We are surrounded by thoughts, and whenever we become receptive we are influenced by them; and sometimes we unconsciously take the thoughts of others to us as our own. Literature is full of such instances. A wise man once said, "there is nothing new under the sun." And science recognizes this as a broad statement of the truth.

What are sometimes called the physical forces, such as light, heat, electricity, magnetism, gravitation, molecular attraction, and repulsion, and a hundred others, make every atom of the universe thrill and throb with a restless activity. Everything in nature is in motion. Scientists love to dwell amid these forces and study the results of their activities.

Thought is a living force. It controls all other forces. It binds them in bands of iron and of steel. It makes the engine, the revolving dynamo, converts one force into another, and rides over the sea of forces, and makes the obedient waves obey his will. With a kindly power thought commands. The willing light brings to him the secrets of all space, lightnings carry his vocal words, the tireless steam, at his behests, blots out the miles, and the terrible ocean is made the playground of commerce. And mind can talk with mind in sympathy regardless of distance or physical conditions. Thought is the carrier of communications of mind to mind. Telepathy binds continents together. And why not worlds? And why not states of being?

If ever the claims of the communion of departed spirits with living men shall be established, it must be along these lines, and scientifically; and not by the disgusting jugglery and tomfoolery of what is known as "physical manifestations."

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 4, 1908 NO. 971

THE EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Progressive Spiritual Society of Chicago.

In closing our meetings for the season we thought it best to make a short report of the work accomplished during the past year, with the gratitude we hold for all the friends who so willingly extended their help, our only prompter.

When we reflect upon the eight years of work done, as a society, we can see how successful we have been in spreading our Truths, and how many friendships we have formed whose influence brightens our lives.

'Tis true, we are chartered with the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association and hold a certificate from the Chicago Spiritualists' League, but we do not hold this as the reason why officers and members of both these Associations do so much for us, as we number these people among our friends, and know they are Spiritualists in every sense of the word whose aim is to do good in every way possible.

Dr. T. Wilkins, President of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, is one who sees good in all things, and to hear him speak is to be furnished with a new incentive for well-doing.

Dr. C. A. Burgess, President of the Chicago Spiritualists' League, is one of those forceful men who excel in in correctness of message-giving, and who, without money and without price use their entire energy for the comfort of their hearers.

Dr. J. H. Randall, ex-Secretary of the League, is another sincere man, who never fails to impress his audience with the truth. He has retired to a country home in Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bloom, members of the League, are always ready to assist—Mr. Bloom with his speaking, and Mrs. Bloom with her message giving—to add to the spiritual uplift of our society. These two friends work with us a great deal and none can appreciate them more than we.

Eugenie Rouble, Secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, never poses as a speaker, but usually finds a way to present some new views to show how Spiritualism has thrived under proper organization.

Added to these are Mr. J. H. Cozate and Mrs F. J. Wilson, exponents of New Thought, who give us much to think about and accept. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Howes have been called upon only to show they left a trail of the finest for the future.

Mrs. Alice Moore, an exceptional psychometrist, has gladdened many a sad heart.

Harry Burgess, a young man who has spent much of his life among the Indians, comes as a champion of the Red-Man, bearing us a message of their inborn belief in immortality, and their inborn desire to help the pale-face to a happier hunting-ground. With what we have learned of the Red Man from Mr. Burgess, we stand with him to a unit in a suggestion to Spiritualists especially, that they study the Indian if they would learn of a purer faith in the future and a better loyalty to our neighbor.

Miss Lena M. Schanbacher, a recent graduate of the Morris Pratt Institute, who was with us at our last three meetings, is a living exponent of Spiritualism, pure and undefiled, as well as a living eulogy to the Morris Pratt Institute. Her lectures show the training and pains-taking investigations made by thorough students, and her principles are those of the M. P. I.—Altruistic. Her honest and earnest convictions court a wonderful inspiration, and prophecy that she is in the work to stay. Her aim to keep the banner white and afloat. This takes courage and ability, but Miss Schanbacher has both, so the story is told. We look for her again in September, as her Chicago friends are eager to have her locate here indefinitely. We were pleased to see Mr. Jas. Metcalf in the audience, an attentive listener to Miss Schanbacher's last discourse. Mr. Metcalf is also an M. P. I. student, who expects to remain in Chicago until school opens.

We hear pleasing reports of the various students who graduated at the M. P. I. this year. One, Mr. Lawrence Hansen, is busy in Minnesota, and we hold a Milwaukee daily paper that tells how another student, a Miss Eula Golden, of Angola, Ind., held her audience deeply interested and made a marked impression in speaking of "What Is Lacking in a Girl's Education."

The Pastor, Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, and the officers of the Progressive Spiritual Society, have done their share. Mrs. Hilbert is always to be relied upon in every way, and but for her enthusiasm and good hard work, our officers would not be so active.

Everything has been done to make the meetings pleasant aand instructive. Our faithful Mr. John Faustch, seeing that we were supplied with flowers—both in quantity and quality. Likewise our good sister, Miss Eva Longley, whose interest in our meetings is so great that she gives her time and talent to furnish us with music.

The Progressive Thinker has been one of our truest missionaries; it kept our announcement fresh and up-to-date, besides furnishing our members with the best spiritual literature extant.

We have enrolled several new members and taken up the Lyceum work under the auspices of the State Association and League.

Mrs. Bloom is chairman and Mrs. Hilbert and Mrs. Schwahn, members of the North side committtee, one of three committees appointed by Dr. Wilkins to carry on the work, and we have every evidence of a fine Lyceum in September.

We realize we could not have done all this alone, and in making this report, say again, "We are first for the State Association; first for the League; first for The Progressive Thinker, and first for the Morris Pratt Institute, and all the time for the higher and larger Spiritualism.

BERTHA HANSEN, Sec'y.

THOUGHTS ON RELIGION.

What It Is, and What Its Influence in the World.

To the Editor: In reading the article signed N. F. Ravlin, in your valuable paper of March 14, I am somewhat surprised at the sectarian mind expressed by a liberal and advanced thinker, causing me to say to the writer: Come, now, remove the goggles from your eyes and let us reason together. What is this wonderful bugbear call religion that you should be so afraid of it or of the name? And what has it done to enlighten and uplift the world of humanity.

To me it is now, and always has been Spiritualism, and its mission has ever been to raise, enlighten and benefit mankind. Let us see, for "by the fruit shall the tree be known." In as brief a way as I can, examine the fruit, we will open the old book of Time to find mankind in an inactive position—no teachers, no books, no learning save that to destroy, kill, subsist, live, die and go out as though they had not been. Such, I think you will agree with me that was the condition before we had any of those awful things called creeds or declarations of principles, to bind men and hold them together as a brotherhood, which constituted their religion.

Moses, as it appears to me, was chosen by the spirit forces to lead the people out of bondage. He was given the decalogue which has stood the test, and to-day is acknowledged to be good law and religion. Moses seemed to believe that he was in direct communication with God, which was not at all strange, as we are at this late date often deceived by the influences controlling.

To me it seems plain that from Moses down to the present time, the spirit world has been active and in earnest to help man up to a higher plane, and as it is a hard proposition to get the stream higher than the fountain or source, so the spirit world furnished such food as the physical world could digest. Like the little brook starting away up in the mountain of cold, snow and mist, or darkness and superstition, its course was towards warmth, light and strength. We follow it until we see it a mighty river, flowing onward towards the great reservoir or ocean, Truth. Each new religious creed or declaration of principles adding to this river and helping to increase its volume of usefulness for the benefit of this physical world of ours, and as I see it our own beautiful Scientific Spiritual Religion is but another branch flowing unto this mighty River of Truth, whose course is ever toward the great ocean of all Truth; and that it is necessary for us to have a declaration of principles to hold, unite and bind us together as a brotherhood, for the upbuilding of true living, true doing and an honest upright life. That in all life there is good, and that our religion is to cultivate, develop and beautify the good, withholding all support in thought or action from the wrong, remembering always that all men are our brothers, and as such have a demand on us and we on them.

Brothers, would you be ashamed to call that your religion? To me it seems necessary that we should have some way or be known in some way to the world whereby they could separate those that take our loose fitting and easily worn cloak to wear for their own personal benefit and our discredit.

We must have a declaration of principles and that declaration must be subscribed to by each member, and it will to them then become their religion, and the laws of the land will recognize it as such, and we will have a legal standing.

You ask, "What has filled the world with modern achievements? Has church done it? Has religion had anything to do with it?"

Answer: Yes, much, very much in the way of progress and advancement of mankind. Religion is credited as being the father of our public school system, our asylums, hospitals, homes for the destitute, orphans homes, almshouses and many other ways and means for the betterment of man's condition. To bring them together—care for each other, to live and lead a better life, to care for the family, be true to the wife, to love God and their neighbor as themselves, has always been the church, religion and Spiritual teaching. Until modern Spiritualism can form a better code of ethics, to me it would seem wise to follow the teachings and examples of our Elder Brother and Teacher, Jesus, and not spend so much energy in tearing down, but more in trying to follow and live the teaching and example set by that Brother and Teacher. When we are able to more fully digest the religion he taught and practiced, we will then be better fitted to formulate a new code of ethics, to elevate mankind to a higher plane. The tree is known and appreciated by the fruit it bears.

Again I quote from the writer: "The United States as a govenrment is rushing on to the doom of great Babylon of old at a fearful rate of speed. Almost every department of government carries enough inbred corruption to sink the ship unless it is thrown overboard."

Again, brother, are you not unnecessarily aroused, or may not your digestive organs be impaired? Let us look back and judge the future by the past. Less than sixty years ago we did not have those "awful multi-millionaires," we did not have the "woeful emigration from all countries" that are not cursed with the trusts, live on ten cents a day, combines and millionaire, where men

But we did have our own people working from sun-up to sun-down for fifty cents per day. We did pay twenty-five cents per yard for calico, and other goods in proportion. The farmer did sell his wheat for thirty-five cents per bushel, his corn at from five cents to eight, his pork from $1.25 to $1.50 per hundred pounds dressed, and all other farm products in proportion.

A gradual change came, and how? By a few men banding together, pooling their capital, forming a combination and building a short piece of railroad, then more and more and more combines or trusts. With the railroad came the development of the country, the increase of capital and the increased demand for labor, and the flood gates were opened and the poor from all countries found here a home and a welcome.

As money increased in quantity and decreased in interest value it went to building factories of all kinds and the price of labor advanced according to the demand, until to-day, notwithstanding the immigration from all countries, it is bringing a higher price than it ever has in the history of this glorious good country of ours.

Is there any good reason why the past should not be an index to the future? It is true men have grown very rich during the last fifty years, but are we not as a people receiving the benefit from their accumulation? Think of the contributions made to help advance mankind. I need not cite you to them; they are everywhere apparent.

The great aggregate of capital centered in manufacturing, making it possible and in fact has reduced the price on all goods to a per cent below what any single individual in a small way can produce (a little hard on the small dealer or factory), but the greatest good to the greatest number is good law and good religion.

So, brother, let us open our door to the less fortunate brother as long as in so doing our own children are not suffering thereby even though he may come from that "any" country and can live on ten cents a day, so long as he will conform to and obey the law, in this his new home. For we are all brothers. For "round and round we run, and ever will right come uppermost, and ever is justice done."

PRETTY GOOD TEST.

Spirit Hears Distant Conversation and Answers Same.

As Dr. H. V. Sweringen has related a good test of spirit return, and as I think we all ought to tell of good tests, to help straighten our course, I wish to relate one given to me and my brother long years ago.

I will first state that my brother was a good writing medium. He would go into a deep trance and spirits would write through him for hours.

About the year 1861 my brother held Spiritual meetings in Wisconsin, and one DeWitt Perry lived with him, and a man came one night and wanted the spirits to tell him what he had lost. DeWitt Perry went into a trance and told him he had lost a cowbell. The next question was, "Who has got it?" And the spirits wrote out, "We do not come back here to make trouble between man and man. We will not tell you who has it."

In the spring of 1864 I and my brother crossed the plains by wagons to Montana. We were in the flour trade when the miners took all the merchants had. My brother went to Salmon river, and I went to Deer Lodge, but my brother came to Deer Lodge about five years later and took up a homestead about four miles from my place. Dr. O. B. Whilford's son and his hired man, Ol. Colvin, attended my brother's evening circles, and one day my brother came up to my place and wanted me to go down to his place to see Colvin. He said the spirits had then held Colvin under control nearly three days, and he was afraid it would injure him, and he wanted me to go and see him. When I got there Colvin was walking around out in the prairie below the house, and my brother and I went across the public road to his cow corral, and sat on the fence. This put us fifteen or twenty rods from Mr. Colvin—so far that it was impossible for anyone to hear us talk, for we talked in a very low tone, and my brother said: "Charley, this spirit that is controlling Colvin says he is the same one that used to control DeWitt Perry in Wisconsin," and Colvin, or the spirit through Colvin, hallowed back—for he had to hallow to make us hear—"Yes, yes, I am the same spirit that used to control DeWitt Perry in Wisconsin. But I did not give my right name then. You recollect I said my name was Plato; but my true name is John Ming. And you remember a fellow came one night and wanted me to tell him what he had lost, and I told him what he had lost, but would not tell him who had got it."

Just then my brother said to me in an undertone, "Charley, you must remember that fellow's name. Let us see, what was it? The spirit hallowed immediately back: "Hold on, don't you tell him his name. I can tell him his name"—and he hallowed the name Haskal back to us; and I said to my brother, "Yes, that is the man, for I traded him a plow for a watch just before I left." Now this medium Colvin was so far off that it was impossible for him to hear me and my brother talk; but you will see that he or the spirit controlling him knew every word we said; and it surprised me at the time to see how he could answer up just at the right time of our conversation.

This I shall always have to consider a remarkable test.

A NEW CONCEPT OF THINGS.

Spiritualism, the Dawn of a New Civilization.

All the world does move, and any part thereof that does not move, must perish.

Spiritualism is as old as the universe, the life-giving and life-preserving part thereof. Spiritualism is, as the term is used, one feature of that phenomena termed electricity. Electricity has two genders, as the term is used, the positive and the passive. When these two genders commune harmoniously, developments result as storms in the clouds, vegetable and animal life. This development proceeds by by the law of affinity and the survival of the fittest.

The sun as a great positive magnet, casts its positive electric waves, seeking their affinity in the passive earth and atoms of matter that surround it. The passive elements responded, planets were conceived and born and by the same laws that evolved them into existence, planets have evolved vegetable and animal life. Spirit life is the latest development, that has been evolved from animal life, as the animal evolved from the vegetable, and the vegetable from the mineral. Spiritual life is the realm of thought, the science of the mind. It is as closely connected to animal life as the animal to the vegetable, the vegetable to the mineral. A wireless telegraph battery generating electric waves to transmit thought through space is a practical demonstration of a mental mental battery to transmit thought from mind to mind. It is as logical as the laws of gravitation, or that two and two make four.

A new era is now dawning upon human kind. Spiritualism which is the study of the world of mentalism, the latest development of organized existence on this earth, is coming to the front as the potent factor in organizing this world's ideals of happiness in this life and in the life to come, and the practical application of them to society and government.

Spiritualism must not be confounded with religion. Religion is a priestcraft trust, composed of faith, fear, ignorance and slavery with its votaries, and ministered with despotic power and relentless cruelty on the part of its devotees. SPIRITUALISM IS PURE AND HALLOWED AS THE SUNBEAM'S KISS TO THE MORNING ROSE, AS DEMOCRATIC AS THE WIND THAT BLOWS, AS JUST AS NATURE'S LAWS, UNCONTAMINATED BY PRIESTCRAFT, BIGOTRY AND MARTYR'S FIRES.

A man evolves from the material to the mental. He conceives some ideal to promote his happiness, and satisfy his wants. If he is a fully developed man, that ideal is the positive magnet of his existence, like material to build a house, the material being the passive element. The man who is positive becomes the creator of a house.

The priest being positive, looks over the passive chumps that surround him, and informs them that he is ordained by God to tell them what to do. If the chumps will obey the priest, he will send them to live with God and be happy when they die. If they don't mind him he will burn them up in hell. Of course the passive chumps don't know anything about it, and they acquiesce. The priest now takes up a collection, every tenth goat or whatever he can get. Right here despotism and capitalism commenced. Here the priest created despotic power for himself, imperial religion and wealth for his tools; slavery, ignorance and misfortune his handmaidens.

Religion may also be defined as hypnotism, as a snake hypnotizes a bird or a dog till it falls an easy prey. As a platform hypnotist controls his subject, so priestcraft, by wonder and amusement, faith and fear, gets control of the minds of its victims and compels them to upbuild the power of their oppressors and perpetuate their misfortunes and suffering.

Spiritualism seeks wisdom from nature's boundless sources of information. It drew the lines of geometry and astronomy; it inspired Bruno, and Christian religionists burned him at the stake because he was wiser and better than themselves. It has inspired the sage with wisdom, and nerved the patriot's arm. It sings our songs of love and devotion, adorns life's vales and bowers, and baptizes with holy incense of life's choicest flowers; but this does not imply that there are no shucks and chaff mingled with Spiritualism.

The world's Christian religion, both Catholic and Protestant, are now combining to suppress free thought, free speech, free press, and indirectly the liberties of the American people. Spiritualism is marked as its especial victim. Society and government are in a transition state. It is time for true men and women to awake and come to action. Those who are not in favor of government by a church and state aristocracy, in the interest of concentrated wealth, should unite against such government.

Calls Heaven a School for Higher Mathematics.

East Hampton, Mass., June 14.—In his baccalaureate sermon at Williston Seminary to-day the Rev. C. H. Hamlin announced that in future heaven will be populated by up-to-date souls. Death, he said, was really a kind of graduation, a passing from one spiritual condition to a loftier spiritual condition.

The more rarefied the mind at death he declared, the more justifiable its expectation of a greater rarefaction in paradise. "The more advanced minds," said he, "see in the Eternal City a place of endless duration to be joyously employed in attention to the higher mathematics.

As "figures never lie," it is natural that heaven should be their home.

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit, and seldom draw to their full extent. —Horace Walpole.

HER VISION CAME TRUE.

Striking Experience of a Young Lady in Nebraska.

To the Editor: I will relate to you a vision which proved to be true. I was then fifteen years old, and taking a summer course in a college in W———, in 1905. One afternoon I was coming from the Com. room, and well warmed up with study, entered the library, and seated myself in front of a large window, where the breezes came in and playfully fluttered the pages in my book. I was gazing out, enjoying the cool breezes when my gaze rested on a bare trodden spot where basket ball was played. I noted the ground would seem to rise and fall, reminding me of the waves on a lake. Thinking it was the wind blowing the dust, I again resumed my studies, but my eyes would involuntarily gaze on that bare spot; it was useless to resist it; my eyes were held like being drawn by magnet force.

I was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and at the time knew it was spirits working and wanted me to perceive what they would show to me. I gazed on that spot and again noticed the earth forming in waves; the waves would lash up against the grass and disappear; it was kept up until it appeared as a lake. Suddenly a boat appeared that held a group of young, merry-looking people. It then seemed to disappear or turn over, then the waves were flowing more rapidly and appeared confused and broken. I then noticed a throng on the shore, and from out the crowd came two or three men carrying a boat, put it in the water and rowed rapidly, then stopped, lifted a form out of the water (it appeared lifeless), hurriedly rowed to the shore. I then saw a bowed head as though in a great grief. It all disappeared, the little bare spot was as before. I then went to my class, doubting but what it was a vivid imagination.

The next or second day news was brought to a family that their son while rowing with a group of young people in Omaha was drowned, in fact it related the news as I had seen it in or on that little spot of ground.

I then went to the funeral with my college chum, and the corpse appeared in form and stature as I had clearly seen taken in the small boat. Above in the front pew, where those mourners sat, with head dropping in keenest grief, were what I had also seen on the shore, near the small spot of ground.

I could write more of my experience, but will not take up more space in our valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker. I would be pleased to receive letters from some of our men and women that harvest in the Spiritual field, as in our little village, mother, brother and I are the only Spiritual workers, and receive a goodly share of jaers. But "the sword of truth cuts both ways."

Yours for righteousness,

MISS MARIE H. SHAFER.

The Winnowing Process.

With each succeeding issue of your excellent paper, I see more closely and understand more fully, the grand visions and lessons given me by my angel guides.

Years ago I was shown how angels working upon mortals, would turn the inside of all fraudulent and corrupt practices out to public view, to become agitated, passed thereon, then removed from general practice, etc. This is proof to me that you are working on your lines of service to the public, jointly with the immortals, to cleanse this wing "Spiritualism," of its corruption, perpetrated under the banner of Spiritualism and pretended mediumship.

I am very, very sorry that such are in our ranks, but the world's people, in all their dealings and avocations, are being turned to the surface, which means a better condition is ahead, when these unpleasant things have been duly ventilated. In these merging processes going on all about us, the impure is pressed forth from all covered recesses, and by the vibratory to and fro force currents, is removed and dropped into the grinding processes of God's mills, to be fitted for useful service again, on planes of their degree of manifested life, substances and force.

I have often been shown in clear vision, the operations of the regenerating processes of mankind, as well as of substance and force. They are all seemingly paradoxical, receding and advancing being the processes of these grand interactive force-plays. I know therefore, that the world's people are advancing, while seemingly going backward.

Mind is gaining every day, in its grasp upon great universal truths, and the science and laws of nature.

There are no losses and no retrogression. Onward is the course of all things we behold and take cognizance of.

As I write the foregoing, I am approached by a spirit that says: "The present is a time of greatest importance. Heaven and Earth have joined forces for the forth-bringing of eternal truths and the winnowing of the chaff from the pure grain. All who fearlessly wage war against workers of deception and wrong, on any lines, become thereby crowned as immortal heroes, while yet residing in forms of clay; but discretion as to the wording of preferred charges, especially against those who pose as mediums, is necessary, for reason, that all such work, to some extent, jointly with earth-bound spirits, a class intelligent in a way, but possessing no spiritual unfoldment. These are ever on the alert to search in the morals or general status of those who bring the impurities of their so-called mediums before the people, and they sometimes visit unlawful harm upon such true and noble workers, if, perchance, they find an open gap about them.

"Now, as to those possessing at the outset some mediumistic powers, but are not persons of good morals or principles, they are in many cases used as makeshifts in these merging processes above referred to. When such parts, wherein they could so serve, are finished, this power is withdrawn.

"It is then that they resort to inventions purely mortal. This they do to their undoing, to bring themselves to justice, to be prohibited from such practices. Many were called as workers in these interactive spiritual labors, but not many were found absolutely true and faithful to this calling, hence results as they are realized prove this sad fact."

OPPORTUNITY IN LIFE.

He Who Bends His Knee Before Aught Else But God, Acts as the Fool Who Throws Away Opportunity.

The token of maturity in this earthly life is the recognition by the individual of the fact that things are not what they seem, to use the common phrase, and that it is dangerous to take them at their face value. The child follows impulsively the influence of the moment, an influence controlled almost invariably by its animal or lower nature.

As the child develops towards maturity, the ideal of its life striving rises higher and it finds, on looking back, that the satisfaction of success in this mental activity far outlasts that formerly obtained in tasting the sweets of successful animal desire.

Later on in life, the higher human natures, struck with the purely ephemeral and earthly attributes of the successful exercise of ambitious activities, continue seeking further for a higher goal toward which to direct their efforts.

They turn toward their innermost consciousness for the answer their perception is not yet capable of seeing reflected throughout the whole of Nature around them on every side.

By continually questioning thus their Higher Self, their mental perception broadens out and decides ever with increasing Justice and increasing Love.

They cannot do this long without applying these two great principles they find within themselves to the manifestations of the objective world without, with the result that, struck by the greater and greater reaches of thought influence which open up to them, they forcibly come to the conception of a Sublime Influence which MUST be the embodiment of Justice and of Love. In other words, they have been brought to realize that there is a God above us who contains us all together with all the wondrous manifestations of force and matter we find ourselves surrounded by!

Unfortunately, the animal nature still predominating in material earthly life, it is only the few who reach the latter stage before they pass away. By far the greater mass of mankind never get beyond the first stage, the rest reaching the second.

The predominating influence before which those in the first stage bend the knee and the goal they recognize for their efforts, is mere physical satisfaction.

That of those in the second stage, is mental satisfaction.

That of those in the third stage, is spiritual development which, through the following of the dictates of our higher selves, recognizes alone as paramount and guiding influence for the individual the certainty of successfully ever coming nearer to that Sublime Influence of Love we call our Father in heaven.

It is thus evident that, if we bend the knee at the behest of any lesser influence, we are thereby losing the opportunity for spiritual progress and putting off the day when we shall become ourselves the embodiment of Love in our very Being, thus attaining the highest happiness it is possible for us to conceive of in our present earthly state.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH SOCIETY.

First General Meeting is Held.—A Possible Test for Death.

The first general meeting of the Canadian Society of Psychical Research was held at the residence of Mrs. Flora McDonald Denison, 22 Carlton street.

Friday evening, 1st inst., Dr. John S. King, the president, read a very interesting and instructive paper on "Hypnosis and Some of Its Phenomena," which was followed by hypnotic demonstrations by Mrs. Denison and a general discussion of the subject by the members.

By unanimous resolution the paper was ordered to be printed in the society's journal.

The Secretary, Herbert O. Paull, read a very interesting letter from Prof. Elmer Gates of the Elmer Gates Laboratories, Washington, D. C., relative to the reports which have recently appeared in the papers affirming that Dr. Gates has seen through the X-rays the "soul of a rat."

Dr. Gates denies that he said he had seen the soul of a rat, but says:

"What I therefore discovered is a new method of diagnosis; I also found that short electric waves find a living body opaque and a dead body transparent, and this is therefore a possible test of death.

"It may be that some of these waves would find a soul-organism (if there is one), opaque, and we would then have a new method of psychic research, but I did not say that I had seen the soul of a rat."

The next general meeting of the society will be held in September.—Sunday World.

THE HIGHER MEANING.

What It Is to Be a Spiritualist.

I hope you will let me speak to the Spiritualists who read The Progressive Thinker, and I wish all Spiritualists did, for I am sure it is a wonderful educator. I want to ask what it is to be a Spiritualist? And do we as a class realize as we should? It is not alone to have been convinced that the soul or spirit of men is given by the God of nature or laws of the universe a continued conscious existence with power under the law of returning and proving its identity, but that we as spirits now, should live the noblest, purest—love justice and virtue, that we can appreciate or conceive of. That progression is the law of life here and now as well as in the future life, and that we should by all means in our power strive to unfold our soul life to be the better for being a Spiritualist.

Let us not be envious of one another, let us not be revengeful and for some fancied wrong done to us live to make it unpleasant for the one we think did not do right. Who of us is perfect—who but makes mistakes? And how can we afford to cherish unkind feelings toward another? Surely we poison the springs of our own being if we cultivate such feelings.

I would that all could see that only loving kindness should be our return for wrong done to us, and so many times a misunderstanding is all the cause of inharmony between you and your friend.

Oh, Spiritualists, rise up into higher life, the nobler thought and action here and now. The reward is imminent—you cannot have a generous thought or do a noble act without its first blessing yourself and then others.

Let us live the radiant life, let us make heaven here, for it is sure to be here—let us help to bring it. If we purify our own lives, strive for nobler attainment, to live the golden rule, it seems to me all the fakes would be weeded out. If all who bear the beautiful name of Spiritualists should stand before the world as honest and true, as reformers, as striving for soul growth, as lovers of fellow men, as helpers in every good word and work, feeling that to be in this class means to be a reformer of one at least—what a grand upliftment would be felt all along the line.

Oh, for a spirit of renewed consecration to serve suffering humanity in aid of the dear spirit friends and who work so unselfishly, so continuously, whenever they can find a channel through which to give expression of their desires. This to me seems the only excuse for our living—to unfold into the divine. I know some will have so much farther to go to get there, but let us all be on the road—all sisters and brothers, loving and aiding all, especially the lowest.

THOUGHT A LIVING FORCE.

The Science of Telegraphy and Telepathy.

It is admitted by many of our most critical scientists, who have made a study of the actions of the human mind, that a telepathic influence of mind over mind is often exerted, regardless of propinquity. If a sympathy between minds be established, by affection or interest, the action which takes place is akin to that of wireless telegraphy, when the receiver is keyed in a somewhat perfect tone with the transmitter. With that sympathy the thought of one may be transferred to the other so as to direct his thoughts in certain lines, and to even unconsciously govern his actions.

It must be understood that we live in a universe of forces. And, also, that thought is a force which is organized into an entity. Worcester defines thought as a "creation of the mind capable of an existence independent of the mind that created it." In this lies its superiority above other forces. We are surrounded by thoughts, and whenever we become receptive we are influenced by them; and sometimes we unconsciously take the thoughts of others to us as our own. Literature is full of such instances. A wise man once said, "there is nothing new under the sun." And science recognizes this as a broad statement of the truth.

What are sometimes called the physical forces, such as light, heat, electricity, magnetism, gravitation, molecular attraction, and repulsion, and a hundred others, make every atom of the universe thrill and throb with a restless activity. Everything in nature is in motion. Scientists love to dwell amid these forces and study the results of their activities.

Thought is a living force. It controls all other forces. It binds them in bands of iron and of steel. It makes the engine, the revolving dynamo, converts one force into another, and rides over the sea of forces, and makes the obedient waves obey his will. With a kindly power thought commands. The willing light brings to him the secrets of all space, lightnings carry his vocal words, the tireless steam, at his behests, blots out the miles, and the terrible ocean is made the playground of commerce. And mind can talk with mind in sympathy regardless of distance or physical conditions. Thought is the carrier of communications of mind to mind. Telepathy binds continents together. And why not worlds? And why not states of being?

If ever the claims of the communion of departed spirits with living men shall be established, it must be along these lines, and scientifically; and not by the disgusting jugglery and tomfoolery of what is known as "physical manifestations."

tleman suggested that Frau Eslinger might have turned round. I said: 'She is sitting quietly and I am holding her hands; I am so frightened.' Suddenly Herr Heyd said he heard singular sounds, like the stamping of horses; he also could quite distinctly see a floating shadow—there was no mistake about this. And there were sounds as if someone moved a baking tin. The shadow was still hovering about and came back to me, touching my eye and forehead twice, which caused a sharp pain. Then the gentlemen heard noises, which one of them compared to the rushing of a weir, and the shadow floated out of the room. Herr Heyd said he was convinced of the truth of it, and they went away."

Elisabetha Neidhardt, from Neuhutten, stated: "In the night of Dec. 19, at 2 o'clock in the morning, when I was lying wide awake, I heard a singular crash, whereupon the door of the prison opened, and in came a luminous form of a man in white garments, while there was the noise as of the opening and shutting of windows. Then I heard a dragging step, which stopped near the bed of Frau Eslinger, and it said in a hollow, unnatural voice: 'Pray!' I heard Frau Eslinger asking: 'Why do you look so angry?' and in a strange voice the answer came: 'You neglected me last night.' The shadow stayed for an hour, went out, and, after an hour, he returned with a dragging step. Frau Eslinger prayed a whole hour with him. When leaving, the ghost said: 'God protect you.' The second time his form was dimmer, the first time shining brightly."

The prisoner, Christian Bauer, from Eschenau, reported the following: "I was ignorant of the occurrences in the prison, not having seen or heard anything. The second night (Dec. 2) of my imprisonment I was wide awake. At 3 in the morning there came a noise like the crackling of paper, and something knocked. All of a sudden a white form stood before me, which said so clearly, 'You are in need of patience,' that the other prisoner (Johann Strecker, from Willsbach), who did not, however, see the form, also heard it. The voice was hollow, rough, and unlike any ordinary human voice. I said: 'I am sure this is my grandfather,' whereupon Strecker laughed at me. On the third Sunday in Advent we first heard a bang, so, that the whole house shook, then it rushed and shuffled along the passage, and it was as if somebody rattled with the windows. The sounds seemed to die away in the distance, and we heard a woman praying aloud. After an hour it came back with the same rushing and whirring, passing our cell. At first I was very frightened, but as it came every night I ceased to be afraid of it."

Extracts from the reports of Professor Kapff, from Heilbronn: "We (himself and Kupferstecher Dullenhofer) heard sounds in the room, comparable to the explosion of a Leyden jar. Several times we felt the blowing of a cold wind, especially on our hands and arms; and more so when the apparition, according to Eslinger, bent towards us. We were often aware of this sensation, before Eslinger informed us of the coming and going of the apparition. When it came through the window near Eslinger, we heard a high, clear ringing, as of a glass bell, made by the medicine bottles standing on the window-sill. Later on I started up from my sleep, awakened by an invisible power, as it were. I sat upright, and saw a luminous appearance of indistinct shape, three to four feet wide, and about the height of the door, where it was standing. At half-past four we heard something like the far-off ringing of bells, then at half-past five a noise as of a wagon came rattling past, and at six o'clock the window near Eslinger was shaken for one to one and one-half minutes so violently that we feared the window panes would be smashed to pieces. We had kept quite composed through all the former sights and noises, but this din was most gruesome. At the same time the window opposite us lighted up again, and afterwards, through the chinks of the door, we observed this light moving along the passage; it got dimmer and dimmer, until at last it disappeared, while close to the door, outside in the passage several loud knocks on the floor were heard. Once I spoke to the apparition, but no answer came. In our presence Eslinger also failed to get an answer." (Annals, April, 1905, p. 220: "The spirit whispered to Regina that he was unable to speak in presence of others than herself;" p. 221: "Then he laments that so many strange persons prevent him from being able to speak.")

Dr. Sicherer, from Heilbronn, reports: "Soon we (he and Rechtsconsulent Fraas) heard a regular knocking at our windows. Thereupon noises followed like the sound of shot or peas thrown with force. At the same time I felt the flowing of cold air. A repulsive stench, which I cannot compare with anything, disgusted us. It was not the usual prison smell, for my well-experienced nose would have detected this at the moment we entered the room, while that stench stopped and repeated itself just as the other manifestations did. While we could feel, smell and hear these manifestations, I saw a thick, grey mist uniformly spreading over the bed of Eslinger, in the opposite part of the room. After a time this mist disappeared with the smell. At half-past four I heard a violent bang; according to Herr Fraas and Eslinger there were two other bangs, which, however, I did not hear. A few seconds afterwards began a rattling of windows all over the house, such a deafening noise, as if the house would come down upon us. Together with this we heard three steps in the room, and an apparent opening and banging of the door; altogether such a hubbub that I felt quite worn out. The last experience, although it lasted only a few seconds, made me feel somewhat shaky."

Rechtsconsulent Fraas: "He, oftener than Dr. Sicherer, saw the sulphur-yellow-misty-light, of uncertain dimension, moving to and fro, and emitting no brilliancy. Several times he drew Dr. Sicherer's attention to it, who was lying close to him, and pointed out to him the place where the luminous spot just then was visible, while at the same time Eslinger stated that the ghostly appearance was on exactly that place. He also mentions the following: 'By means of peculiar oppressions in the respiratory organs, and also by a special light pressure on a spot as big as a square inch on my forehead (Comp Frau Mayer's report), I could predict the arrival of the apparition by some seconds. Twice, when I had these sensations (and I took care not to make mention of these sensations) Eslinger called out that the apparition was standing behind my head. Although I moved my hand in this direction, it merely came in contact with the top of our bed and the wall. I felt a cool wind, and a very strong stench, which lasted for a minute or so.' The violent rattling at the windows, when it arrived, especially in the morning, seemed to suggest to him the sound propduced by a chandelier being shaken with violence and shattered to pieces. Doctor Seyffer, from Heilbronn, was present in the prison on the night of Dec. 30. Suddenly, at about half-past seven, sulphur-yellow luminosity floated in, moving horrizontally from the curtained window towards Dr. Seyffer, brilliantly illuminating him, as well as a small portion of the foot-end of Eslinger's bed, close to which he sat."

Diener Mayer states: "On the night following that morning, when I had requested Eslinger to send the apparition to me, so that I could feel, but not in the least expecting the fulfilment of my desire, I was awakened shortly after midnight by a sensation as if something had touched my left elbow. I also felt a pain there, and in the morning, when I looked at it, I discovered several blue spots. But I was not satisfied with this. I asked Eslinger to tell the apparition to touch my right elbow, too. This really happened, in the same manner, in the following night. I felt at my right elbow a painful touch, and smelt thereby an insufferable, rotten stench. Also on this elbow I found blue spots." (Annals, April, 1905: ("The touch raised a blister.")

Friedrich Gailing, from Roppenbach, and Johannes Stall, from Bonlanden, state: "In the night of Jan. 13-14 (at a time when Eslinger had left Weinsberg) we came into prison. We had not been told a word of the former occurrences. When one of us (Gailing) was wide awake, something came up to his bed and touched his chest with a cold hand. After a few minutes it left him, and then we heard sounds on the floor, as if something had tumbled down from his side. He felt free; but now his comrade (Stall), who was lying on the other bed, called out: 'What is clutching at me?' and he began to swear. He really had the sensation as if somebody had gripped his side. Upon his swearing, this something flew out of the prison with a rustling sound."

Herr Oberamtsrichter Eckhardt had remarked, while Eslinger was questioned, that he wished she would for once send the apparition to his house. That night Eslinger asked it to go to his residence. This it promised to do, and left her on the stroke of midnight. The same hour Herr Eckhardt's wife, who knew nothing of her husband's request, was awakened by a sound like a hard body falling on the table in her bedroom, and then saw a luminousity appearing, like a bright pillow of mist.

Oberamtsgerichtsbeisitzer Teurer, who had also requested Eslinger to send the apparition to his house, asserts that it soon after made itself perceived in his residence by audible steps, and by a horrible smell of decay. The apparition came several times, and revealed its presence by noises as of throwing sand, and other cracking sounds. A cat, which was in the room, often ran towards such sounds, then sprang back in terror, and hid itself. Herr Teurer resided on the first floor of the house; the apparition, however, came also to the people living on the ground floor and second floor.

Referendar Burger, on the second floor, had, as he discovered later on, brought this visitation upon himself by his disbelief. For when he was in the prison with Heyd on Dec. 18, he had not been able to see so much, and therefore he could not attain the same positive assurance as Heyd. Eslinger, who heard of this, begged the apparition to bring conviction to Herr Burger also. He reports, among other things, as follows: "As I lay awake in bed during the night, in which, as I learned later, Eslinger had asked the apparition to persuade me of its reality, I suddenly heard in my room a metallic tone, like bell ringing, which lasted a long time, and then came knocks and crackings, and I felt a heavy pressure weighing upon me. At last a savage cry sounded in my ear. From this time on it came often, and mostly at 3 o'clock. One morning I heard fearful clattering. Then there was a sound as if something knocked against a bottle on my table, which was standing firmly, and quite by itself. The most striking experience happened in the night of Jan. 13-14, when Eslinger was no longer in Weinsberg. Waking up from a quiet sleep I saw the wall, from whence those sounds usually came, light up as yellow as sulphur, and in the centre there was a still lighter stripe, as high as a man. This lasted several minutes; then the impression was of a paper being rolled along the wall where the light was, rolling in and out of the window together with the light, making a noise thereby as of a cart rattling round in my room, and then as of human steps running outside in the passage."

Doctor Justinus Kerner: "My wife had received the apparition's assurance, through Eslinger, that she would be able to see, and even hear it speak in prison, but I did not wish her to sleep there, and so she did not go, and did not in the least expect the apparition to come to her. Towards midnight she was awakened by a hollow voice speaking into her left ear, but she could not understand the words. At the same time she saw something like a black wall before her, out of which light, misty stripes and a luminous figure seemed to shape itself. For many weeks the apparition came nearly every night, without Eslinger having requested it to do so. It manifested itself by the well-known tones and sights. During the night of Dec. 21-22 there were sounds like breaking bits of wood, then it came towards my wife's bed, knocked at the little table, rustled up to her bed, and pulled at her counterpane, until she looked around, when she perceived a luminous figure, of which she could not distinguish the features clearly. She wanted to call out, but could only make inarticulate sounds, having become quite stiff. This woke me, and I ran over to her; then she felt relieved, and was able to tell me what had happened. In the night of Jan. 24-25 the door opened, and the well-known sound of throwing something was heard. I called out to my wife: 'The apparition is there!' and whilst I was still speaking there came a bang. After an hour's time, sounds were heard, as of pigeons flying through the room, and towards 12 o'clock (the sky was overcast and the shutter shut) I was awakened by a sulphur-yellow light at the wall where my bed stood, as big as a plate, and this light was crossed by brilliant flashes of lightning for some minutes. I wanted to speak, but my breath was too short, and my tongue tied. This condition lasted for some minutes, and when it was over all was quiet; everything had passed away."

Some of Dr. Kerner's opinions on this story, which is thoroughly investigated, may be mentioned here:

"Comparing this account with other similar cases (Scherein von Prevorst, p. 290), we must confess that rationalistic explanations, such as fraud, self-deception, illness, infection (thought-infection suggestion?—Translator) must be put aside, and even the theory of an exteriorized electro-magnetic nerve-spirit, acting at a distance from its source; so it seems that, at any rate up to now, no interpretation of the phenomenon can be given, except that which is given by itself. (X.)

"While the light, sounds, and so on, happened in distant houses, no ecstasy or absence of mind was noticed with this person (Eslinger). She was wide awake, praying or conversing with other people; at all events she was in a somnambulic condition.

"Moreover, that these luminosities and actions of all kinds, such as throwing, banging, audible steps, speech, and so on, should be the work of the nerve-spirit of a living person out of its body, and acting independently on an impalpable body at a distance from it, while not the slightest physical or mental change can be noticed in the person, would surely be a greater marvel than that these manifestations should be the work of a spirit which has lost his body by death. (XXIII.)

"This separation of the apparition from the intermediary person proceeds in the same manner, and, moreover, not only a light appears, but there is really a burning flame. (See the story of Besessener Neurer Zeit and Jung's Geistertheorie, pp. 193-210.)

"Constant petition of the apparition to pray with him at a special place (compare the well-authenticated "A Ghostly Apparition" in Dr. M. Wiener's Selmar (Berlin, Fernbach, 1838), pp. 198-208), cannot be a mere invention of Eslinger's, for this is repeated in a hundred similar examples. (P. 213.)

"The doctrines of purgatory, of prayer for the deceased, and of exorcism in the Roman Catholic Church are based upon such experiences, and have arisen out of nature itself. (P. 237.)

"All nations at all times speak of the same experiences; they are not religious dreams, but are founded on nature itself." (P. 238.)

Among all peoples there still lives the belief in supernormal phenomena, in spite of the efforts made by educational bodies to exterminate this, so-called, most harmful superstition.

The common people, who are still gifted with healthy and intensified senses, deserve to be listened to, when they stubbornly insist on the reality of apparitions.

Referring to this popular belief, Du Prel remarks (Mag. Psychologie, p. 186):

"Once more the people are right, when they say a ghost is obsessed by an idea, and we ought to ask: 'What is your wish?'"

And Hermann Schund, who is so well acquainted with the inhabitants of the Bavarian and Tyrolese highlands, relates as follows (Das Schwalberl, B. 4, p. 14):

"The poor soul, who had to leave for eternity with a heavy burden on his mind, finds no rest, and must come back over and over again, until he is released of his burden, with which he may not enter into everlasting happiness."

In the Bavarian highlands the phantom is called Weiz, and in the Styrian Mountains they call it Oneweigl. (In Rosegger's Heimgarten, annual number XXVIII., p. 851, there is an interesting article by Carl Reiterer, "Volksthumliches von Oneweigl.")

Further evidence on the wide extent of this popular belief is given in the monthly paper, Ueber Land und Meer, 1898-99, No. 4, in an article on Allerseelen und Trauergebrauche in Baskenlande:

"The Basques are exceedinly superstitous, especially in the Lowlands of Navarre; they tell you quite simply that the dead come back again, either to avenge themselves on their relations, or to induce the latter to pray for them, to have mass said and pilgrimages undertaken, and so on. You must try to get an explanation from the spirit as to its wishes.

"From these examples it is clear that the people are not only convinced of the fact of these apparitions—which unfortunately we cannot yet affirm of our scientists—but they are also dimly conscious of the cause of such phenomena. As the subject of a posthypnotic suggestion cannot find rest until he has performed the action in question, so also the departed spirit, who has taken over to the other side any kind of auto-suggestion, cannot find rest either, until he has freed his soul from this impressive idea, by its realization. (The receiver of the suggestion, the foreign suggestion as well as the auto-suggestion, is, in both cases, the same—viz., the soul.)

This explanation of Du Prel's, which in a rudimentary form already exists in popular belief, I shall perhaps deal with later on, in a paper on "Monoideism," whereby Du Prel understands the predominance of a single conscious idea. Now let us try, with the help of Du Prel, to bring these enigmatical phantoms nearer to our understanding:

"Phantoms can be caused by living as well as by departed spirits, which stands to reason, as the agent in both cases is the same—the soul; according to Du Prel, the soul is manifested in the conscious and unconscious life of an individual, and it has the power of thought and of organizing the body.

"As in life the magic function is brought about by the exteriorization of the astral body, or at least by its radiation, so after the final exteriorization of the astral body, at death, essentially the same phenomena must occur. (The receiver of the suggestion, the foreign suggestion as well as the auto-suggestion, is in both cases the same—viz., the soul.)"

The first case concern animism, the latter spiritism. With the odic body the psychic essence of man is exteriorizable, its power of life and organization, its sensibility, will, feeling, thought, consciousness—whereby first of all the life power is able to form odic materialization matter, just as in life it forms the physical body, but the modeling of the phantom can be also determined by thought. (Du Prel, "Der Tod, das Jenseits, das Leben im Jenseits, p. 79). Before death, in telepathy from the dying, we often find the actual situation of the dying expressed; for instance, the phantom of the still living man with the deadly wound he has received. There are other examples also of action at a distance, where the externalized odic matter takes its shape from the thought of the agent. (Du Prel, "Der Tod," p. 83.)

So, for example, Regierungsassessor Wesermann could evoke dream pictures in people at a distance. On one occasion he wished to influence a lieutenant, who was at a place nine German miles away. He willed that he should see in a dream the figure of a lady, who had died years ago. This officer, as it happened, had not yet gone to bed; he was still talking to a fellow officer in his rooms, when a form, resembling the deceased lady, and visible to both gentlemen, stepped in at the door, bowed, and went out again. It is out of the question to say this was the real spirit of the lady; rather it came from Wesermann's magnetic influence (Fernwirkung), exteriorizing as a phantom, and modelled by Wesermann's thought. Du Prel, "Magisch Physik, p. 84.)

But also concerning the thought, we must give up the idea that there are immaterial forces; even these apparently immaterial formations may be perceived by the senses, and it must be the fault of the senses that this happens only exceptionally. (Du Prel, (Monist, Seelenlehre," p. 231.)

We cannot deny that mind has the capactiy of acting upon us in such a manner that its conceptions can be transferred to us, which any magnetizer can do. At the same time such excitement of our passive imagination by an outside objective cause, even when it takes the form of an hallucination, must not be confounded with the hallucination brought about by an active imagination, determined by some internal disorder (might it not be possible that with this latter kind of hallucination we have also to deal with the externalization of thought?)

The magnetic rapport depends on odic blending; it is a life and soul communion of the magnetizer and the somnambulist, whose sensitive atmospheres unite and form one entity. (Mag. Psychologie, p. 109.)

If in the physical plane the magnetic rapport can be explained by a blending of two individuals, it follows thence that the Od is the vehicle of those capacities, the transmissibility of which are perceived in the rapport. Sensations can be transmitted, therefore the Od is the vehicle of the sensitive faculty. (Mag. Psychologie, p. 107.)

It seems that with a magnetic rapport something real goes over to a foreign organism, to act there in the same way as it acts in the agent—viz., upon the organic and psychical functions. This real something, however, can only be the actual organizing and psychical principle of both the individuals; the physical organs are the mere implements formed and kept in activity by it. In the Middle Ages people called it lifespirit; the seeress of Prevorst called it nerve-spirit; the magnetizer, animal magnetism or animal electricity; Reichenbach, odic emanation. But it is always one and the same—a physical, psychical, invisible nucleus of being (Wesenskern). (Mag. Psychologie, p. 105.)

This harmony must be in existence before magnetic rapport can step in, for either both the agent and the percipient have drawn their odic harmony (Bestimmtheit from a mutual source, as for instance twins, who so often show the rapport phenomena; or the subject has received his odic harmony by the agent, as for instance the child from the mother; the phantom from the medium; the exteriorized Od through the somnambulist; and also odic relationship is found on a preceding blending, as the magnetizing of a somnabulist by the magnetizer. (Mag. Physik, p. 70.) That the magnetic rapport is dependent on odic blending and similar tuning is shown by the fact that somnambulists of the same agent constantly get into rapport with one another. (Mag. Psychologie, p. 111.) When the magnetizer begins to do something his will gives motor energy to his muscles of the subject, whom he has infused with his life-power, and who, in so far, is part of his own body. This causes the sympathetic synchronous movements. (Mag. Psychologie, p. 110.) In Echolaly, it is the muscles of the larynx, which move sympathetically. Just as in the transference of thought and perfection, no imitation takes place, so also does it not occur in Echolaly. It is not copied, but simultaneously performed. (Mag. Psychologie, p. 111.)

Not only through witchcraft, but also through the whole of magic, runs the underlying thought that the Od is exteriorizable and transferrable, that it preserves its capacity of sensation, and maintains a magnetic rapport with the source of the Od. So also a magnetic rapport is maintained between the distant agent and his apparition, so that when the latter is wounded the former also is injured, of which there are many instances. In magnetic action at a distance the thoughts of the agent are executed by the phantom. Mag. Physik, pp. 79, 83, 84.)

Animal magnetism is of a higher power than physical and chemical forces, and as it arises from the innermost essence of man, so, when transferred, it does not act merely on the surface, but penetrates into the essence of substance, even into the atoms, for it resists chemical processes, which in dissolving molecules, leave atoms intact. (Mag. Physik, p. 67, Jena, Hermann Costenoble.)

The somnambulist Peterson prescribed for herself a sympathetic cure. By burying some of her nails, hair, and blood under the roots of a tree, she came into odic rapport with this tree. After her recovery, she gives a recipe for putting an end to this rapport. (Mag. Physik, p. 75.) When a spirit still in the body, united with the attributes of the same, gets into contact with another body, then, by the reciprocal streaming of the spirits to their bodies, a co-feeling arises more difficult to destroy than that which is created by imagination. (Santonelli, Geheime Philosophie, 26.)

I have copied these paragraphs from Du Prel, almost word for word, to enable the reader to apply them himself to these phantoms stories, and to draw his own conclusions. Perhaps these extracts may also show the reader how very valuable the study of Du Prel's works would be for the psychological investigator, because it gives a survey over the whole province of metaphysical occurrences, which it is difficult to get otherwise.

Were Du Prel's works more read, and were they to get their due in spiritistic circles, people would not feel inclined to take into consideration the myth theory of the devil. Paracelsus says: "We must not leave the honor to the devil."

As Von Helmont says, it is the result of boundless idleness to ascribe to the devil all that we do not understand.

In the Pressburg story of a spectre we see the ghost endeavoring to fulfil a promise given before death. The Weinsberg phantom tries to rid himself of painful remembrances by prayer. Both the phantoms make special use of a certain person for their purpose. The desire for the fulfilment of this promise, and the longing for prayer or intercession, were evidently intensely felt by those persons at the hour of death, and the auto-suggestion was taken over into the next condition.

The realization of the intention underlying an auto-suggestion is what the apparitions aim at, and when this aim is attained the manifestations come to an end.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.
Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. A Lecture delivered at the Free Thinker's International Congress, Chicago, Ill., October, 1893. By Susan H. Wixon. Price, 10c.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.
A Remarkable Book.
This is a remarkable work by FATHER CHINIQUY. It exposes even to the minutest details the corruption that exists in the Church of Rome. It is a work of 800 pages, and should be read as a matter of history by every Spiritualist.
Price $2.25.

JIM, or The Touch of An Angel Mother.
BY CARRIE E. S. TWING.
Her dedicatory lines are sufficient to show the spirit of the book as well as the author, it reads, "Because my own children are all under the tender care of the angels, and my heart is hungry for the love of the young, I most lovingly dedicate this book to the children of the world." This book is full of soul elevating and interesting thought. Price, cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

COMMON SENSE By Thomas Paine. Revolutionary pamphlet, addressed to the inhabitants of America in 1776, with explanatory notice by an English author. Paper, 15 cents.

A Conspiracy Against the Republic
By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. Price, paper, 25 cents.

RADIANT ENERGY and Its Analysis, Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics, by Edgar L. Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California. This book treats upon a new branch of research into the laws of nature, and to the student or even an admirer of the modern astrological literature will surely come with great interest. Price, cloth, $1.75.

THE RELIGION OF CHEERFULNESS
By Sara A. Hubbard.
This little booklet sets forth interestingly a religion which all may admire and experience with benefit to body and spirit. Very nice for a holiday present. Daintily printed and bound, in a case. Price 50 cents.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed
This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

DR. T. A. BLAND'S PUBLICATIONS.
In the World Celestial—With full page photograph of the Heroine Pearl, from a spirit painting.
"Three things that make this book remarkable: Its authorship, the astounding claims put forth in it, and the philosophy and revelation of a future life it contains."—B. O. Flower, in the Arena.
Cloth bound with gilt side stamp; price $1.00.
Pioneers of Progress.—"A broad-minded lover of his fellows. Dr. Bland delights in giving credit to those men and women who have said things or done things to help forward the welfare of mankind."—Chicago Post. . . . .
A Dialogue on Religion, Between Father John Jutz, a Jesuit Priest, and Dr. T. A. Bland.—This is a booklet of great interest, as it covers the entire ground of the difference between the creed of the Roman Catholic church and her daughters, the orthodox Protestant churches. Price 15 cents.

WOMAN: A Lecture Delivered to Ladies Only. By Mrs. Dr. Hulburt. On the present status of woman, physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The divine law of true harmonial marriage, etc. Price, 10c.

Maxham's Melodies.
Arranged for Solos, Duets, Quartets, Also Six Poems.
This is a song book adapted to the popular spiritualistic taste, and is eminently fitted to do good service in the lecture hall or family circle. Price, 15 cents.

Germs of Mind in Plants
By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.
A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE NEW LIFE.
By Leroy Barrier. An eminently suggestive work of excellent tendencies, treating of the mind's relations to the physical organism, and the power of thought in the upbuilding of health and character. Cloth, $1.

Cultivation of Personal Magnetism
A treatise on Human Culture. By Leroy Barrier, anthropologist and author. A very suggestive and instructive book. Price $1.00.

However, in many stories dealing with spectres, the phantom makes requests, which go beyond the mere realization of his posthumous monoideism. Such a most singular demand we find for example in The Annals for April, 1905, p. 225: "The angel would designate two people, whose feet Regina must kiss, either to teach her humility, or for some secret purpose of the Lord."

Most striking, and not founded on posthumous monoideism, is the demand of the phantom in the Weinsberg story, that a certain person should pray with him in an appointed place. The following sentence is also remarkable: "The phantom often laid his head down quite close to Eslinger, and she had to pray into his mouth, as if he was hungry for her prayer. (Eine Erscheinung, page 13.) Also the request of a female phantom in "Das Madschen von Orlach" can hardly have been the object of a posthumous monoideism. It was to pull down the house where the girl from Orlach lived with her parents, and to whom it belonged. In case this demand was not fulfilled, the destruction of the house by fire was threatened; and, indeed, the house was often set on fire by an invisible hand, so that the family was forced to move out of it, and to keep a watch. (Cases of incendiarism by a ghost are also told by Alex. Asakoff: Vorlaufer des Spiritismus, Leipzig, O. Mutze, 1898, pp. 105-259.) When at last it was pulled down they found that parts of the foundation walls were very old, and having destroyed these, the supernormal phenomena came to an end. Later on, in removing the debris, a wide and deep hole was discovered, containing human bones. According to a second phantom, who appeared in this ghost story, they belonged to people whom he had killed in his earth life about 400 years before.

In all such cases we seem to have to deal, not merely with the realization of a posthumous monoideism, but also with the breaking of an odic rapport, which still exists between the departed spirit and certain odic emanations radiated by him during his earth life; the places of his former abode, and the objects he then made use of, being still impregnated with these emanations.

That such odic exteriorizations are psychically modifiziert (Posthumer Monoideism), is proved by so-called Psychometry. The result of posthumous monoideism is probably a rapport, which brings the departed spirit into an undesirable contact with unclean earthly influences, wherefrom odic emanations radiate, originated in some epoch of his earth life.

For us the breaking of such an odic rapport is completely wrapped in obscurity, since we are quite without knowledge concerning the odic relationship of things; and the demands of the phantoms run the risk of being taken for absurdities, because they appear to us strange and inexplicable.

As the scene of separation between the nun and Das Madschen von Orlach is in some respects interesting and instructive, especially because of its striking similarity with the one in the Weinsberg story, I will give, in in short, the account, written by Dr. Kerner:

"On March 4, at 6 a. m. (1832), the girl from Orlach was in her bedroom and alone (the family was then still living in the old house, which, however, was to be soon pulled down), when suddenly the spirit of a nun appeared in a brilliant light, saying to the girl: "A human being cannot redeem a spirit and bring it to heaven, but through you can be taken from me that which is earthly—and which still holds me down—by enabling me to make known to the world, through your mouth, the sins which weigh upon me. In my twenty-second year I was brought, disguised as a cook, from the convent into the monastery by that monk—the black one. Two children I had by him, whom he murdered each time immediately after birth. This unholy union lasted four years, during which time he also murdered three monks. I betrayed part of his crime—thereupon he murdered me, too. (We see the spirit almost conceives the force of auto-suggestion as a moral or religious duty.) Oh, if only nobody would wait until after death, but confess his guilt to all the world before his passing away." She stretched out one hand towards the girl, who had not the courage to touch it with her bare hand. She only dared to do so by taking a pocket handkerchief into her hand; then she felt a pull at it, and saw it glimmer. The ghost thanked the girl for having followed up all her wishes, and she assured her that now she felt free from all earthly bonds. Hereupon she prayed. The girl heard her still praying when she could not see her any more. While the ghost was standing there, the girl saw a black dog spitting fire at the ghost, who did not seem to be touched by it. In the girl's handkerchief a big hole was burned, like the palm of a hand, and above this hole also five smaller ones, or of five fingers. The burned places had no smell at all even in the moment of glimmering the girl did not notice any smell. The spirit of the monk, who had appeared to the girl first in all kinds of animal shapes, did not leave her until the last stone of the old masonry was pulled down."

The black dog, which spat fire at the ghost, without reaching her, as well as the flock of terrible animal shapes which rushed past Eslinger, seems to me to symbolize the breaking of the union with unclean earthly influences. Perhaps also the burning of the pocket handkerchief and other burning occurrences which happen in such supernormal manifestations may play an important part in the annulling of the odic rapport. At all events, big and strong masonry, not being exposed to sun-rays, seems to be very favorable to an accumulation and preservation of odic emanations, and therefore the destruction of such odic accumulations might be an important factor in the annulling of odic rapports.

In his Geschichte der Magic, Ennemoser quotes a paragrah from the Kabala, which speaks of material objects becoming defiled by odic emanations:

"Just as with material defilement, so also with the spiritual defilement of the soul (Tumah), it magically radiates a power, which has a defiling action on other people as well as on outer objects. This is the reason why the pure man is conscious of a disagreeable, repulsive, loathsome sensation in his intercourse with the impure man. Each wrong deed, each immoral word assumes at once an abiding magical existence, soiling all that surrounds it. In a country where great crimes are rampant all things, houses, furniture, animals, plants, even the earth and the air, become defiled."

When death takes its normal course, being an odic essencification as well as a kind of purification process, it will lift the soul above such low, earthly influences. However, under some circumstances, as, for example, in consequence of a posthumous monoideism, the departed spirit may remain in rapport with unclean earthly life-streams, which belong to an epoch of his past earth life; in which case the soul will receive the same repulsive impressions, as a somnambulist does who is brought into contact with defiled objects. The departed spirit, who by death has broken all rapport with his psychical earthly residue, seems to be able to get again into contact with it if, in dying, a posthumous auto-suggestion is carried over to the other side. Similar odic connections are also created in hypnosis between the hypnotizer and his subject.

Such posthumous monoideism, which may have an earthly thought, sentiment, or intention as an object, must lead to a kind of splitting of the consciousness, if this object is entirely out of accord with the departed spirit, when a sort of secondary personality is brought about, whose outer representation, when it is projected by the soul to the earth, is the phantom. In consequence of a strong union with a certain place, such a projection may often happen spontaneously, and this secondary personality imagines it bound to that place. The secondary personality being founded on the posthumous monoideism, receives its psychically shaped odic emanations left from the earthly personality, whilst the individuality on the other side in which it is rooted lends its powers and capacities as far as it is in need of them for the realization of its posthumous monoideism.

Considering that in the objectifying of types in hypnotism, a single word denoting a personal characteristic suffices for the soul to create a lifelike personality, worked out in detail; we may anticipate that she will also succeed in uniting into a single personality these more richly endowed, but somewhat heterogeneous individual elements.

With the realization of the posthumous monoideism, and with the breaking of the rapport, the splitting of the consciousness is annulled and the supernormal appearance, having carried out its purpose, comes to an end.

The other manifestations in the Pressburg story, such as visions of angels, of the Holy Virgin, heaven, purgatory, and so on, might be explained by hallucinations of the secondary personality transferred to people susceptible to such hallucinations. Just as the imaginary torments which the phantom asserts that he suffers are a consequence of the posthumous auto-suggestion in question, so are also these hallucinations. We find an analogy to this in hypnotism where a mere suggestion can cause pain, and even organic change—e. g., stigmata; as also the positive and negative hallucinations, which may be post-hypnotic. However, hallucinations in the ordinary sense of the word cannot be stretched to cover all manifestations; something material must be presupposed, when, as it is often the case, motor energy is projected.

According to Du Prel and Kant, we have with these manifestations to take into consideration three possibilities:

I. The real materialization (or, according to Kant, the true apparition).

II. The morbid hallucination of active imagination (or the empty fancy spun by the seer's own brain).

III. The healthy hallucination of passive imagination (according to Kant, such manifestations, though delusions of imagination, are nevertheless caused by a real spiritual influence). (Comp. Kant; Traume eines Geistersehers, and Du Prel; Kant's Vorlesungen uber Psychologie.)

When in the Weinsberg story we see the phantom coming with a big dog, or two little lambs, or with forms exactly resembling the people who in fact came into the prison afterwards, and when we see such apparitions change, and furthermore, when we see actions performed by them, as for instance the pulling of a cover, the moving of furniture, then it is difficult to determine which of these apparitions we have to consider to be a hallucination—and which a materialization.

If each thought represents a centre of force, and if there are no quite immaterial forces, it follows that we cannot deny that hallucination may have something material. Perhaps each thought is an odic formation, odic substance, which is brought into form by the soul's fashioning power, then hallucination would be nothing more than exteriorized thoughts, which under certain conditions condense; that is to say, they become materialized, either altogether or only partly. Du Prel, in his Magische Physik, relates the following case:

"At the International Congress of Spiritists in Paris, 1889, the Engineer, MacNab, showed a photograph representing a young girl. It was the picture of a materialized phantom, which Mac-Nab and six friends of his had seen, felt, and photographed. The medium in trance was seen on the same picture. It was found out that this phantom was not really spiritistic, but a materialized reproduction of a picture several centuries old, which had greatly interested the medium before the sitting. (Papus: Traite Methodique de Science Occulte, p. 881.)

To this Du Prel remarks:

"Thus by his exteriorized Od the medium supplied the matter, and at the same time, by his thought, shaped the phantom's forms, just as a vivid impression on the senses may inadvertently become realized; in this way also stigmatization is explainable by the Od-stream having been unintentionally directed to the spot.

Comparing this case with the one before mentioned by Wesermann, we shall find that in both cases we have to deal with the same incidents—viz., with an exteriorization of thought; but in the latter case, in consequence of more favorable conditions, a higher degree of condensation was achieved." (Studien aus dem Gebiete der Geheimwissenschaften, II., u. 73.)

Du Prel calls the apparition in Wesermann's story a halludination; moreover, he adds:

"No reason can be given why the Ober-lieutenant, who was accidentally present, shared the hallucination. However, considering hallucination to be of odic formation, which, under some circumstances, can assume all degrees of density up to the consistency of our coarse matter, the fact is easily explained by the density being of such a degree that the apparition could be perceived by persons of small susceptibility, supposing there was a difference between the two men."

The following description in Dr. M. Wiener's "Selma" gives an instance of such a condensing process in the shaping of odic formation:

"It was a female figure, broad shouldered and extremely thin in the waist. She could not distinguish the face, for it seemed to her to consist altegether of living dots, which darted promiscuously to and fro. It was dressed in pure white drapery, and her head was wrapped in a veil, which came down to her eyes, but at the back it floated far down. Through the figure, as through a luminous mist, she was able to see distinctly its shadow thrown on the opposite wall. This shadow was like that of smoke (p. 203). When I got up and tried to seize the light, she saw me, to her horror, walking right through the figure; this divided, as it were, and joined again behind me, just as when we cut through a dusty sunbeam with our hand."

Also the following account, by Diener Mayer, of the apparition in the Weinsberg story is in striking accordance with the above-mentioned one:

"At three o'clock I saw suddenly, standing at the shut prison door, a luminous shade of a man, who was surrounded by a quantity of little stars darting to and fro, exactly as I had seen them before. (See p. 17.)

I have already mentioned that the so-called spectre can be projected, not only by deceased, but also by living beings; it follows that as the agent of such magical telekinesis, in both cases, is the same—viz., the soul—the manifestations, too, are essentially the same.

Some examples may suffice to convince the reader of this:

"Kerner relates of the poet Lenau: 'Once we were at supper, he, I and my wife. Suddenly he stopped in his conversation; we looked up and saw him sitting on his chair, stiff and deadly pale; meanwhile in the adjoining room, where nobody was, some glasses and cups on the table gave forth ringing sounds, as if somebody struck them. We exclaimed: 'Niembsch, what is the matter with you?' whereupon he started and awoke as from a magnetic sleep; and when we told him of the sounds in the adjoining room, he replied: "This has happened to me several times already; my soul is then, as it were, out of my body.'" (Schurz, Life of Lenau, p. 190.)

"'It is really like reading 'Ghost Stories,'' say Du Prel, 'when we see what is reported of somnambulists. The auto-somnambulist, Susette B., ofen paid ghost visits both by night and day. There were knockings or bangings in the room, or the bedcovers were pulled, or something rushed like a paper dress. She appeared to her brother in his dream, at a foretold hour; at the house of her friend, Dr. Ruffli, to whom she had announced a visit; she entered the bedroom in a nightdress and blew out Frau Ruffli's light. Ruffli and his wife were awake and saw her quite distinctly, and they wrote at once to her parents. During this occurrence Susette lay in a deep magnetic sleep just like a corpse.'" Du Prel, Fernsehen und Fernwirken, II., 265.)

Another somnambulist, whose mother went into the kitchen by night to make tea for her, said she would accompany her. The mother knew what was intended, and begged her not to come and frighten her. But when she walked down the stairs the light was blown out, although there was no wind, and coming back she was accompanied by the spectre. There was a rustling like paper as it passed her and slipped through the door into the room, whereupon the somnambulist asked laughingly whether the mother had noticed her. Once, when the brother and sister refused to wake the sleeping mother, by whom the somnambulist was nursed, she forced them to do so; a piece of bread lying on the oven jumped up, as well as a medicine bottle and other objects on the table, and finally the chair, with the sister, who was sitting on it, was lifted up. Kerner, Magiken III., 199.)

The somnambulist (Dr. Meier and Dr. Klein, "Most Remarkable Story of Auguste Muller," p. 95), Auguste Muller, told her friend she would visit her in the following night. The friend paid no attention to this, and went to bed at the usual hour. The door was locked. In the night she awoke and saw a luminous cloud before her. Rubbing her eyes, she recognized Auguste in her night-dress, smiling kindly at her, and surrounded by light. The phantom encouraged her not to be frightened, came into her bed, and she went to sleep. In the morning she awoke freed of her toothache. She went to Auguste, and heard to her astonishment that she had not left her own bed.

Kerner mentions the annoying telekenesis of a somnambulist, who by clenching her fist in a magnetic sleep, caused a clergyman to feel blows. He lived some miles away. (Kerner, Magnetische Kuren, II., 182.)

In the report of a seance held with Eusapia Paladino in Turin (Annals, April, 1907, p. 307), I find an analogy to this:

"There was another instance of synchronous raps; and the medium raised her hand with that of the controller on the left, and made the action of striking the air; at once with absolute synchronism, blows resounded on the table inside the medium's cabinet."

This reminds us of a well-known case of a double, where all movements executed by the person in question were simultaneously made by the doubt, in consequence of the solidarity existing between the two.

Emilie Sagee, a French governess, was constantly seen double, in fact she lost her situation by this. When she stood before the blackboard giving lessons she was often seen with her double, both alike in appearance, making the same movements, the only difference being that the real person held the chalk in the hand, while the phantom merely made synchronous movements. Once when fastening the skirt of her pupil, the girl turned round and saw two Miss Sagees at work which frightened her so much that she fainted. Du Prel, Monistische Seelenlehre, pp. 259, 260; M. S., 231.)

The same sympathetic movements we also find in hypnotism and in somnambulism, where the subject is compelled to make all movements at the same time as the operator.

"Also in Echolaly," says Du Prel, "the muscles of the larynx are moved sympathetically."

Kerner's somnambulist explains this effect of the rapport, in these words:

"So I must do what you will me to do, for as soon as you will it, that part of your nerve-spirit that is united with mine in me forces me thereto." (Kerner, Geschichte zweier Somnambulen.)

The parallelism between phantoms of the living and the dead, says Du Prel, can be followed up in detail. So it often happens in spectre stories that locked doors spring open, and the same is reported in "Christian Magnetism," to have occurred by the magical influence of living people. The Abbot Tritheim writes to the Emperor Maxmilian of a boy who walked in his sleep, and wherever he went the doors sprang open before him. (Tritheim, Liber octo quaestionum.)

Jacolliot knew a fakir who could open and shut distant doors by his will, and before the magnetizer Potet doors opened without his being able to give an explanation thereof. (A. Krakon, 604.)

The negro Lewis once magnetized a girl at a public performance, and told her to find herself in her house. She said there were two people in the kitchen, occupied with housework. Being told to touch them, she replied she had done so. A deputation then went to the house, and there one of the two persons asserted she had been touched by a ghost. (A. Krakon, 604.)

Dr. Recamier was once consulted by a man who complained of the persecutions coming from his enemy, a blacksmith; the whole night through he could hear him hammering at a distance of two miles. As the strength of the patient visibly failed, the doctor went to the blacksmith and threatened him with a lawsuit, when the smith confessed and promised to cease his magical action at a distance, and in a few days' time the patient was well." (Mirville, Des Esprits, V., 91.)

A shepherd at Ciderville, who had taken up healing, fell out with a clergyman, who, meeting him by chance at a sick person's house, forbade him to continue the treatment. As the patient died soon after the case was brought before the law court, and the shepherd was put into prison. A friend of the shepherd, called Thorel, threatened the clergyman that he would avenge his friend on the children, who lived with the clergyman, and were much beloved by him. Thorel explained that he intended to persecute them until they were forced to leave the house. Soon one child began to complain of constantly seeing the shadow of an unknown man in a blouse; once another clergyman, who happened to be present, asserted that he saw a big column, like smoke. Soon after the child complained of receiving a box on his ear by a black hand. Nobody else had seen the hand, but they had heard the sound and seenon the red cheek the impression of five fingers. Also inexplicable noises were heard in the room. Following someone's advice, they slashed the air with swords in the room where noises were heard, and after having done this for some time without any success, all at once, during a sword thrust a flame flared up, and such a smoke filled the room that they were obliged to open the window. But they went on with it until they heard the word "forgiveness" being sighed. The condition was insisted on that the culprit should come in his body the following day, and apologize. Thorel really came, was very uneasy, and tried to hide the bloody scratch on his face. The child, who had never seen him, exclaimed at once: "This is the man who has followed me all this fortnight." (Mirville, Des Esprits, pp. 319-389.)

In all these cases where the spectre emanates from the still living person, we look upon it as a consequence of the extra-corporeal action of the soul.

Although the connection between soul and body seems then to be considerably loosened, yet we find the soul, in virtue of the existing odic rapport, still under the full control of the living person, who gives character to the magical operation.

As the spectral phenomena, which we attribute to the departed, exhibit a character quite analogous to the preceding, we find ourselves justified in assuming that even then the soul is still in the sphere of power of its individual earthly influences, in consequence of an existing rapport with the psychical residue of its earthly personality.

In witchcraft and magic we see that the odic rapport is intentionally brought about, being one of the essential conditions for a sucessful magical action. (See The Annals for August, 1906: "Relative to the Astral Body and the Magnetic Rapport," pp. 120-125. In this essay we find the following lines: "The fluid escaped from the VERTEX of Mrs. Lambert," and so on, to which I add, for the sake of comparison, a paragraph taken from the report of Das Madchen von Orlach, by Kerner: "The phantom walked up to her and gripped her neck with a cold hand. She lost consciousness, and then it seemed to be inside her (p. 41). She felt as if five fingers of a cold hand gripped her neck, and with this grip it rushed into her (p. 32). Thereupon her consciousness failed, and, in fact, her individuality disappeared too.'") If phantasms caused by telekinetic action of witches and wizards are dependable on an odic rapport between the exteriorized Od and its source, we may assume that a rapport must also play a similarly essential part in cases of phatasms caused by the departed.

The true character of the soul is never revealed in apparitions—only its powerful forces and capacities come to the light here and there, and even these we find misused for egotistical purposes by the earthly will, as for instance in witchcraft.

Only the working of genius, and in the last stages of magnetic sleep, does the soul sometimes betray its real essence, and then it always seems to be of a truly divine nature.

We might compare the soul with the Madchen aus der Fremde, of whom the poet says:

"In einem Thal bei armen Hirten
Erschien mit jedem jungen Jahr
Sobald die ersten Herchen schwirrten,
Ein Madchen schoen und wunderbar.

"Sie war nicht in dem Thal geboren,
Man wusste nichte woher sie kam,
Und schnell war ihre Spur verloren,
Sobald das Madchen Abschied nahm.

"Beseligend war ihre Naehe
Und aller Herzen wurden weit
Doch eine wurde, eine Hohe
Entferente die Vertraulichkeit.

'Sie brachte Blumen mit und Fluechte,
Gereift auf einer andern Flur,
In einem andern Sonnenlichte,
In einer gluecklichren Natur. —Schiller.

That a being of such loftiness is liable to such misrepresentation as it undergoes in its earthly body may be explained by what Du Prel says, that in this material life the spirit life is governed by matter, which condition becomes reversed by the change from this existence into that of the "astral" body.

The conviction that such a being, so contrary to our earthly personality, is hidden in us, nobody will deny who has ever experienced

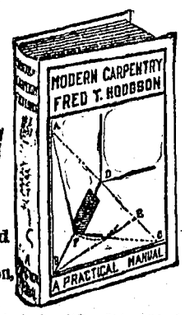
THE MONARCH TYPEWRITER CO., 200 and 202 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Practical, Mechanical SERIES

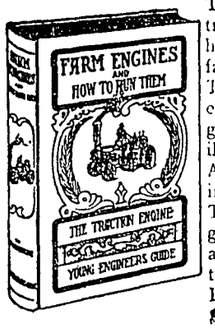


The Carpenter's and Builder's Standard Library.

By Fred T. Hodgson, Architect.

This series of new works on Modern Carpentery and Joinery are to-day the approved and most helpful set of practical builders' "educators," published, consisting of the Steel Square in two volumes. Modern Carpentry and Joinery, and Common Sense Handrailings Price per set of 4 vols., cloth, $4.00; or $1.00 each; half leather, $8.00.

Modern Carpentry and Joinery

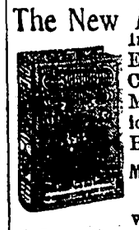


A Practical Manual. Just Published

By Fred T. Hodgson, M. O., A. A.

The well-known Technical writer. It is one of the best works ever turned out by him. Copiously illustrated with diagrams and figures, making the most intricate problems simple, definite and easily understood. Price, $1.00.

FARM ENGINES, and HOW TO RUN THE.



The Young Engineer's Guide

This book treats upon how to run a farm engine. The young engineer's guide. Fully illustrated. A complete instructor. This is the greatest of all works for the farmer. Price, cloth, $1.00.

By James H. Stevenson, and Other Expert Engineers.

The New Air-Brake Book

Invaluable to Trainmen, Engineers, Firemen, Conductors, Electric Motormen end Mechanics. The Latest and Best 1904 Edition.

Modern Air Brake Practice, Its Use and Abuse.

With Questions and Answers for Locomotive Engineers and Electric Motormen. By FRANK H. DUKESMITH. Price, cloth, $1.50

DYNAMO TENDING, For ENGINEERS

Or, Electricity for Steam Engineers.

By HENRY C. HORSTMANN and VICTOR H. TOUSLEY, Authors of "Modern Writing Diagrams and Descriptions for Electrical Workers." Cloth 100 Illustrations. Price, $1.50.

The Handy Vest-Pocket ELECTRICAL DICTIONARY.

NEW EDITION.

A book every Engineer and Electrician should have in his pocket. A Complete Electrical Reference Library in itself. Cloth, red edges, indexed, 25 cents; full leather, gold edges, indexed, 50 cents.

In Tune with the Infinite

By Ralph Waldo Trine.

Within yourself lies the cause of whatever enters into your life. To come into the full realization of your own awakened interior powers, is to be able to condition your life in exact accord with what you would have it.—From Title-Page.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

"Entered as Second-Class Matter, December 11, 1889, at the Post Office at Chicago, Ill., under Act of March 3, 1879."

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

The Progressive Thinker will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1.00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Post Office Money Order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE.

At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

If you do not receive your paper promptly, write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis. Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1908.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Victims of Christian Missionaries.

All thinkers absolved from business cares must necessarily at times turn their thoughts to the Orient, and inquire: "What is the character of the people to which Christian missionaries are sent to convert the natives to their faith? Are they, indeed, sunk in vice, unworthy of trust, and hastening to destruction, ignorant of truth?"

Probably the late lamented Max Muller, for many years and until his death professor of Sanscrit in Oxford University, was the ablest of modern scholars, and the best posted of any regarding the inside history of the Asiatics. We hold in hand as we write, "Muller's India: What Can It Teach Us?" The little volume was thoughtfully read several years ago, and passages were underlined by the pen to attract easy attention. As we are all often besieged for donations to send missionaries to educate these so-called barbarian people, and lift them into the light of the Gospel; and as Prof. Muller was a scientist, laboring only to know the truth and proclaim it, we are sure our readers will enjoy a series of brief quotations from his interesting volume. Our copy is from the United States Book Company, New York. The whole book merits a careful reading, as it consists of lectures before his Sanscrit class; but we have space for only fragments which betray the character of a people the missionaries are anxious to convert to their faith. Quoting from page 53:

"A fact it is—according to statistics, the number of capital sentences was one in every 10,000 in England; but only one in every million in Bengal. Of the 332 sentences of death 64 only were carried out in England, while the 52 sentences of death in Bengal were all carried out."

Col. Sleeman, says Prof. Muller, assures us "falsehood or lying between members of the same village is almost unknown. Speaking of some of the most savage tribes, Gonds, for instance, he maintains nothing would induce them to tell a lie. * * * They have not yet learned the value of a lie. * * * Public opinion, in its limited sphere, seems strong enough to deter even an ill-disposed person from telling a lie."

Continues Col. Sleeman:

"I have had before me hundreds of cases in which a man's property, liberty and life has depended on his telling a lie, and he has refused to tell it. * * * It was an excellent superstition, inculcated in the ancient law-books, that the ancestors watched the answer of a witness, because, according as it was true or false they themselves would go to heaven or to hell."—Extracted from pages 58, 59, 60.

"So," continues Prof. Muller, "I could go on quoting from book after book, and again and again we should see how it was love of truth that struck all the people who came in contact with India, as the prominent feature in the national character of its inhabitants. No one ever accused them of falsehood. * * * Those who have known the Indians longest have always the best opinion of them."

Prof. Muller cites with approbation the following quotation of Warren Hastings, wherein he wrote of the Hindus:

"They were gentle and benevolent, more susceptible of gratitude for kindness shown them, and less prompted to vengeance for wrongs inflicted than any other people on earth; faithful, affectionate, and submissive to legal authority."

Then the professor cites from Bishop Heber, author of the well-known "Missionary Hymn," who was a resident of Calcutta, when he wrote:

"The Hindus are brave, courteous, intelligent, most eager for knowledge and improvement; sober, industrious, dutiful to parents, affectionate to their children, uniformly gentle and patient, and more easily affected by kindness and attention to their wants and feelings than any other people I ever met with."

Elphinstone, the well-known Scotch grammarian of the past century, and author of a "History of India," pages 375-381, wrote:

"The Hindus are a mild and gentle people, more merciful to prisoners than any other Asiatics. Their freedom from gross debauchery is the point in which they appear to most advantage; and their superiority in purity of manner is not flattering to our self-esteem."

Sir Thomas Munro wrote, quoted by Prof. Muller, page 72:

"If civilization is to become an article of trade between England and India I am convinced England will gain by the import cargo."

Let it always be remembered these Hindus claim "All life is divine." No animal bleeds to supply them food. We shall never forget the expressions of horror which fell from the lips of Hindu scholars, in attendance at the Columbian exposition, after visiting the Chicago stock yards and the shambles in 1893.

It is to such a people with such commendable virtues, our Western civilization is sending missionaries, at an enormous annual expense. Bible in hand, to teach them Christianity, with all its terrible fallacies, of course including Paul's lying for the glory of God, that he may by all means save some.

We believe it a fact that the native religion of every country has features better fitted to the needs of that people than any religion imported from abroad. Even their gods are barbarian concepts of the divine which can only be corrected by greater knowledge. Why it is we do not know, but the vices of the white man everywhere follows along the trail of the Christian missionary.

Still Searching for Truth.

The honest theologian, desirous of knowing the truth, and the truth only in regard to the beginnings of Christianity, is embarrassed at every step he takes in his researches. He receives the four Gospels as divine authority; but he finds instead of harmony they are everywhere discordant. A biography of Jesus based on either of the Gospels will be found discrepant in every page with the others, and almost in every statement.

Then recall the fact that there are upwards of forty apocryphal gospels, each a competitor with the four accepted Gospels as canonical, and each of these forty are as discordant as are the four accepted ones; then where are we?

Instead of forty apocryphal books, it said there were upwards of one hundred and fifty. The Manicheans had their gospels. So had the Gnostics, and so had nearly or all the pioneer Christian sects. Paul had his gospel, and he anathematized those who used any other. That eminent English divine, Jeremiah Jones, of the seventeenth century, wrote:

"It is not an easy matter, as is commonly imagined, rightly to settle the canon of the New Testament. For my own part, I declare, with many learned men, that in the whole compass of learning I know of no question involved with more intricacies and perplexing difficulties than this."

Richard Baxter, author of Saints' Everlasting Rest, of whom says the Encyclopedia Britannica, "No more diligent student ever shut himself with his books," put himself on record in regard to these apocryphal books by saying:

"Few Christians among us have any better than the Popish implicit faith, nor any better argument than the Papist to prove the Scriptures to be the Word of God. They have received it by tradition. Godly Christian ministers tell them it is impious to doubt; therefore they believe it. We all abhor that piece of popery, as most injurious to God, yet we content ourselves with the same faith, with this difference: The Papists believe the Scriptures to be the Word of God, because their CHURCH says so. And we because our church LEADERS say so."

In the opinion of The Progressive Thinker the whole Christian world has been villainously deceived, not only as regards the apocryphal books of both Old and New Testaments, but in regard to the canonical books. They are all frauds, monk written, at a much later period than is generally supposed, and all of them for fraudulent purposes.

What sort of a Jesus would we have if any one of the gospels, either canonical or apocryphal, was accepted as truthful to the exclusion of all the rest?

It has been proposed to harmonize the gospels; to rewrite them, eliminate contradictory parts, and make one harmonious whole. Possibly that thing could have been done, when learning was confined to the priestly few, had those books been in existence at that time, but it is impossible now, and it is well it is so, for the contradictory statements carry on their face evidence they are not what they are claimed to be.

The Septuagint, the Old Testament Scriptures translated into Greek, need the searchlight of truth turned on them. They are not what even scholars suppose. Accepted by Jew and Christian as genuine, and Josephus quoted as authority for their Hebrew origin, and Kitto saying:

"It has been inquired whether the translator followed a Hebrew or Samaritan codex," and then: "The Septuagint and Samaritan harmonize in more than a thousand places, where they differ from the Hebrew." And yet:

That scholars may have something to think about, The Progressive Thinker ventures the opinion, and in due time will strengthen that opinion with incontrovertible evidence, that the Septuagint is neither a translation of Hebrew nor of Samaritan Scriptures, but is a stolen history of another people; that if Moses, Joshua, David, Solomon, etc., were real characters, they were connected with another nationality or people other than the Jews.

The higher critics have been laboring for years, showing the fragmentary character of the Old Testament literature; but they have failed to detect a class of facts which strike at the very base of the whole matter, and prove that such literature came from a very different people than the barbarians of the Lebanon mountains.

They Don't Think.

The thoughtlessness of the average Bible reader was illustrated in a remark casually dropped several years ago by the writer to an old doctor, an active member of the Baptist church. We had been comparing ideas on some Greek literature, when we remarked:

"Doctor, we do too much reading without thinking. Take, for instance, the Bible which we are taught to revere; and yet should we stop to think we would see we are misled. Open to the title page of the New Testament, which it says was 'Translated out of the original Greek.' You have read that a hundred times, and yet as a Greek scholar do you believe as a Christian that the several books of the New Testament, with Epistles written by Hebrew and Aramaic scholars, to people using their own tongue, were originally written in Greek?"

To which he replied:

"You are right. I never gave a thought to the subject; but I see in an instant the title page is false, yet I am hopeful the book itself is not as deceptive as is the title page."

Years have passed, but the last we heard of Doctor Eddy he was exposing the fraud on the title page of the Holy Book, whilst scholars who had critically investigated the contents of that book found in its pages ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVEN THOUSAND ERRORS AND FALSE RENDERINGS.

It is the learned who make these terrible discoveries; but the church has a happy way of curing such defects. They charge the scholar with heresy, and excommunicate him, and the Old Book continues to be the inerrant "Word of God."

A few years ago the churches of Europe and America appointed a commission of scholars to correct the more prominent errors of King James translation. They accomplished a noble work, tied back as they were by inflexible instructions; but the Revised Oxford Edition has fallen still-born from the press. The falsehoods corrected, Christianity would be a beast of another color.

Good Neighborhood in Grave Yard.

The New York Sun tells of a woman, while negotiating for a lot in a cemetery, making special inquiries regarding the character of prominent persons buried near. She was desirous of getting a lot in "a good neighborhood," and was willing to give extra consideration for such a location. The Sun says the agent collapsed. "Has it come to this," he inquired, "that people consider the character of their next door neighbor in a grave yard?"

The whole system of burying families together had its origin with the Egyptians, who expected a general resurrection at the sound of the great trumpet, when the Angel would announce: "Time shall be no longer." It was a Christian inheritance from Egypt, the mummifying of the dead to prevent decomposition being a part of the religious exercises.

Good Riddance.

Still the current of dissatisfied humanity flows Europeward from America, and we are all glad of it. Two thousand steerage passengers on a single ship eastward is a novelty. Until the last few months such movements were all westward.

Within the last few years southern Europe has contributed most largely of her surplus population to people America, but the tide has settled in the opposite direction. Over half a million adults have gone out from us during the last six months.

We could profitably return to Southern Europe the entire population we have received from that quarter.

I CLASP HANDS WITH THEE, MY BEAUTIFUL WIFE.

But one rare being in the universe
holds allegiance from me,
None other responds to life's dreams,
my heart's throbs, none other but thee.
While high over us, sweet Nature's banner unfurled wide to life's breeze
Waves vibrant in our loves, that bear us swiftly on beyond earth's seas.

Who says we're not married in highest heaven, dreams in cloistered cell
Of true, pure, noble and trusting womanhood doomed to endless hell;
But the God above and truth around us, bear to us radiant life
As across life's chasm I clasp hands with thee, my beautiful wife.

BLIND TOM.

A Great Musical Medium, Passed to to the Realm of Souls.

According to reports in the daily papers Blind Tom is dead, and the ending of this childish black pianist, at whose wonderful playing thousands have marveled ever since our grandmothers were girls, was full of pathos.

Three weeks ago as he sat before a piano in the home of Mrs. Eliza B. Lerche, the widow of his old master in Hoboken, singing the old melodies with which he had thrilled great audiences before the civil war, he suddenly stopped and fell face downward on the floor.

Mrs. Lerche, who had cared for him over twenty years, ran into the room, and, helping him up, found that his whole upper right side was paralyzed. But Tom couldn't understand that he was different and soon went back to his piano. When he found that his right hand could not strike the keys he said, with his voice quavering:

"Tom's fingers won't play."

Wept Over Inability to Play.

Again and again he tried. Finally when he realized it was useless his big blind eyes filled with tears and he wept like a child. Each day he returned to the piano and with his left hand started some favorite piece. Quickly, however, and then with tear-moistened cheeks he would rise and pace the floor until late into the night. His old mistress sought to comfort him; but he would only sob out:

"Tom's fingers won't play no mo'."

Last Saturday night Tom went to his piano again and began softly his old lullaby, "Down on the Suwanee River," but his voice broke. Sobbing he rose and said:

"I'm done; all gone missus."

The next she heard was a faint cry and a thump near the bathroom door. He had dropped dead from a second shock.

Prodigy of Slave Days.

"Blind Tom's" real name was Thomas Wiggins. He was a prodigy with an uncouth figure of almost gigantic proportions and an intellect approaching that of an imbecile to which nature had joined a divine gift of music. Back in the slave days when he was but two years old and clothed only in an old shirt he sat beneath the window of his first master, Gen. James Bethune, a Georgia planter, and heard the sound of a piano. Thrilled, he crawled trembling up the steps into the parlor where the music was. Gen. Bethune saw how apt the child was and said:

"The child is music crazy. Poor little thing."

"Then he placed him before the piano and let him strike the keys. To his astonishment the child after hitting the keys clumsily for a few minutes began to play slowly with one finger the air he had just heard.

That Blind Tom was a most remarkable musical medium—one of the most wonderful the world has ever seen—is now generally acknowledged. In many respects an imbecile, yet he possessed a brain so attuned that Mozart and other master musicians could control it, producing music that has charmed thousands in every part of the country. Certainly the brilliant career of this remarkable personage should become a part of the history of Spiritualism.

A curious incident occurred in connection with Blind Tom's life when, on one occasion, his marvelous powers were being exhibited at Charleston, S. C. Senator Douglass, the famous Little Giant of Illinois, was there, stopping at the same hotel where Blind Tom and his master had quarters. The Senator was called out on the balcony and made a short address to his enthusiastic admirers. Blind Tom heard him, and during the evening the colored domestics in the hotel gathered around him in the kitchen, and there he repeated with dramatic effect, and in the same tone of voice passages from the eloquent address of the renowned Senator.

CALLS RELIGION BAD FOR YOUNG

Professor T. G. Soares Sees Peril in Appeal to Child's Emotions.

Current methods of religious education for children were characterized as "utterly morbid and unhealthy" by Professor Theodore G. Soares of the University of Chicago divinity school in a lecture on "The Process of Religious Development" at Haskell Hall. The professor scored the tendency to force religion on young children and urged that no appeal to the religious emotions be made until a later period.

"There is a normal religious development," he said. "Precocity is not much to be desired. It is easy to mistake the child's extraordinary imitativeness for actual experience in the child that goes beyond the natural, healthy development. The utmost that should be expected in a young child is a healthy life, the gradual appreciation of the law of the world into which he has come and the love of the persons around him.

There is grave danger in making an appeal to the religious emotions in a child of from 6 to 9 years of age. The attempt to awaken religious experience too early is utterly morbid and unhealthy. The doctrine of the atonement is not for children, no matter how good the theory may be.

The glory of science is that it is freeing the soul, breaking the mental manacles, getting the brain out of bondage, giving courage to thought—filling the world with mercy, justice and joy.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Gospel for To-Day.

To Affirm Is to Attract Strength, to Achieve Success, to Win Victories.

Affirmation is always better than negation. Denial is the source of innumerable weaknesses. It lessens one's will power, and eventually undermines his faith in himself. To affirm is to attract strength—to achieve success—to win victories. To doubt is to open the door to a multitude of ills, against whose assaults both mind and body are powerless. They give way to fear, and retreat into the caves of weakness and lassitude. To affirm adds to the powers of the will, and brings confidence to the one who declares his affirmation and repeats courageously.

Disease (lack of ease) has long been considered catching, because people have said it was, almost from time immemorial. They have allowed their fears to dominate them until they have come to consider sickness and disease as entities having an actual existence. They have even gone so far as to tremble at these figments of their own imaginations, and cringingly invited them to assault their creators. People have been in the midst of the most virulent of the so-called contagions, and escaped without even a moment's illness, because of the fact that they did not know the name of the malady they were confronting. Many persons who are above fear can and do approach the worst cases of small-pox, yellow-fever, and diphtheria without injury to themselves or any one else.

Fear, therefore, must be considered the prolific mother of the many ills that now beset the human family. Fear is developed through inertia and negation. Doubt always weakens. Affirmation brings power by awakening courage. Such being the case, why not affirm health, and WILL it into being by the daily and persistent use of our mental faculties? If disease be contagious by reason of denial, then health can be made doubly so through the mediumship of affirmation. It is safer and better to be master of one's mental and physical conditions, than it is to be mastered by them. No person is safe who permits his will to be dominated or controlled by another. The highest and best control is self-control. No one can guide another, with safety to either party. The negative soon becomes a burden to the positive, and ultimately saps the mental and vital forces of the dominant one. A chronic invalid often makes an invalid of his nurse. A hypochondriac frequently undermines the health of those from whom he elicits sympathy.

The "magic staff" of Andrew Jackson Davis, "above everything, maintain an even mind,' is the quintessence of power. Its daily use brings peace, tranquillity of body and mind, a divine calm, a serene spirit, a benignant mental poise. Possessed of these weapons, a mortal is fortified against all ills, all possible dangers. They are the treasure-troves of the soul. They are not the special property of any one individual, or body of individuals. They are the common possessions of all of the children of men, if they do but WILL to reach forth and take that which is their own. Then let them doubt not themselves, if they would have their own. Let them cease denying their own possibilities, if they would stand upon the Mount of Power and Soul-illumination. Men are what they will to be, and no more.

The old trite saying, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," is a truism. Those who think that they cannot get out of the swamps, bayous, miasmatic marshes and fetid dungeons of earth, belong there until they come into recognition of their own soul-powers and use them for themselves.

Schopenhauer's repeated declaration that ours is the worst possible world, and the people in it the worst possible, made his statement seem real to himself. His own eyes were peering through colored glasses, hence he thought everything about him had the same shadow as was that which was over him. Von Hartmann's assertion that this is the best possible world, and the people in it the best possible people, which best was so very bad as to make the annihilation of both a duty and blessing, is simply the outcome of negative thinking—of looking at things through imperfect lenses. LIFE IS. No one can get outside of or away from Life. He is enfolded by it, even as the atmosphere encompasses the earth. Life is purity, sweetness, beauty, goodness, joy, power! Evil, as an entity, cannot, therefore, exist in Life. At the most, it can only be a negation, and all negations are subservient to the stronger forces—the affirmations, whose wills they ultimately obey.

He who affirms his own soul powers is already the victor, even if the clouds about him be dense and dark Zertoulen says, "I proclaim the gospel of Myself." These are the words of a master. What one soul has attained unto is possible for all souls. The law of progress and unfoldment is the same for all living creatures. There can be no special edicts for one to the exclusion of all others. All beings, therefore, have within themselves, in latency perhaps, the potencies and possibilities of supreme attainment. They are neophytes in wisdom, gods and goddesses in power! If they persist in looking downward in despair, in entertaining doubts of themselves, of their fellowmen and of God, they will be obliged to retread life's pathway until they reach the Mount of Recognition through their own efforts to climb upward. The roadway of experience is set with sharp stones, with cruel thorns, and blood flows freely from bruised and bleeding feet, because those who possess them did not will to look upward to to sunshine of Love and of Promise!

As life is everywhere, it is Infinite. If Infinite, it is God. If God, it is the involution of all possible conditions, seen and unseen. If it involves all things, then all things are evolved from it. All finite beings, therefore, are evolutions out of Infinitude, or God. The Infinite is perfect health—perfect power—perfect understanding. A clear thinker and lofty soul-reasoner says: "God is health, so there is nothing about you but health. You breathe health. You are in it. You are one with it. You are perfect health. You are whole like God made you, for you are His Image. You are well, for God enfolds you. His "Everlasting Arms" uphold you. You have dominion over all flesh. Speak the word of power, and it shall be done. You are absolutely free! You are full of courage and sweet peace. The sweet Spirit of Comfort is all around you. It is in you and through you. You are bathed in Joy, in Peace, in Love, and in Sunshine. You are resting in the arms of Love. Nothing can harm you; nothing affright. You have Infinite patience, Infinite tenderness, Infinite Love! You are never alone—no, not for an instant. God takes care of His own!"

These affirmations are creators of health, joy, peace, love, happiness, power! They are worthy of constant repetition. They deserve an honored place in the economy of every person's thought. Affirm, and you are strong. Deny, and you are weak. Purity of thought and rectitude of conduct develop the muscles of the soul, even as fencing and boxing develop the muscles of the arms. Affirm purity, and it is yours. Affirm rectitude, and you possess it. Aspiration is the prompter that inspires men to think purely, live cleanly, and act nobly. Aspiration is prayer. Prayer is that which makes the soul receptive to truth. It is the soul-self's child in action. It makes men Galahads, Percivales, Rolands, yea, even Christs! "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." He rules himself who affirms his own soul-self's actual powers. Progression and retrogression—he can choose between the two as to the way he shall go. Affirm health, cheerfulness, kindness, good will, brotherly love, and you are already far along Progression's upward pathway. Deny, and your path is downward, even into a worse inferno than was the one of which Dante speaks. Says Emerson, "Let your greatness educate the crude and cold companion. If he is unequal, he will presently pass away, but thou art enlarged by thine own shining; and, no longer a mate for frogs and worms, dost soar and burn with the gods of the empyrean!"

Mortals, why stay you in the valleys of Doubt and Despair? The great horizons of Beauty and of Power stretch away on all sides of you, even around and about you! Above you tower the lofty Mountains of Endeavor, whose tops are oft encompassed by the shining mantle of snow, indicative of stainless purity. At the equator of High Resolve these mountains are as plateaux, adorned with garlands of gold set in pictures of silver, and fringed by the emerald of enduring life! Upon the summit is the ever-expanding bungalow of Rest, which is only attained by surmounting and overcoming all untoward and imperfect conditions in life and in thought. Man can be what he wills to be! Let him, therefore, live in the sunny optimism of Affirmation, and he becomes "Worthy to stand beside the tallest angel that ever dipped his wing in the light of glory, or warbled a note of praise around the throne of God!"

Important Announcement.

Great Victory in Portland, Oregon.

The friends of clean Spiritualism have scored a signal victory in the metropolis of Oregon, through the passage of what some good people are pleased to term the "Barrett-Cottell ordinance," which became a law June 19, upon being approved by Mayor Lane. This ordinance has been published several times in The Progressive Thinker, for it is an exact copy of the measure now in force in Chicago, Ill., enacted there in November, 1907. A few minor changes were made by the Portland authorities to make it conform to the laws of Oregon in every essential particular.

This ordinance was earnestly advocated by the two local Spiritualist Societies in Portland, "The First Spiritual Society," and "The Ministers and Mediums' Protective Association," and was most bitterly opposed by the president of the Oregon State Spiritualist Association, and a few others who sympathized with that officer. The Spiritualists of Portland, of the entire state of Oregon, and of the United States of America are under lasting obligations to the officers and members of the local bodies of the brethren for their brave and loyal defense of the Cause of right and Justice.

Revs. Mr. Allen and Mr. Lucas, of "The Ministers' and Mediums' Protective Association," have rendered valiant service in defense of honest mediumship in their advocacy of the adoption of the Chicago ordinance. They were backed also by a solid vote of the members of their society, who did not hesitate to declare in plain terms what they thought of counterfeiting in mediumship. With four exceptions, so far as I know, the officers and members of "The First Spiritual Society" were a unit in their support of the new ordinance. Special credit is due Rev. G. C. Love, Mrs. M. A. Congdon, Mrs. Emily L. Driscoll, Mr. R. G. Jeffrey, Mrs. Althea Bailey, Mr. Eugene Barton, and others of "The First Society" for their zealous labors in behalf of the ordinance.

Restorers of "lost love," finders of "pots of gold," locators of "gas and oil wells, mines and hidden treasures of all sorts," discoverers of "remedies for flea bites," pullers of "Catholic spirits off people's spines," bogus "business" mediums, counterfeiters in all phases of mediumship—trumpet, materialization, photographic and telegraphic frauds will now have to either give up business, or leave the city, or—be prosecuted! Portland will be all the better for their going. If they do not go, or quit, two or three vigorous prosecutions will soon prove that the law means something and that law-breakers must obey it, or GET OUT!

It has been a long, hard fight, but honest Spiritualism has triumphed and the victory is worth all that it has cost those who won it, even though they were the targets of abuse and mendacious misrepresentation. The addresses of Mrs. M. A. Congdon and Rev. G. C. Love before the committee on police and health were masterpieces of logic, philosophy and good, sound sense. It is to be regretted that they were not stenographically reported that our brethren in other cities might also have the benefit of them.

The writer and all who have worked with him have carefully refrained from personalities and recriminations. They have made no attacks upon any one individual or body of individuals who opposed them, but have stood boldly and bravely for principle at every point. As a result, they have gained a magnificent victory, have won the respect of the city officials and that of the thinking, progressive men and women of Portland.

The Chicago-Portland ordinance has been favorably reported upon by the chiefs of police of the cities of America at their recent national convention in Detroit, Mich. Speed the day when it shall be the law in every city, town and hamlet in America. Its adoption will dignify true Spiritualism and protect honest mediumship everwhere.

Yours for real Spiritualism,

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

GIRLHOOD'S HOUR.

Oh, the joy and the freedom of living,
The brightness of girlhood's swift hour,
When the pathway though Life's winding meadows,
Seems as bright as a newly blown flower.

There's work, but the mere joy of living
Makes it seem but as playing to me,
For with laugh and with song I soon finish
Whatever of duty there be.

Then, hurrah for the wide-spreading meadows,
With their windrows of sweet-smelling hay,
And the stubble forlornly uplifting
Its face to the beauty of day.

Then away to the banks of the river,
Where it dashes by moss-o'ergrown stones,
And wanders at will through the canyons,
Or through wonderous pine-shadowed zones.

In the evening with moonlight soft shining,
To wander through glens dark and wild,
Where fairies hold revel at midnight,
As was told me when I was a child.

The roadway, by pines and by oak trees,
Is fair for a stroll with the stars
Shine softly through all the long distance,
'Twixt this and the heavenly bars.

I rejoice in the blessings of nature,
When magic gives wondrous power,
And I live for the mere joy of living
Through the moments of girlhood's sweet hour.

It Reads Like a Fairy Tale.

The Annals of Psychical Science, the Organ of the Psychical Society of London, England, has the most illustrious Directors, Editors and Committee the world has ever seen in connection with the investigation of Spirit Return, and we take especial pleasure in spreading before our readers one of its leading articles on the "Well Authenticated Metaphysical Phenomena of Recent Days." It reads in many respects like a fairy tale, yet is no doubt true in all respects, and we are sure it will deeply interest our readers, as it places them in touch with "The Annals of Psychic Science," and illustrates comprehensively the great work which those engaged in Psychical Research are doing for Spiritualism.

"The character and type of apparitions are so decided and singular that the expert can easily judge whether the story is invented, based on optical illusion or whether it has been a real vision."—Schopenhauer, Parega and Paralipomena.

"If all ghost stories were invented, it would be inexplicabie why at all times and in all countries the free imagination of thousands of narrators should have always invented the same characteristics."—Du Prel, "Die Magie als Naturwissenschaft.

If we try, in the spirit of Schopenhauer, to form a judgment on the account of an apparition, related by Professor Richet (in April number of The Annals, 1905), under the title "Metaphysical Phenomena of Bygone Times"—that is to say, by comparing it with other stories of the same kind—we must admit that it possesses many of those characteristics which give to such stories a stamp of genuineness.

If, however, we isolate the story and judge it more by its evidential value than by the account of the apparitions, and try to facilitate thereby the solution of the extremely difficult problem, we may either deny the facts or assume that they are only partly proved.

But in this way we do not rid ourselves of the troublesome problem, which seems to allow of no reasonable solution, for not only are there a great number of "ghost stories" of all times and nations, the conformity of which, in their essential characteristics, is an important argument in favor of their trustworthiness, but also there exist reports on such phenomena which are SO WELL AUTHENTICATED THAT THEY WITHSTAND ANY CRITICISM.

One such report is left to us by Justinus Kerner, doctor of the prison in Weinsberg, in his book, "Eine Erscheinung aus dem Nachtgebiete der Natur," confirmed by numerous attestations and documents.

I should like to emphasize the great importance of this work by a quotation from a well-informed writer:

"Hardly ever before has an apparition been watched by so many witnesses. Among them were several thoughtful and scientifically-educated men, who carried out the investigation with the greatest exactness and circumspection; and they unanimously came to the conclusion that fraud and deceit must be excluded, the fact of the apparition having been proved undeniably. From the evidence corroborated, as it is, by reliable witnesses, of various grades of intelligence and education, it follows of necessity that those who will not accept the reality of the apparition cannot prove that it is not one, since there is no other way of explaining it, neither can they deny its possibility—at any rate not until some other satisfactory, scientific explanation of these enigmatical phenomena is forthcoming in the future. One proof of the unprejudiced attitude of the scientific men concerned with this story is that they merely tell what they see, hear and feel, leaving it to the reader to draw his own conclusions; all they ask for is belief in their statement, that they are not deceived nor trying to deceive others. It is certainly somewhat humiliating to human reason, which is so much extolled for insight and wisdom, that after thousands of years of effort, it has not yet satisfactorily succeeding in solving scientifically the difficult problem of the appearance of departed spirits in this earth-life; and when it is nevertheless forced to acknowledge their reality, it is met by such a host of incredibilities, that it almost despairs of itself."

We find the above cited words in a copy of Dr. Justinus Kerner's "Eine Erscheinung aus dem Nachtbiete der Natur (Stuttgart and Tubingen. Verlag T. G. Cottasche Buchhandlung, 1836). They are written in red ink on the margin close to the report of Dr. Kapff, and if he has not put them down himself, certainly some scientifically educated man has done it.—A.K.

This work offers such a wealth of interest and scientific evidence that in order to do justice it should be repeated word for word. We must not be astonished at the fact that such a work has not yet met with the consideration it deserves, when we reflect that, to the greater part of its disciples, knowledge is merely Die tuchtige Rut, die sie mit Butter versorgt," and only to the few "Die here und himmlische Goettin." If ever a man of science and knowledge reverenced the sublime goddess, and served her as a true priest with all his soul, it was Justinus Kerner. But, alas! he also experienced how far from easy such a worship is because of those of whom the poet writes:

"O, wie viel Feinde der Wahrheit! mir blutet die Seele, Seh ich das Eulengeschlecht, das zu dem Lichte sich drangt," and whom Dr. Kerner describes in his classical foreword as those elucidators, ignorant of these subjects, who prevent the investigation of Nature's most important side by their rationalistic fear of ghosts, and by their empty cry: "Who still believes in ghosts in the nineteenth century?"

As this account of an apparition will hardly be known to the reader of this paper, I will give it in short, and also Frau Eslinger's individual experiences put down by Kerner.

It was in the beginning of September, 1835, that Elizabetha Eslinger, a widow of thirty-nine years of age, from Baurenlautern, was imprisoned in Weinsberg, because of a small offense which was never quite cleared up.

Soon afterwards, on Sept. 12, Diener Mayer reported that the prisoner Eslinger complained of being tormented by a ghost every night. Thereupon the doctor of the prison, Kerner, was asked to examine her. In his report of Nov. 21, 1835, to the law court, Kerner, after careful observation, which lasted eleven weeks, made the following statement:

That Eslinger's mental condition and senses were thoroughly healthy; that she was not afflicted by any fixed idea; that, nevertheless, quite inexplicable phenomena happened near her of which he convinced himself twice during the night of Oct. 15 and 18, which phenomena were, moreover, witnessed by the wife of Mayer and six prisoners.

On the night of Sept. 17-18 Oberamtsrichter Heyd was with Referendar Burger in Eslinger's prison cell, and they convinced themselves of the reality of the ghostly occurrences. The following night similar manifestations took place at the house of Oberamtsrichter Eckhardt, who had previously asked Eslinger to send the phantom to him. Again, in the course of December, six female and five newly-arrived male prisoners became witnesses of the apparition. These prisoners bore evidence to the fact, and the protocol was drawn up. Dr. Kerner's son passed the night of Dec. 26-27 in a cell of the prison, and he, too, perceived the strange phenomena.

When Dr. Kerner, in his report to theOberamtsgericht, pleaded for a further and thorough investigation of these phenomena, the lawyers thought it advisable to ask some other educated persons, and also several scientific, unprejudiced, trustworthy men to join in the inquiry. In consequence of this decision, the strange manifestations came under the observation of the following people: Professor Kapff, Kupferstecher Dullenhofer, Maler Wagner, Pfarrer Stookmayer, Rechtsanwalt Frass, Dr. Med. Sicherer, Baron Hugel von Eschenau, Pfarrer Maguin, Dr. Med. Kerner, Dr. Med. Seyffer, Oberamtsrichter Heyd—all of whom found themselves obliged to admit the truth of the occurrences.

Besides this most valuable evidence, there is also that of Diener Mayer, of the soldier Krust and of three male prisoners, all of whom during the night of Jan. 13-14, 1836 (at a time, therefore, when Eslinger was no longer in the prison), witnessed these ghost-phenomena and bore testimony to them. On several nights, between Dec. 19, 1835, and Jan. 28, 1836, the phantom appeared, invited and uninvited, in far-off houses, even in Heilbronn, which is three-quarters of a German mile distant, and made itself perceptible in the same way as in the prison. Several of the manifestations occurred at a time when Eslinger, who was released from prison on Jan. 11, 1836, had left this part of the country.

The following are the names of the receivers of these ghost visits:
Oberamtsgerichts-Besitzer Theurer (30-12-1835).
Lehrer Neuffer (30-12-1835), to whom the phantom came by chance; that is to say, on the occasion of another visit it paid in the same house.
Referendar Burger (30-12-1835) and 1-1-1836), to whom the phantom showed himself twice by request.
Burger Kumel and his son.
Landschaftsmaler Dorr, at Heilbronn (29-12-1835).
Professor Kapff, at Heilbronn, to whom the phantom came four times uninvited.
Baron Hugel von Eschenau.
Dr. Kerner, at whose house it often appeared in order to convince Kerner's wife and sister-in-law (Dec. 19, 21, 26, 1835; Jan. 20, 21, 24, 27, 1836.

Accounts of Witnesses.

Frau Eslinger's Experiences (abridged).—She was, at the time of her imprisonment, thirty-nine years of age, and a widow. She had several children. Although she had always to work hard to earn her living, she never had been ill. She possessed the ghost-seeing faculty from her childhood, but up to this time she had never come in close contact with "ghosts." (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 211: "Often enough already spectres had alarmed the mind of Regina.")

The ghost which disturbed her in prison had once before appeared to her in her home, when it was also perceived by her fourteen-year-old daughter. The phantom, which had first shown itself as a misty column, appeared now to her in the form of a man, wrapped in long drapery held together with a belt, and on his head he wore a four-cornered cop. His complexion was like that of parchment; he had prominent cheekbones, a projecting chin; he wore a long beard; he he had a high forehead and deep-set, glistening eyes. From this misty figure a hollow voice could often be heard, demanding her to offer up constant prayer for his redemption, which could be brought about by praying for him in the cellar of a woman in Wimmenthal, to which spot he was banished. The phantom also imparted to her that he was born in the year 1414, had been a Roman Catholic priest in Wimmenthal, and his name had been Anton. AMONG OTHER CRIMES, ONE COMMITTED WITH HIS BROTHER—VIZ., DEFRAUDING HIS BROTHERS OF THEIR MONEY, WAS WEIGHING SPECIALLY HEAVILY ON HIM. HE COULD NOT FORGET IT; IT HINDERED HIM.

She did not know whether it was all true, but the apparition had said it, so she had to believe it. She would not deny having thought it might be possible to discover treasures through the spectre. Often she put it before the ghost that she was only a poor sinner too. He had better turn to the Redeemer of all mankind—to the Savior—and he ought not to insist on her praying in a certain place for him. Such remonstrance always made him very sad, and more and more insistent.

The ghost comes often two or three times a night; yet he never comes before the evening bell, and never after the morning bell. Often he enters through the shut door, and at other times he comes through the barred windows, when you then hear a crash; and several times the door seems to be shut with a bang, as if it had been open. There is a dragging sound and a rustling paper also when he walks about in the room. Often he draws attention to himself by an intolerable mouldy smell, principally perceptible in his breath (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 214: "The blood exhaled a stench like the blood of the dead"). Often he would sit down on the edge of her bed or on those of the others. First he distinctly would put aside the cover, and then sit down on the bare wood. She never could touch him; she only touched the empty air; but he could touch her, and then she felt him (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 211: "The spirit precipitated himself on her with a violence, as though to embrace her." Page 218: "Regina's father advised his daughter to try and seize the spirit, and hold him when she saw him. She did so, but she held nothing save space and vain shadow"). The sensation of icy coldness, which she perceived with his touch, decreased in proportion as the apparitions increased in brilliancy. At first he touched her with his hand on her throat or chest, to draw, as it were, attention to his presence, which gave her the impression of cold, hard wood. By this touching she always got a spasm and attacks of suffocation. When he talked (which seldom happened when others were present) she never saw him move his lips (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 211: "Then he laments that so many strange persons prevent him from being able to speak." P. 220: "But the spirit whispered to Regina that he was unable to speak in presence of others than herself"). When she said the name of Jesus, his mouth was always open—otherwise shut—but she could never see when he opened it. His moaning and groaning was that of a man lost in utter despair; it was heard, too, by other people (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 218: "Many pepple heard him utter heavy sighs and groans"). While he was groaning the woman (Eslinger) often talked to other people, or she prayed.

One night the spectre came with an enormous dog, which opened its mouth widely. It jumped at once on the bed of the prisoner with an audible bump; the prisoner saw it, too, and screamed aloud. Then, quite as audibly, it jumped down and up to another woman. This woman was horrified and screamed, but the ghost said: "Do not be afraid, this is my father." The spectre came several times with the dog; one such occasions all the women in the morning felt wretchedly ill and nearly dead with fright.

Later on instead of the dog, a black human body without a head appeared. This one came also with two lambs—seen as well by other people. These lambs often floated up on the apparition's shoulders, where they turned into stars. Most likely this had a symbolic significance. In this symbolic fashion the figures of still living persons predicted their visits, for they afterwards came to see her in prison—for instance, Oberamtsrichter Heyd, myself and others.

Later on, Eslinger saw several gentlemen, mentioned in the record, whom she insisted upon having seen previously through the personifications of the ghost, and she was astonished to see the same figures in reality. Another manifestation of a premonitory nature occurred when on several nights the figure of Heyd, appearing quite lifelike, came with the ghost. Eslinger looked at him with astonishment, for in an instant he grew black from the feet upwards and above his face. Eslinger told me this in the morning, but neither she nor I were able to find any explanation for this turning black. After a lapse of several months the same manifestation repeated itself with the difference that this time I appeared also with Heyd and the ghost and we walked up to Eslinger's bed. Heyd shook my hand, and in an instant he again became black from his feet to his face. I made Eslinger ask the ghost what was the meaning of this getting black, and the answer came: "Mourning." And after some days a child of Heyd's died quite suddenly, and then I remembered that after the first spreading of blackness over Heyd his father died; this death was therefore predicted by the blackness.

When the time approached for Eslinger's release from prison, the ghost told her that, after she went home, he would continue to visit those homes where he had been before. The nearer the time came for Eslinger to leave, the more the ghost urged her to pray with him. She succeeded in persuading the ghost to give up his wish, that she should pray with him in the cellar of a certain Frau Singhaas in Wimmenthal; however, he insisted on her being at an appointed place, not far from Wimmenthal, on Feb, 11, at 3 o'clock in the morning, to pray with him there, kneeling under the open sky

Unfortunately, I (Kerner) was prevented by my professional duties from being present at this meetings, but I persuaded Eslinger to go there, as I know by experience that by exactly fulfilling the request of such apparitions, you get rid of them the sooner. So she made up her mind, and betook herself on Feb. 11 to the appoined spot near Wimmenthal, accompanied by her sisters, some friends, and Frau Christine Wormer, who possessed the power of second sight, and was well known, as thoroughly reliable, to all the inhabitants of Wainsburg. The account of this witness was afterwards recorded in the protocol, drawn up by Heyd, she having sworn to the truth of it by God and her conscience.

Witness Christine Wormer: "On Feb. 11, at 3 o'clock in the morning, I drove with Frau Eslinger and her companions to the place appointed by the apparitions. The weather was very stormy: When we arrived Eslinger knelt down on the spot indicated; we stood about thirty feet behind, and kept deep silence. Eslinger prayed aloud for half an hour, and what I then say can be also be testified to by the others, although they were not able to see everything so distinctly. I am not related to this person (Eslinger), and neither spoke to her nor saw her before, and do not know why I should say anything in favor of her that is not true, but I saw during the prayer that a luminous figure moved towards her, in appearance like a man, which was soon followed by two other luminous forms, small, like little clouds. When the prayer was finished I could hear indescribably sweet singing, coming from one of these little clouds. I saw the large apparition approaching Eslinger still nearer, at which moment a light, like a shooting star, flew onto her, and then I did not see anything but a white cloud of fair height, which floated down to the earth and up again. Whereupon it grew dark round Eslinger. We waited another quarter of an hour, but as we did not hear nor see anything more we walked up to Eslinger, and found her lying on the ground, cold and unconscious. Brought to herself again, she said that the apparition, in bidding her farewell, had asked for her hand, but before giving it she first wrapped it in a cloth. Then a little flame appeared and flickered up, and we found holes (without smell) burnt in the cloth, perhaps where the fingers of the apparition had touched it" (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 219:. "Taking the letters between his three first fingers, his hand being doubtless a hand of flame, he penetrated them as though by a contact with a flame—see illustration").. (Comp. also: Das Madchen von Orlach, pp. 40, 41). "Eslinger said that as the apparition had warned her beforehand, this did not frighten her so much as did a crowd of horrible animal shapes, which came rushing past her after the apparition, together with two little luminous forms of children, had floated up on a cloud that came from above; then she had dropped unconscious to the ground."

From that hour, neither by Eslinger nor in the prison nor in other houses was anything heard, seen, felt or smelt of the apparition in question.

There remains only to give the narrations of the impressions made on other persons by that which, according to Eslinger, professed to be a dep rted spirit. Considering the great number of witnesses, and the manifold impressions of the apparition which they received and described, we find ourselves compelled make a careful selection, enough to give a clear representation of the whole affair:

The wife of Diener Mayer, an honest and trustworthy woman, who, together with her niece, seventeen years of age, passed the night of Nov. 10-11 in Eslinger's prison cell, saw, towards midnight, a light floating in through the window. "The light was yellow like sulphur, and floated softly. I felt with it a soft, cool breeze, although everything was shut up. Soon the light and the cool breeze came nearer, and the cover of my bed became so lighted up, that I saw it clearly, as well as my arms and hands. At the same time,, however, there came into my nose an indescribable, repulsive, rotten smell, and in my face I had a sensation as of ants running over it. The light withdrew from me, and floated softly to and fro, and I perceived, over the locked prison door a quantity of sparkling stars, more beautiful than anything I have ever seen before. Soon both of us distinctly heard speaking—a sound not to be compared with anything else; it went on while the woman (Eslinger) prayed, and while she talked to us. The words sounded as if spoken into hollow space, and as if they were lifted up, so speak, from the floor to the ceiling. I thought it strange that I always felt beforehand when the ghost was going to speak." (See p. 22, Herr Fraas' report.)

Dr. Kerner put down the following account from the experiences of Frederike Tollin from Lowenstein: On some nights the apparition bent right over her, saying into her ears that she should get out of her evil ways, now that she had a last chance given her, and that she ought to consider that he was not a common human being who was telling her so, but one who had tasted that which comes after death. Once, when the apparition stood near Eslinger's bed, she, Frederike Tollin, was swearing in her sleep; at once, like an arrow, the spirit shot over to her, and, touching her with a finger, caused a cramp in her chest, and woke her; a luminous column of mist stood before her bed, and made her say a prayer. When the spirit had left, both of them had the impression as if a swarm of pigeons was flying through the room, making melodious sounds with their wings.

Christine Mosnerin heard something running about, as if in stockings, and it did something to the skirt, hanging on the wall, as if it shook it. At 12 o knocked so hard on her bed that the bed trembled (Comp. Annals, April, 1905, p. 211: "First of all he knocked three times on her bed") At 11:30 it knocked once, then it seemed as if it scraped on the floor and put itself into her bed; she felt it touching her back. Getting up again, it made a bump, as if something was falling on the floor. Then again, some nights after this, something had been pulling at her cover, but she held on so tightly that her nails ached, whereupon it had lain down on her.

Friederike Welling, from Grossbottwar, states: It seemed to her as if a grey shadow was bending over her, and she had the feeling of something stroking her neck, and her hair stood on end. She, too, noticed a disgusting stench, which made her sick. In the following night a hollow sigh came right into her left ear, which woke her, and for some time after she suffered there from pain and a swellling.

In Margaretha Leibesberg's (from Lachweiler) diary, which she kept during her imprisonment by Dr. Kerner's wish, we read: "One night I heard three crashes, like shots, with no after sound, and then something came shuffling in. Next night there was again a crash, accompanied by superhuman shrieks and knocks on my bed, where I slept by myself. On the night of Dec. 16 I was very frightened. Frau Eslinger noticed this, and she called out: "Come here, in God's name and look at him; he won't hurt you.' Then I looked out from my bedclothes and saw on the floor two white forms, like two little lambs, and they were so beautiful I could not take my eyes off them. In their midst I saw a shadow, as tall as a man, but I was unable to look at him for a long time, my eyes failed me. On Dec. 17, at 11 o'clock, Overamtsrichter Heyd came with Referendar Burger, and they lay down on the other bedstead. At 12 o'clock the shadow came through the window near our bed. It came quite silently; it only floated quietly through the room, remained outside for some time, and came back. It floated round about the head of Frau Eslinger, and then over to my side, reached over me, and pulled my cover violently away. I screamed. Herr Heyd asked why I screamed like that, and I answered: 'The shadow has taken away my cover;' but the gen-

of ACTINA, the Greatest

EYE REMEDY

Ever Invented.

No Cutting—No Drugging

If you have any eye disease or your eyesight is weak, you should lose no time in investigating "Actina." We can supply you with all the evidence the most skeptical persons could exact that the "Actina" instrument, invented and patented by Prof. W. C. Wilson, has cured many stubborn forms of eye disease of ten to fifteen years' standing even after prominent specialists had pronounced them as being incurable. Not only has it done this, but is has strengthened the eyesight so that spectacles in many cases have been entirely abandoned.

"Actina" is so simple in construction and so logical in application that it at once appeals to the common-sense mind as well as to the most scientific. One of our noted expert chemists states —"Actina is an up-to-date method of treatment; cannot possibly do harm but can only prove beneficial."

So confident are we that the "Actina" is capable of relieving or curing the different forms of eye disease or strengthening the eyesight so that spectacles may be abandoned, we will gladly send you one on trial with full directions which you can thoroughly test for two weeks. If at the end of that time you are willing to part with it, send it back and no charge will be made. Here is an opportunity of testing a reliable treatment, sold by a reliable concern without any cost to you, if the treatment does not appeal to you.

Permit us to send you a copy of our 64-page book, which illustrates and describes the cause and relief of diseases of the eye, ear, nose, throat and head. It will interest you and is fully worth the postal card that will bring it. Address Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342F, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

The sixth grand picnic will be given by the Spiritualists' Society Light and Truth, assisted by the singing society, "Eintracht," on Sunday, June 28, 1908, at Hoerdt's grove, 2 E. Belmont avenue, Chicago, Ill. Bowling, footraces and all kinds of amusements for young and old. Western, Clybourn and Belmont avenue cars run direct to the grove. Everybody welcome. Tickets, 25 cents a person.

Julius Wagner, from Allegheny, Pa., writes: "We had two splendid meetings at the Church of Life, June 21st, at the G. A. R. Hall. The writer gave his opinion in regard to the location of the spirit world, and was followed by the Rev. J. M. Francis and Mr. Hansel and a few others. In the evening these were tests by some of the local mediums, all doing splendid work."

Mrs. C. Berger writes: "The Fraternal semi-monthly social, which was held at thehome of Mrs. J. Staner Adams on Wednesday, June 24, which was also the occasion of the Fifth (wooden) Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Adams, was certainly a lovely and profitable affair. A goodly sum was realized for the Daughter's treasury. The wooden ceremony of the couple was performed at 8:30 p. m. by our President, Dr. Caird, holding meanwhile a wooden paddle, a present to sister Adams, and which served to make the ceremony more impressive. A hand-painted plate given the Daughters by Mrs. W. A. Bloom, was raffled and brought a satisfactory sum. With the liberal donations of Sons and Daughters, the couple were presented with a beautiful combination bookcase and writing desk, which pleased them mightily. Presentation speech by Mrs. Caird. An appropriate and beautiful song by Mrs. Lilly Goldstein was applauded and encored. The next social will be held at the home of Mrs. Goldstein, 420 Ogden ave., West of Robey street, on Wednesday afternoon and evening of July 8th. We hope all will come and bring friends." ( Correspondent writes: "The Elgin Picnic was a howling success in every way. The weather was good, the attendance was large, about three hundred good appetites, plenty to eat, plenty of good coffee, water that was pure and cold, perfect harmony, mirth and love—a veritable feast for soul and body. Good short speeches and splendid messages of comfort for all who were fortunate enough to receive them. The Lyceum work came in for its share of attention from Miss Roubie, Miss Loebel of Milwaukee, and Mrs. Bloom and Mrs. Hilbert and others. Not many children from the city of Chicago were there, but Miss Roubie enrolled in the thirties, and the outlook is cheering for a lyceum in Elgin. Mrs. West of Elgin, under the influence of her guides, delivered the address of welcome in beautiful style and in the sweetness of the angel world. This was responded to by Dr. T. Wilkins, President I. S. S. A. and Dr. C. A. Burgess, President of the Chicago Spiritualist League. Mrs. Nora E. Hill gave the invocation, and short talks were made by Mr. Booth of Rockford, Judge Wm. Smith of Janesville, Wis., on education and the Morris Pratt Institute; Mr. Wilde of Genoa, in a foreign tongue; Mr. Sidwell, secretary of the Chicago Spiritualist League. The message bearers were Mrs. Bloom, Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Weaver and Miss Susie Thompson of Chicago and Mrs. West of Elgin. These picnics are to be an annual affair from this time on, and may be expected to increase in interest. No doubt there will be 500 people on hand at the next—to be announced in due time as to date. Missionary influence is thus exerted, even though the weather may chance to be a little torrid, and the cause enhanced accordingly. The poem by Dr. Wilkins for the occasion, will be found in another column. But the part of the program that riveted the large audience to the bosom of Mother Earth were the two recitations by Mrs. Niver, teacher of oratory in the Morris Pratt School. Many handkerchiefs were in use during the pathetic part of the last recitation, and all fell in love with the little daughter of Our Moses." (Such he is still.)"

John M. Cook writes from Zimmerman, Minn.: "I get my Progressive Thinker regularly, having missed only one copy a year. I think it is one of the greatest papers in this or any other country, and every man woman and child should read it. If I were able I would have a million for gratuitous distribution. Yes, clean out the fakes, and then let the bright lights cut off the "REV." from their names, and put "P. T." in its place—Progressive Thought, Progressive Teacher, yes!"

Thos. S. Kizer writes from Decatur, Ill.: "We have had the Rev. J. Madison Allen of Springfield, Mo., with us for four weeks. He left for Springfield on Saturday. His guides gave us some fine lectures, messages and tests which were highly appreciated by all who enjoyed the same. The attendance was not what it might have been in a different season of the year. We feel that our glorious cause will be benefited by his labors among us, and would cheerfully recommend him to any society as an earnest worker in the cause of truth. Brother Allen is also a good musician, performing on piano, organ or violin. He sang and played some of his own composition."

There will be a circle at the home of Charles A. Thompson every Thursday evening, 8 p. m., 615 Monroe st. Phone Ogden3928. Admission 25c.

Pine Grove Camp Meeting, Niantic, Conn., commencing June 13, continues until September 19. Hepsy C. Boden, Secretary, Willimantic, Conn.

Central New York Camp Meeting, at Freeville, N. Y., commencing July 25, closes August 23. B. L. Robinson, Secretary, Dryden, N. Y.

Sunapee Lake Camp Meeting, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., commences August 9, closing August 30. John W. Clay, Secretary, Sutton, N. H,

June 28 was the last meeting of the season at the Temple, Buffalo, N. Y., Prof. Lockwood being the speaker.

Mrs. M. A. Logue writes from Butte Mont.:: "We wish you success in your good work. The Progressive Thinker is an educator. May its circulation increase ten-fold. Either Charles Dawbarn's or Henry Morrison Tefft's articles, are worth the price of a year's subscription. The Hon. A. B. French's address is an inspiration and an incentive to live a good and useful life. In the 15 years of my residence in Butte, there never has been so much interest manifested in Spiritualism as at the present time. Every Sunday my home is filled with anxious seekers for the truth of spirit return. Many young people have joined our society. We hope to organize a Lyceum in the near future."

For many years the Spiritualists of Nashua, N. H., have not held any meetings, and at the earnest request of several Mrs. Richmond L. Bishop of Swampscott, Mass., held two very successful services, June 7. Mrs. Maude Litch Bishop held meetings the following Sunday. The audiences were large and enthusiastic, and so much interest was created that the people hope to be able to organize a society in the near future.

Notice—P. J. Metcalfe, speaker and message bearer, who has just come from England, desires platform and missionary work. He has had 24 years' experience. Will be glad to hear from societies at once with terms, etc. Address him in care of Box 482 Magog, Quebec, Canada.

Dr. James Doty writes from Rochester, N. Y.: "Mrs. May L. Price has been assisting in the work at Plymouth Spiritual Church, of Rochester, N. Y. Since the State Convention she gave a very able and instructive lecture the first night of the convention, and her tests and messages Sunday afternoon, following Lyman C. Howe's address, were of an excellent quality, clearly stated and recognized by all to whom they were given. Mrs. Price is before the public as a platform worker, and we consider a society fortunate who can secure her services. She goes from here to serve other societies, but any letter addressed to her at Morton, N. Y. will reach her."

Mr, H. E. Howes having just finished a four months' engagement with the Spiritualist Society of Tacoma, Wash., would be pleased to book dates with societies for Sunday and week night lectures, followed, if desired, by tests and spirit messages. All letters should be addressed to H. E. Howes, New Era, Oregon, as he is booked for the New Era Camp from July 11 to August 3; at liberty after that.

Laura La Flower writes from Port Angeles, Wash.: "Last week Mrs. John Murry of Seattle dropped in unknown and unexpectedly, and gave to a favored few many unmistakable evidences of a future life, and the possibility of communication with the dear ones. Her mediumship is of a high order, and the friends who were so fortunate as to meet her, are anxious for a repetition of her visit."

The Hyde Park Occult Society saw fit to close its doors and quit, on Sunday, June 29. This society has had a struggle for existence for the past year, and at times the outlook was extremely discouraging. Mrs. O. B. Wilson has been faithful, as have all the workers who worked, but the officers cannot make a society a success without the enthusiasm of the attendance. Mrs. Wilson contemplates moving to St. Louis in a short time.

Mrs. E. Harper, medium, writes: "I wish to thank the good people, one and all for their assistance, during the past months, while I was in the hospital and while convalescing, and especially Mrs. Jackson of Syracuse, N. Y., who donated so liberally to my aid, through her old acquaintance, Miss Roubie, Secretary of the State Association. These aids shall never be forgotten while consciousness lasts. I want to again thank one and all."

Dr. T. Wilkins writes: "The Elgin Picnic Group Pictures are said to be good, and all wishing one, mounted can have the same for fifty cents, by sending your order to me at 40 Loomis Street, or to Miss Eugenia Roubie, 567 E. 62nd Street, Chicago."

A black silk parasol, with ivory handle, mounted with silver and with two tassels, was lost at Elgin picnic, perhaps taken through mistake, and as it was a gift to the owner from her son now in spirit life, it should be returned, if not for the honor of the act. Send to Dr. T. Wilkins, or drop him a card, at 40 Loomis street.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's summer engagements: Unity Park, Wonewoc, Wis., July 12 to 21; Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, July 26 to 30; Corry, Pa. (probably), July 31 to Aug. 4; Lily Dale, Aug. 5 to 12; Cuba, N. Y. probably), Onset, Mass., Aug. 18 to 23.

Harrison D. Barrett writes from Portland, Ore.: "President Warne reached here June 22. Our local Spiritualists purpose giving him a welcome that will cause him to cast a longing, lingering look Oreganward when he returns to Chicago It will be a gala week for us while he is here. Oregon Spiritualists are alive, and are loyal to REAL SPIRITUALISM."

Correspondent writes: "The Dedicatory services of the new Hall to be hereafter occupied by the Progressive Spiritualist Church (colored), at 2959 State Street, was a grand success, and these good people go into their new home feeling that the spirit world is back of the move, and at the rate of growth of the society, they may soon have to move again. Short speeches were made by Dr. T. Wilkins, President of the State Association, Dr. C. A. Burgess, President of the Chicago Spiritualist League, Dr. A. Caird, President of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists, Mrs. Nora Hill, who also offered the invocation and the words of dismissal, Rev. J. H. Demby, pastor of the Church, Mrs. B. Hilbert; the messages being given by Mrs Campbell, Mrs. Weaver and Mrs. Lyons, and all did remarkable work. This starts these people off in good shape for the summer, and much good is expected to be derived for the cause in this new home. Rev. Demby will take a short vacation in Kansas this week, and will, no doubt, be re-energized by the fresh air and sun of the Sunflower State. His daughter sang beautifully at the dedicatory services. She certainly has a beautiful voice, and the audience appreciated her introductory song."

Later in August or September Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will probably visit friends in the Catskills. The Church of the Soul resumes its services Sunday, September 13.

Hattie F. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes: "The next 'Summer Social,' given under the auspices of the Band of Harmony, will be in the form of a Picnic, at Lincoln Park, Thursday afternoon and evening, July 9. Coffee served on the lawn at 6 p. m., as usual; coffee checks, 10c. Ladies will bring lunch for themselves and friends; also cup, plate, fork and spoon. Meet at 2 p. m. at the Center Street entrance to park. All members and friends cordially invited."

Mrs. Dr. Caird, secretary, writes: "Saturday, July 4, the Illinois Sunflower Club will hold a picnic at Lake Bluff. Spiritualists of Chicago and vicinity are cordially invited. Do not fail to avail yourselves of this opportunity to enjoy the lake breeze. Bring your lunch. Coffee will be served free. The fare from Evanston will be 40 cents for the round-trip. Come and bring your friends. The club will hold its monthly business meeting, July 14th, at 70 E. Adams street, Lincoln Hall."

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen writes: "All Spiritualists and their friends, and friends' friends, are cordially invited to join the Sunflower Club and spend the Fourth of July at Minnetonka Cottage, Lake Bluff. Take the Northwestern Elevated, Evanston branch, to Evanston; fare 10 cents; thence the Milwaukee Electric to Lake Bluff. Round-trip, 40 cents; time, 52 minutes. Cars run every 15 minutes. Leave cars at station near Northwestern Depot; then go east towards the lake. Someone will be at the station during the early part of the day, to direct the friends. The walk to the cottage is a delightful one. Bring your lunch. Coffee will be served free of charge. Bring your family and friends. Come early and have a good time. A special brand of fine weather has been reserved for the occasion."

MOST REMARKABLE FORESIGHT.

Woman Sees Husband Slain in a Dream—Identifies the Murderer From the Vision—Even Smallest Details of the Tragedy Were Carried Out as She Saw Them Pictured—Her Letter Warning Him of Impending Peril, Was First Clew to Identity.

"You did it! You did it! "

Mrs. A. C. Gregg pointed at Lon Hatfield whom she had singled out of a dozen men at police headquarters in Chattanooga, Tenn.

It was the verificaton of her dream.

Two weeks before A. C. Gregg, a traveling salesman of Mt. Vernon, was murdered and his body thrown into a creek near Lookout mountain, his wife saw the tragedy enacted in a dream. So strongly did it impress her that she wrote him a letter of warning.

This letter, found upon his body, was the means of identification. It depicted with startling clearness the scene where the murder occurred. "I am sure," she wrote, "that if my dream comes true, I will be able to identify your murderer."

She begged Gregg to return home at once. His 6-year-old daughter, Mary, added a postscript, warning him and begging him to come home at once.

Mrs. Gregg went to Chattanooga in response to a request from the police who had identified the body through her letter. Her description of the lonely spot where the murder occurred tallied exactly with the place where the body was found.

Lon Hatfield had been arrested for the crime, circumstantial evidence pointing to his guilt. Not knownig this, Mrs. Gregg described Hatfield to a dot, as the dream murderer. As a further test Hatfield, dressed as he was when arrested, was placed inconspicuously among a dozen men. Mrs. Gregg was taken into the room and asked if among the men was the one she had seen kill her husband in her dream.

Without hesitation she picked Hatfield, then fell to the floor in a swoon.

Mrs. Gregg says that every important incident of her life has been foreshadowed by a dream. She declares absolute confidence that Hatfield murdered her husband.— Cleveland (Ohio) Press.

"The Soul of Things; or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries", by Wm. Denton. The three volumes of this book contain much valuable matter, and though concise as a text book it is fascinating as a work of fiction, embracing as they do valuable matter covering the entire globe. Nothing has ever been written of more value to the investigator. Complete in three volumes. Price $1.60 each.

"The Warfare of Science With Theology." By Andrew D. White, LL.D. The two large volumes of about 900 pages are indispensable to the student, and no library is complete without these. Price $5.00.

SPIRITS DISAGREE.

To Believe or Not To Beliefe, That Is the Question.

If two or more equally reliable persons make statements in plain contradiction to each other, would not a person be foolish to accept any of their teaching as a fact, without corroborative proof? We find that apparently wise spirits through tried mediums disagree on many points in regard to natural law governing in spirit life. We have heard the spirit control say that there was no such thing as reincarnation, and another spirit control through another medium state that spirits were reincarnated. We have asked many questions which the spirit refused to answer, and once on being told that if I was in the control's place I would answer the question, the quick reply was that if you did you would not be here very long.

In answer to the question, "Is the bible true," after some delay the answer came that "the 'its,' 'ands' and 'ifs' in it were all right," and the above was received through a medium under thirteen years of age. The reader is left to judge for himself whether the answer about the bible came from an old head or from the child-medium.

Between the refusal to answer some questions, the delay in answering others, and the disagreement in spirit statements, it would appear to be the safe way to listen to all said, and believe nothing in regard to details of life in spirit land.

There is good reason to think it is about the same as it is here. The wise man and the fool will be there. The controlling politician and dictating priest will be there.

The royal families and titled nobility will be there, and in numbers millions of times greater than here, and if there are no impositions practiced, no injustice permitted, no partiality shown, all earthly desires summarily squelched, individual gratifications all surrendered to a heavenly host, then I want to know it, rather than take any word for it.

I cannot think that a long life of viciousness, seventy years of selfishness, with the masses under religious and business boss rule, and a world of women muzzled and slaves to sentiments enacted into laws that they had no voice in, will all be blended into one harmonious whole by the change called death.

On awakening, the writer often remembers what he has heard during sleep.

Recently the following was received: "If you could reach the infinite source of all being, and get an answer back, you would not know where it came from, any more than a goat would know who his father was."

This would indicate that a state of uncertainty exists in all states of life. You do not know who you are, what you are, or where you are.

ANTOINETTE.

To My Dear Niece and Her Baby.

There's a treasure in your household money never brought,
'Tis the mystery of creation through your beings wrought;
Dimpl'd little darling, who once seeing could forget,
Treasure of the household, precious little Antoinette?

Myst'ry 'tis, her coming I can scarcely yet divine,—
Seems to be a union of the Father's Love and thine;
With your home, to hold the treasure
He the jewel set,
You now call, the lovely trinket precious Antoinette.

Perfect seems the household with you,
happy, jolly three,
I but hope that Joy and Peace may always hallow thee;
Just you love your babe and never once you stop to fret,
God is keeper of thy treasure, darling
Antoinette.

JOHN W. RING.

OPPORTUNITY.

That I knock but once upon your door
Is a mistake that you often hear,
For all day long I stand and knock,
And bid you banish fear.
And call you out to meet mankind
In its struggles and distress,
And if the fight you enter in
I'll lead you to success.

I play no favorites in the game of life,
I've only one purpose in view
To help all those who heed my call,
That are honest, brave and true.
Then, talk not of misfortune,
And what other men can do,
Fortune is a lazy goddess,
She will never come to you.

Waste not your days lamenting
The years you've lived in vain
There is no time like the present,
And it will never come again.
Envy not your fellow men
Their honor, wealth or skill,
For all these things I'll bring to you
If you bravely say, "I will!"

Then do not be discouraged,
If at first you don't succeed,
If your struggle with the selfish
And the narrow views of creed,
For each night I burn the records
Of mistakes that cause you pain,
And with the bright and rising sun
Knock on your door again.

But when I've led you to success,
This favor I shall ask,
That you kindly help your fellow man
In life's unequal task.
And then when death shall call you,
And you need my aid no more
The help you gave your fellow man
Will open heaven's door.

A NOTABLE RESIDENCE.

The Villa Montezuma, San Diego, Cal.

This unique and splendid residence, located at 2845, K. St., was the scene of a grand reception and old-fashioned house-warming on the evening of June 10.

This magnificent house was built by the friends and admirers of Jesse Sheppard, the far-famed musical medium, and there is nothing to approach it in elegance of appointments, at least on the Pacific Coast; standing as it does, in a class by itself—Jesse Sheppard, whose wonderful seances are remembered by many old-time Spiritualists, has lived abroad for the past twenty years, while this temple of music has been devoted to the more ordinary uses of life. It has now been leased by the well-known mediums, Mrs. Montgomery and her daughter, Mrs. Smith, and on the evening mentioned, more than two hundred of their friends and patrons assembled to re-dedicate this temple to uses for which it was designed. The program consisted of short speeches, recitations and musical numbers, after which light lunch was served.

A happier and more merry crowd it would be hard to find, and festivities continued until the approach of the "wee sma" hours admonished that it was time to repair to "the blankets."

The seances of these mediums are growing in popularity and are largely attended by our town people, but special seances are arranged for out-of-town people, from La Jolla, and other near points

The Sunday afternoon seance, held June 14, was remarkable for the clearness of the voices and the number, as well as length of personal messages given; many of which were given to persons with whom the mediums are entirely unacquainted, and I have yet to hear of the slightest dissatisfaction by any of their patrons.

Again, let me say that these physical demonstrations (tabooed in certain high (?) quarters) continue to present the most indubitable proof of the continuity of life, notwithstanding the skepticism of our good sister, Hawley-Gordon, and others.

I am credibly informed that intellectual seances of a high order regularly held by the guides of our esteemed brother, A. R Gibbs, at 1361 Tenth St., while the parlors of Isa Wilson-Kaynor, 1054 Tenth st., are on Tuesday evenings filled to overflowing. Each and all mentioned are in their private readings giving great satisfaction. Our temple work goes on uninterruptedly, harmoniously and satisfactorily, with Mrs. Kaynor as present speaker.

Surely it does seem that as never before, have spirit intelligences in this sunny land combined in demonstrating the continuity of life and the immortality of man. Let the good work go on.

Message From an Old Worker, Now in Spirit Life.

Since coming to the spirit world I have found many conditions existing on earth that were undreamed of by myself. I was a common, ordinary man, who lived on a farm. I worked hard, yet found time to inform myself upon the things that pertained to a future life. Now I am glad that I had a little knowledge; it is better to have a little, than none at all.

I came to this life a little over a year ago. I have visited earth every day since, coming here and, am surprised at the condition of things among the rank and file of Spiritualists. The cause is a just and true one, but it is hampered and abused by a class of people calling themselves mediums, who are no better than the traveling fakirs, who advertise to do such wonderful things, when in reality they are but leeches to bleed the gullible. I am astounded when I see people flocking to this class of mediums to know whether they are going to get married, and if so, when and to whom. Then they want to know where that mine is located, and a thousand other things that are of no value whatever. Not one out of a thousand ever ask how they can become better fitted to enter the next life. Their whole minds are taken up with worldly matters, and things that pertain to earth.

Now, when this class of gullibles approach one of these tricksters, they bring with them a set of guides who are on the same plane of thought, viz.: worldly affairs, and what is the consequence? Truly, Mr. Gullible is faked or cheated out of from one to ten dollars of their sometimes hard-earned money. Then they wonder why they ever went to that medium; yet, when another faker hangs out a shingle, they are taken in again, and so it goes, on and on until they lose any faith they may ever have had, and consequently pronounce Spiritualism and its teachers fraud.

While on the other hand, if these tricksters were not allowed to carry on their nefarious business, and only true spiritual mediums were in evidence, no one would be cheated out of one cent; all would receive more than value received for the amount paid. Now when this comes to pass, and none but the pure in heart are allowed to commune with the spirit world, the fakirs will be put out of business and hundreds of men and women calling themselves spiritual mediums will have to seek other employment.

Then, and not until then, will Spiritualism lift up its fair face of truth and step boldly forth. Then will the cause of justice and right prevail, and all will know that when they receive a message from a loved one who is only behind the veil, it is true and is, as represented, a message to you from a father, a mother or other loved one.

Now may the time hasten when this condition will prevail on the earth; and now may the angels attest the truth of what has been written through the hand of this medium, my daughter. Yours for truth only,

J. RIGDON. a Spirit.

DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago. Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

N. S. A. Convention at Indianapolis, Ind.

It is somewhat premature to announce the convention of the N. S. A. to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 20 to 24, 1908, but it is early receiving so much attention, and so many are interested that it is best to state the exact date, as above.

The convention will begin on Tuesday morning, and conclude not later than midnight of the following Saturday. Many who are now arranging to attend, and as delegates desire the facts of the coming important assembly, will appreciate this advance notice, if my correspondence warrants such a conclusion.

The early interest in the annual convention is certainly an indication of a grand one to be held this year.

Announcements will be made soon; and these suppled to all who may desire. The addition of a Monday night reception, and the following Sunday mass-meetings, will increase the desire of many to attend.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In Reference to the Indiana State Association.

The Indiana State Association of Spiritualists, through the management and kindness of the Chesterfield camp organization, has been granted the privilege of holding a Grove Basket Massmeeting on Sunday, July 19. This is just one Sunday before the beautiful grove is opened to the public proper for the camp season.

The Indiana State Association is working hard to make all arrangements for the coming N. S. A. convention, which will be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, Oct. 20 to 24. The best of talent will be secured, and message bearers will be present.

The camp season is short this year, and this will afford an opportunity to visit the beautiful grove early and hear speakers who are not on the camp program. The State Board desires a full attendance, that they may present their state work to the people of Indiana. Remember the date, July 19.

E. A. SCHRAM,

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

As chairman of the committee appointed at the last convention of the N. S. A. to prepare an up-to-date book of music, crisp and modern in its words and tunes, intended to promote harmony and awaken the higher inspirations of attendants at all kind of Spiritualist services, I am able to report substantial progress in the work. Some appropriate music, and also excellent words for arrangement to notes have been already received.

Any one having suitable words or tunes, either or both, are invited to forward them right away. Remember, we cannot use anything upon which the copyright has not expired, without permission of the author, or composer, which rights run for 28 years, and may have one extension of 14 years more, or 42 years in all. Much interest in the outcome of this undertaking is being manifested. We hope our fellow Spiritualists all over the country will send us their suggestions and contributions of a helpful nature. Let us join hands to do the work in such a way, that the book will be a subject for pride, and set all our people to singing Spiritualism, not only with the lips, but from the heart, with the spirit and the understanding.

Any one wishing to give substantial encouragement to the committee's labors, is invited to forward me at Centreville, Michigan, pledges of financial contribution towards the expenses.

OBITUARIES.

Passed to spirit life from his home in Newville, Indiana, an May 25, Mr. B. F. Blair, age 74 years. He was well known throughout the country and highly respected by all. He was a true Spiritualist and a constant reader of The Progressive Thinker for years, and thoroughly understood the Spiritual philosophy. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, one daughter, one son, and a host of friends. funeral services from the home on May 27, at 2 p. m.. Mr. Fred Dunakin of Cecil, Ohio, officiating.

WHAT IS LIFE?

What is Life? A transient day,
Hurrying from the world away
Like fleeting clouds or fragile flower
That comes and goes within an hour.

What is Youth? A pleasant dream
Flitting o'er Life's troubled stream;
A sunbeam shining on the river,
Sparkling now, then gone forever.

Haste thou! Oh, haste, nor idly stray,
Life's joys are fleeting, hopes decay;
Fond growth departs; its dreams are o'er;
'Tis gone, and will return no more.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

M. L. T.:—Q.—By liberalists it is asserted that the churches are declining, and on the other hand, the church organs claim that the membership is increasing with astonishing rapidity. What is the truth?

A.—That the churches have not the power and influence they had in the past generation, that the preachers have not the authority, goes without saying. We may gather only the reports made by the church organs, to become conscious that ministers of the gospel are in a permanent depression of the blues. As the orthodox Baptist Standard, of Chicago, says: "Nine-tenths of all preachers in my acquaintance, are discouraged.'

Why discouraged? Because of empty pews when they are pouring forth their most eloquent sermons, and the general want of interest among the laity. The attendance is described as so small that a shot gun might be fired through the center of the church without danger of harming any one!

Thomas Dixon, in the Arena, gives startling figures drawn from New York City. In 1855 there was a church to every 2,126 of the population. In 1906 there was one Protestant church to every 3,312 of the population. Dr. Aked says: "Call to mind what you know of abandoned enterprises; of strategetic positions deserted; weak churches that have joined other churches probably to preserve an independent existence; call to mind the slight attention given by the press to preachers and sermons; or consider the small influence of the churches as churches, strikes terror to the heart. In the borough of Manhattan there were 335 churches. Through the course of a long twelve months' work, with their preaching and praying and giving and working, with all the machinery of demonstration and organization, these 335 churches added 386 to the membership, and this with a million of people untouched!" It was a gain of scarcely more than one member for each church!

New York may conservatively be taken as representtive of the whole country, and as typifying the religious state of the whole world, according to Dr. Aked.

He says: "In Russia the peasants are becoming either indifferent to the Greek church or hostile to it. In Austria there is revolt against ecclesiastical authority. In Germany attendance at worship is falling off. In Italy and Spain it is the same thing—everybody knows how enormous is the proportion of the French people untouched by the church. In Great Britain there is echo of ominous depression. The Anglican church finds it harder to get preachers; the condition of the Methodist church is distressing in the extreme and the Baptists are going through a period of marked depression.

"Dr. Josiah Strong makes an absolutely appalling statement with regard to the gains of the churches of this country at the present time as compared with earlier victories. He says: 'If the gain of the church on the population during the first half of the century is represented by 80, during the last half it is represented by 20, during the last 20 years it is represented by 4, and during the last 10 years it is represented by1.' "

This testimony of the church leaders should be taken as conclusive, for had not the situation been distressing the admission would not have been made. The best minds are not attracted to the ministry. People are weary of hearing the old texts threshed over and over. The mediocre preachers may mistake the dust they create for wheat—the laity do not. They do not attend church, because it has become an intolerable penance to do so. The preachers have nothing to say but repeat the old lessons and the laity stay away, "so a shot gun may be fired through the center of the church and wound no one!"

It would not hit a man—it possibly might a woman! Woman, abused and degraded since the days of Paul, degraded because she brought original sin into the world—whatever that may be—by her generous impulse for knowledge, has been so long a slave, she hugs her chains in superstitous ignorance. She shrinks not from the burdens the beloved pastor heaps upon her. She runs the dime socials, the sewing circles, the grab-bags and other lottery schemes, engages in missionary work to send petticoats and pantaloons to the steaming savages of benighted Africa, under the mistaken belief that wearing clothes is an acknowledgment of sin and profession of religion. She sells kisses at church fairs, and attends prayer and experience meetings. These are to Protestants what the confessional is to Catholics, that confide in their beloved shepherd!

What life there is in the Protestant churches comes from efforts of the pastors to attract people enough to pay their salaries, and the efforts of the women of their flocks to collect it. For this they will stoop to measures at which as women of refinement and culture they would rebel.

Every little town has from two to five church buildings and as many pastors on promised salaries ranging from five hundred to a thousand dollars a year. The salaries are raised by the hardest efforts and paid as a sort of donation. Do the pastors return an equivalent? If so, how? In knowledge taught; in moral lessons and higher religious standard? They do not interest enough to draw the people together! They have nothing to teach but a false view of God, of man, of nature; a scheme of creation brought down from the ages when man was a savage and interpreted nature as a savage. They seem strangely out of time and place, like mummies resurrected from dusty tombs, and gibbering in strange phrases of beliefs as dead as their own bitumenized selves.

Dead beliefs which should be buried in charity and humiliating shame that we are descendants of men and women who accepted them, and not paraded of a Sunday and belabored with sermons to galvanize them into mockery of life!

There is one avenue for escape. As social leaders the pastors have their last hold. The churches are sustained by their social life.

Michigan Spiritualists.

ANNUAL REPORT

Of the Secretary of the Michigan State Spiritualists' Association, 15th Annual Convention, Assembled at Lansing, Mich., May 8, 9 and 10, 1908.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Michigan State Spiritualist Association, in Convention Assembled:

Dear Friends and Co-Workers:—It is with pleasure that your Secretary presents for your consideration the following report of the work done during the past year. An effort has been made to fully cover the various divisions of the work, and to make this report as thorough as possible. Whatever has been unmentioned in the following pages, will, undoubtedly be brought forth in the reports of the president and treasurer.

During the past year there have been six board meetings held, at none of which has the full board been present. Your secretary, however, has been present at each one of these meetings; and desires to say that all meetings have been regular; that all business has been carefully weighed; the members have been unbiased, and every move that has been made has had the careful consideration of all. The meetings of the board have not all been held in the same place, one being held in Grand Rapids, one in Detroit, and four in Lansing.

While to some of you everything done may not be entirely clear, do not lose sight of the fact that all things are strange until all ideas thereof are thoroughly understood; and, if some things have been done which do not meet with your approval, kindly be charitable and ask yourselves if you could, in the same position, have done better. With this thought in view your secretary would suggest that you defer judgment until you understand the motives which have prompted the various transactions of the board.

The remark has been made repeatedly, that the secretary is your servant; and this is true, but no more so of that officer than it is of each of the other members of the board. The only difference is, it is through the secretary that the expression of the will of the board must be made to the people. Knowing this, and knowing also that everything may be expressed in terms that will either anger or calm the recipient or hearer, your secretary would be productive of harmony instead of discord; and to so word all communications and conversations that the object of the board might be fully understood, instead of confusing and incensing those concerned.

Your secretary desires to say, further, that all board meetings have been pleasant and harmonious.

At one board meeting held in Detroit, we had the privilege and pleasure of having with us Dr. G. B. Warne, President of the N. S. A., who will also be with us throughout our stay in Lansing) who, having been called to Cassopolis to attend the Goff Will Case, made it a point to meet with us at Detroit, attending both Mass Meeting and the session of the Board. His words of encouragement and advice were received with the greatest pleasure and benefit by every member of said board.

At this juncture it is well to remind you that though the Goff Will Case was lost to us in the lower court; we are still undefeated and have carried the case to a higher court, again.

The members of the board, realizing the condition of our treasury, and not knowing of any better method of raising funds, inaugurated a series of mass meetings, to be held at different points throughout the state. Five of these meetings were held, two in Grand Rapids; one in Detroit; one in Belding and one in Port Huron. They proved very successful, and were the means of a considerable reduction in our debt. Of these meetings, however, further mention will be made in connection with this report. Suffice it to say that the financial report will show very conclusively what the above mentioned meetings meant to the M. S. S. A.

Correspondence.

The correspondence necessitated in the year's work has been extensive, as in response to letters received, advertising matter, announcements, etc., your secretary has written, prior and including May 4, 512 letters. While to some of you this may not seem a very large number, when taken in connection with home duties, and those which devolve upon one through assistance in social and church functions, it becomes a matter of considerable magnitude.

A Correction.

Referring to the transition of Mrs. L. D. Simons of Port Huron, a newspaper report stated that she had given a considerable sum of money to the State Association. This, however, is an error, as Mrs. Simons gave no such sum of money to this body. She did, however, present to us about twenty-five books, for which we are very grateful; they being books dealing with spiritual things, will be a valuable addition to the Mediums' Home.

Charters.

During the past year, the Board has been called upon to issue three new charters, and to re-charter one old society. The three new charters being issued to societies at Belding, Detroit and Port Huron. The re-chartered society is located at Jackson.

Under conditions which, in the opinion of your board, justified the action, two charters were called in and cancelled during the year. One of the societies involved, however, immediately applied for and received a new charter, said society being specified as "Re-chartered."

Ordination and Licentiate Papers.

For cause deemed sufficient to your board, the ordination certificate of one of our former ministers was revoked and canceled. Also three licentiate certificates, or, rather, applications therefor, were withdrawn.

The Lansing Lease.

Probably the most important move made by your board in the year's work, was the granting to the Lansing Society of a lease for the period of ninety-nine (99) years, upon a portion of the State Association's property on Cedar St., Lansing, Mich., and upon which said society contemplates the erection of a Temple dedicated to the cause of Spiritualism.

You are undoubtedly aware of the fact that this subject has been talked of and agitated, for about three years; the former secretary having sent out many communications regarding the matter, and receiving in reply very little comment, either pro or con, the majority of the replies, it maybe stated were favorable to the granting of the lease. In view of this fact, the board felt that the outlying societies expressed very little interest in the Lansing property; and further felt, inasmuch as it was elected to transact the business of this Association to the best of its ability, that it was to the best interest of all concerned to grant the lease, which it did. We feel that you will be pleased with this action, inasmuch as it will provide the State Association with a permanent home in which to hold board meetings, state Conventions, and all other functions necessary to the work of the Association.

This granting the lease, took place at the board meeting, of April 4, 1908, and at which every member of the board was present, with the single exception of our Vice-President, E. W. Sprague, who was unavoidably absent. And it is well to add that of the members present at that meeting, every member voted in favor of granting the lease.

In conclusion on this point, I feel that we should congratulate the Lansing Society for being courageous enough to undertake the erection of a Temple.

Mass Meetings.

In referring again to the Mass Meetings, I desire to call attention to the attitude held by many of the Spiritualists, who seem to imagine that this office—and all others—is a sinecure, and a source of individual pleasure. Some of these have remarked to me: "How pleasant it is for you to go around the state, seeing the different cities and points of interest."

This makes your secretary "tired," in view of the fact that it requires several weeks to get everything in readiness for such meetings, as, for example, hiring mediums, speakers, etc; getting local societies to co-operate and to feel that such meeting will assist them in arousing interest in the cause locally, and in addition to this the close application to the details of the work when on the scene of such meetings; and added to all of this is the discomfort of leaving one's home, child, and household duties for the days of absence required to attend to the work of the Association.

It would be well for those who imagine that such trips are merely for the pleasure of your executives, to ask anyone who has ever attended such meetings in an official capacity, how much time there was for sight-seeing between the meetings of an all-day session. This will quite suffice to enlighten all such.

At all points where mass meetings were held, with the exception of Grand Rapids, hall, music and entertainment were furnished free of charge; at Grand Rapids is was necessary for us to assist in the payment of the hall rent.

Notwithstanding the obstacles in the way of the mass-meetings, they were distinctively a financial and spiritual success; as an outgrowth of them we have two new societies as auxiliaries; added interest was awakened in the cause, and fuller respect engendered toward the State Association.

In view of this your secretary would recommend that this convention instruct the incoming board to arrange for, and carry on a systematic series of mass meetings at all of the larger points in the state; at least as far as is possible to obtain the co-operation of the local bodies of Spiritualists.

And your secretary would further recommend that this Association extend their thanks, in no uncertain manner, to the societies and individuals at the points mentioned, who assisted, financially and otherwise, and made these mass meetings a possible success.

Unsolicited Aid.

Your secretary would call your attention to the unsolicited aid received from several points in the state. The "Helping Hand Society" of Detroit, sent us, for the Mediums' Home, $10.00 and a fine blanket. The Lansing Society for the same purpose, $5.00; and the Battle Creek Society, also for the same purpose, sent $5.00. These three societies are the only ones in the state that have proffered their assistance in this manner during the last year.

General Remarks and Suggestions.

I hope that this report, in conjunction with the reports of my fellow-officers, will make everything clear to you, and cause you to feel that our efforts have not been entirely in vain. Also that said reports will demonstrate to you that we have endeavored to labor to the end that the greatest good to the greatest number might be the result of our efforts.

I regret that we cannot make a better financial showing at this time, but in extenuation of this I beg to call to your attention the fact that the debts we have been trying to liquidate were all old debts; also to the fact that we have been paying our way in almost everything we have undertaken, thus incurring but little new obligation. Had it not been for the old indebtedness, our treasurer would have been able to show a much larger balance on hand than at the present time.

Another fact that must not be omitted is that each individual or society auxiliary to this Association has a duty to perform; that their obligation does not cease when the vote has been cast for the officers of this Association, or the annual Convention attended; and most emphatically is it true that officers alone cannot make the work of the State Associations the success the cause of Spiritualism richly merits. It requires the continuous efforts of both individuals and societies, in co-operation with said Association and officers, to the end that progress be made. Personalities and petty jealousies should be eliminated; then individually and collectively we will evolve to a higher manhood and womanhood, and the State will be the better because of the existence of our organization.

In conclusion, your Secretary desires to say that while, as is to be expected in a position of this kind, some difficulties have arisen which savored somewhat of unpleasantness, her relations with the officers and members of this Association, and the friends and workers at large have been of the most pleasant character. Also that the kindest consideration has been extended to her and this Association by the Press of the state, and particularly The Progressive Thinker.

To my fellow officers, for their kindly consideration and aid in the work of my office, and to the members and friends at large for their many expressions of good will, I take this opportunity of expressing my sincerest thanks.

All of which is fraternally submitted. EMMA SNOW HOYT.
Secretary Michigan State Spiritualist Association

The Ohio State Spiritualist Association.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, asembled at Columbus, May 28, 29, 30, 1908:

Whereas, Good intent is the foundation of all valuable work, and resolution is the frame of its outward form, there be it

Resolved, That we, the O. S. A., renew with added vigor our resolutions to carry out the work already begun, and extend the same as far as possible, not alone for our own cult, but for the good of humanity.

Resolved, That we recognize in our National Association a great power and center from which we can reach out into the world for efficient work. We reassure said body of our fidelity and co-operation for the advancement of clean, active and intelligent Spiritualism. As the N. S. A. at its semi-annual business meeting publicly recognized the most efficient work of its N. S. A. Lyceum superintendent, Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, O., let this body express its appreciation and thanks, thus assisting her what we can in this great work, much needed in our Cause.

Resolved, That this convention appoint a committee to reconstruct and amend its state constitution, also its articles of state incorporation, that they shall be in unison with legislative law and not in conflict with N. S. A. ruling. As we are a body of progressive people realizing that man grows from state to state, and that he only does by improved environment and incentive, therefore we recommend that this body put itself on record as upholding and sustaining all efforts wherever made for the advancement of man, woman and child. That this body send fraternal greetings to the Ohio Federation of Labor, Woman Suffrage Association, and Committee on Child Labor, assuring them of our moral and spiritual support. As two wrongs never make right, neither has the old babaric custom of killing people as a form of punishment been in any way effective, and this body go on record as opposing this custom and supporting all efforts made to do away with the same.

As the tone of this convention has been pessismitic, we recommend that before the close of this session there be some definite outline for actual work given, even if it be no more than that each family have a Penny Box, these boxes to be opened at next annual convention and contents to be put in treasury of O. S. A.

As our records show that there has been a decline in our chartered membership, we recommend that this convention appoint a committee to look into the matter and regain them if possible, and enlist others, said committee to report at next convention.

Resolved, That we remember with tenderness all those who have passed on to the larger life. We rejoice with them in their freedom and bespeak for them joyful progress not only those of our particular ism, but all those who gave their life for the Union that is now our home, from the noble Lincoln down to the most obscure soldier, we lift our spirits in tenderness on this Memorial Day, May 30, 1908.

That we return to the West Side Church and First Spiritual Church Society of Columbus, O., our heartfelt thanks for their endeavor to make this convention a success; also to all speakers, mediums and musicians; also the press, both secular and spiritual.

NUGGETS.

Hypocrisy.

All righteous men can clearly see
The greatest fraud and knave is he Who makes long prayers in church and then Deceives and robs his fellow men.

Honesty.

"God's noblest work, an honest man,"
Puts all deception under ban;
He pays in full his honest debts,
And earns the money that he gets.

Patience.

God's next best work, a patient man,
Accords "all right" his Maker's plan;
Accepts his lot, to fate resigned,
And fault with others does not find.

Politics To-day.

The trade of rogues who honor sham
To reach the crib of Uncle Sam,
The spoils of office they "are at"

A NOTED BLIND MEDIUM.

Full Particulars of Her Life and Remarkable Gifts.

To the Editor: I am sending you in this letter a page from the Kansas City Star, which contains a beautiful poem by Eva May von Heiss, the blind medium. At present she is creating considerable interest. She is young and very beautiful, with a profusion of that rare shade of golden hair, which is only seen perhaps half a dozen times during a lifetime.

She is married, although young as she is. Her husband is a German, with what is called a title birth. He claims that the spirits caused him to come to this part of the country purposely to marry and protect her. She has been an orphan since babyhood. Her mother passed to the higher life four weeks after her birth, and soon after the father followed, which left her to the mercy of the public. She was educated in a blind school in Minnesota. She has a remarkable baby girl three and one-half months old, perfectly healthy, and perfect as a baby can be; it has the intelligence of a child several months older.

It is peculiar how she started in her public career as a medium. A reliable medium in Kansas City, Mo., Mrs. Lincoln, who is well known in this part of the country, through spirit forces, was brought in contact with this girl, and recognized her rare gift of mediumship—phases of inspirational writing, playing upon any kind of musical instrument, and clairvoyance and clairaudiance. Mrs. Lincoln then engaged her to play in her meetings. This was her introduction to Spiritualism and the mission of her strange gifts. At one of these meetings at Mrs. Lincoln's she met her husband, and the spirits told her then and there why they were brought together. This did not strike her fancy at first, he being much the older; but in a very short time afterwards they were married, and immediately set up house-keeping at her present address, 511 Minnesota avenue, Kansas City, Kansas, where she started in public work as a medium, giving readings and instructions from the spirit world. She started on this career two years ago. She is now well-known in this city as a reliable advisor and entertainer.

On June 14 I called to see her. She asked me to care for the baby while her husband took her down on the bridge to feel the influence of the flood. She returned home, and made a few comments upon it. Then I took my leave of absence.

Next morning while still in bed I heard a spirit voice say to me, "Get up and go over the river and see Eva. She has written the 'Message of the Flood,' and I want you to go and take a copy of it to the Kansas City Star." I followed the spirits' request, and as I entered her door she exclaimed, "Oh! the spirits gave me a poem on the 'Flood.' I want to read it to you, and tell me if you think it is any good." I then said the Kansas City Star must have a copy of it. This was a surprise to her. She had never thought of offering anything to a great daily; but the great daily gladly accepted it, and I am sending it to you, feeling that you will be glad to reprint it in The Progressive Thinker; also this letter of explanation of this remarkable lady, who bids fair to become one of the world's greatest mediums. This shows while Kansas City has been branded with what is called a deluge of fake mediums, the leading city paper recognizes this girl to be one with genuine talent, and reliable and true spiritualists will appreciate this bit of information, realizing that there are constantly those coming before the public who can lift the banner of true Spiritual philosophy to the respectable recognition of the public press. Before sending the city editor a copy of it, I called him by phone and explained to him how the poem was written and about her blindness, giving him her address and telephone number.

Fraternally yours for truth.
AILA A. McHENRY.

The Message of the Flood.

(Written by a blind girl.)

I overflow my banks, because
There's no one that will stay me;
I wonder that your courts and laws
Don't even try to sway me.
It's very sad that I behave
In such a dreadful style—
Why cannot someone be more brave
And hold me back awhile.

I cannot stop the rains that fall,
They drive me to this measure;
And if you will but build a wall,
I'll wait upon your pleasure;
A reservoir, both wide and deep,
In it I'll glady flow,
But next time if you are asleep
I'll catch you ere you know.

It's not in fury that I rise,
Thus causing such distress;
And now beneath the pitying skies
I solemnly confess
That these sad scenes, they grieve me sore,
That thus, upon my crest,
I bear away to distant shores
The things you love the best.

From morn till night
I cannot help but see
The people trembling with affright
While sadly watching me.
"I've lost my all in this here flood."
That is the general cry;
"I s'pose it was the will of God"—
And then they heave a sigh.
Now listen to my murmur hoarse,
It sounds like "That's a lie!
You can pursue a different course,
Have safety if you try."

For 'shame! You watch your loved one's tears,
And not a thing you've done
To stop my dreadful waste through years,
Think you such loss is fun?
Now, always do the best you can,
When you hear duty call,
And do not sit and plan until Misfortune drops her pall.

Michigan State Spiritualist Association

The Michigan State Spiritualist Association held its 15th Annual Convention in Lansing, May, 8, 1908. The First Spiritualist Society of Lansing furnished the place of meeting and also entertaining members of the State Board and delegates. Nothing was left undone by the Lansing people. The place of meeting was the Church of Our Father, Corner of Capitol Avenue and Ottawa Street.

The Convention was called to order by the President, Mr. J. C. Andre, and the regular business taken up, every member of the State Board being present.

It was an innovation for Michigan, as a three-days' meeting was arranged and proved very satisfactory to all present.

The forenoons were devoted to business, theafternoons to service sessions.

The Secretary's report was very complete and showed some good work done by the Association the last year.

Probably the most important move made was the granting of a 99-year lease to the Lansing Society for the erection of a Temple for their own and the State Association's use; a portion of their property on Cedar St. She also gave a full report of the Mass Meetings held and the amounts taken in at each, showing they were of much benefit, not only to the Association, but to the State at large.

About 40 delegates were present, and as the meetings were very harmonious much good was derived by the delegates.

The workers who took part at the above, and all were at their best, were Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague of Detroit, Dr. Geo. B. Warne of Chicago, Mr. Will J. Erwood of Battle Creek, Mrs. Belle Fuller of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Nellie S. Baade and Mrs. C. Sharlow of Detroit, and Dr. R. McAngus of Port Huron.

The State Association extends sincere thanks not only to the workers, but to the Lansing Society for the splendid way which they arranged and carried out all plans and made it the success it was, for it was one of the best meetings the association ever had.

Will also add that about 150 dollars were raised in Lansing by the Lansing people, and delegates, which nearly cleared cleared up all debts except the Goff Will Case.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mr. James E. Walker of Grand Rapids; Vice-President, Miss Emma Gibbs of Grand Rapids; Secretary, Mrs. Emma Snow Hoyt of Battle Creek; Treasurer, Mr. C. A. Clement of Lansing; Trustees, Mr. E. E. Carpenter of Detroit, Mr. C. J. Harris of Lansing, Mr. O. E. Spaulding of Lansing.

GREETINGS TO THE PICNICERS.

The following poem was written for and read to the Elgin Picnicers, Sunday, June 21, by the author.

In this grand and beauteous June-time, with its sea of fragrant bloom,
When the resting force of Nature has outburst from Winter's tomb,
Where they slept and gained new sweetness for the coming of the Spring,
And the birds are back among us with their pretty songs to sing,
Let us consecrate our spirits to the work, and here renew
All the good old resolutions that we made with purpose true.

Let us hold above all other things the truth that knows no halt;
And subdue the awful passion to be ever finding fault.
We need pessimists behind us, and we need them at each side,
But we ought to let cool reason be our ever-present guide.

While we all have foes to battle, we should kuow that down within
There are foes of greater power and the fight should there begin.
Let us gather from this outing all the harmony we can;
Let us lift ourselves up higher and then lift our fellowman.

What if someone has been selfish, has been narrow, mean and small,
That should not affect the largeness of OUR thought to uplift all.
'Tis the sunlight and the object make the shadows come and go,
And the shadows are the longest when the sun is setting low.

Let us drink in all the sunlight that our natures can absorb,
And forever give as freely unto others as that orb.
Let us take in all the freshness and the pureness of the breeze,
Let us touch the Earth's fond bosom and do homage to the trees.

Let us touch the Soul of Nature with our souls in perfect tune
And vibrate with every creature on this lovely day in June.
Let us stand before the angels with true holiness and vow
We will make this world some better with our presence here and now.

Let us do and dare in earnest all the good we find to do,
And be mindful of each lesson that presents the good and true.
Let us fill the highest mission that appears to be ours here,
And the future must be brighter in that higher spirit sphere.

Spiritualists Annual Meeting

Mississippi Valley Association Will Meet at Clinton, July 26 to August 23.

E, L. Kilby of Ottumwa is President of the Association, Which is Almost National in its Scope--The Program.

The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association of which E. L. Kilby, of Ottumwa, is president, will meet in its twenty-sixth annual session at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia., from July 26 to August 23.

The association meeting is not unlike a big chautauqua, in fact it is a Spiritualist chautauqua, and its field of endeavor covers the entire Mississippi Valley. Each day a program will be given consisting of a lyceum, conference, lectures and spirit message service.

Organized in 1882.

The association was organized and incorporated Nov. 21, 1882, as the "Iowa Conference of Spiritualists," and on the first day of April, 1885, the corporate name was changed to "The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association."

The remarkable growth of the Association necessitated the change in name as it has reached out from a purely state organization until it takes in all the states in the Mississippi Valley, and bids fair to cover the entire American continent with its influence ere many more years pass. The magnificent grounds at Clinton, Mt. Pleasant Park, are owned by the Association and the thousands of visitors who attend the annual meetings of this association enable the management to provide the very best talent on the Spiritual platform.

The Officers.

The officers of the association are: President, E. L. Kilby, Ottumwa, Iowa; vice-president, Mrs. E. R. Abbott, Alliance, Ohio; secretary, Mollie B. Anderson, Clarksville, Mo.: treasurer, Mrs. Christine Cooper, Clinton, Iowa.

Trustees.

Will M. Kellogg, New Boston, Ill.; Minerva Aiken, Clinton, Ia.; Wm. John Ward, Clinton, Ia.; N. G. Omstead, Webster City, Ia.; J. C. Blodgett, Clinton, Ia.; G. B. Holbert, Iowa City, Ia.

The Woman's Union is an auxiliary organization of workers composed of women who are laboring incessantly for the advancement and success of the Spiritual Cause. Each year a day is set apart known as "Woman's Day" and a program appropriate to the day is furnished by the "Woman's Union," who have full charge of the literary and social functions, and "Woman's Day" is always one of the most enjoyable during the camp.

Mount Pleasant Park.

Mount Pleasant Park, where the association meets, is located upon a high bluff overlooking the city of Clinton, Ia., and a fine view of the surrounding country may be obtained from various points of vantage. Two deep wells supply all with an abundance of pure sparkling, cold water. Plenty of water for general purposes is brought there by the city water works, hydrants being placed at convenient points. The grounds are now brilliantly lighted with electricity. Grand old forest trees protect with their cooling shade, which with the cosy private cottages, comfortable tents and commodious buildings for public entertainment, combine to make an attractive summer resort to which all are welcome with overflowing good will.

Constant improvements are going on and better facilities are being provided each year for the entertainment of those who visit the grounds.

Several cab and baggage lines ply between the depots and steamboat landings and the park, while the electric street cars pass the main entrance to the grounds, making them readily accessible to the city.

Talent of the Best.

The talent secured for the Spiritual platform is among the best in the country. Probably the leading attraction from the lecture platform standpoint will be Dr. J. M. Peebles, of national fame as a lecturer, author and traveler. Dr. Peebles is characterized as one of the greatest stars whose light has shown upon every nation of the earth, having traveled four times around the globe, he will come to the Mt. Pleasant meeting freighted with habits, customs, religions and phenomena of every nationality. Dr. Peebles will deliver a special lecture on "India and Her Magi."

Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond will be at the assembly at the opening and will give four of her incomparable lectures. She has been a lecturer and medium from childhood.

Inspirational Speaker.

John W. Ring, who will also be at the assembly during the early part of it is an inspirational speaker whose thoughts are clothed in the purest and most chaste language. It is said by those who have heard him that his lectures will be a rich treat.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman, president of the Kansas State Spiritualists' Association, is a speaker of ability who will assist on the program. She is said to have a charming personality.

After an interval of years, Edgar W. Emerson has consented to come to the meetings and serve as message bearer during the last five days of the session.

Mrs. Emma A. Sauer, of St. Paul, Minn., who has served many years as state missionary in Minnesota, will make her first appearance at Mount Pleasant Park this season.

Other Speakers.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig, who two summers ago served the association as message bearer will again receive a hearty welcome this summer. It is said her mediumistic powers have undergone a marvelous unfoldment and many will find solace under her ministration.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, Ohio, national superintendent of lyceums, has been engaged during the entire season. She extends a special invitation to bring the children.

On August 18 Miss Elizabeth Harlow will appear on the assembly platform. She ranks as one of the most forceful speakers and finest orators on the Spiritualistic platform. For her subjects she chooses the ones of vital interest to all classes of people and those who hear her will be assured of an intellectual feast.

A series of six lectures by Ben F. Wilson on "The Life Message" will be delivered between July 30 and August 4.

Mrs. Laura Jones will serve during the first week of the meeting as message bearer. She is an entire stranger to Mt. Pleasant Park but her renown as a medium has gone before her.

Tents will be rented by the management for a nominal sum by the week or season. A lodging hotel will also be conducted on the grounds.

Program.

Official program for 1908 follows:

Sunday, July 28.—Annual Flag Raising; opening address; lecture, Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond; message service, Mrs. Laura Jones.

Monday, July 27.—Lyceum, organized by Mrs. E. Schauss; conference; lecture, Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond; message service, Mrs. Laura Jones.

CAMP MEETING A SUCCESS.

Splendid Lectures, Tests and Music Mark the Session.

Lucius Colburn sends us the following:

The eighteenth annual camp meeting of the Summerland Spiritualist Association, Cal., opened on Sunday, June 7, with a number of talented speakers and mediums, who are doing spendid work. Among them are Dr. Ada H. Patterson, state president of the Spiritualist Association, W. C. Bowman, L. Colburn and Mrs. C. M. Johnson, with Mr. J. T. Lillie in charge of the music. There have been a number from a distance in attendance, as well as those who come and return daily from their homes in Carpenteria, Montecito and Santa Barbara.

On Sunday morning a lecture was delivered by Lucian Colburn. Dr. Ada H. Patterson, state president of the Spiritualist Association, delivered a splendid lecture in the afternoon and W. C. Bowman occupied the platform in the evening.

Monday Dr. Ada H. Patterson again addressed the meeting. Mrs. Charestha M. Johnson gave messages.

Her work has been greatly appreciated.

Tuesday was devoted to the subject "Lyceum Work" and Rev. Bowman gave a masterful lecture on "Education."

Wednesday Dr. Patterson explained in a most comprehensive manner the work that the State Spiritualist Association is doing to further the cause.

One of the most enjoyable features of the meeting was the music on Thursday afternoon furnished by Mrs. Daisy Holmes, cello, Miss Merle Holmes, the little 7-year-old tot of Mrs. Holmes, violin; and Miss Fisk, piano. No finer music has ever been heard in Liberty Hall than that rendered by these local artists; and they have been earnesty requested to render one or more concerts before the close of the camp meeting and probably will.

On Friday afternoon W. C. Bowman gave the address and in the evening L. Colburn occupied the platform. Mrs. Johnson has given many messages, most of which have been verified.

Everyone was delighted with the beautiful and artistic decorations of the hall during the camp meeting and all agreed that Mrs. Frederick Lee, who volunteered to do the work, displayed much ingenuity in the designs. On other occasions we have had reason to admire her work, but this time she has surpassed her former efforts.

NAME THE BABY,

Or Give the Charge. A song with solo, duet and chorus, by John W. Ring, arranged by M. H. Bauer. Price 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00.

It Reads Like a Fairy Tale.

the discord arising from it, and of which the poet writes:

"Zwei Seelen wohnen, ah! in meiner Brust,
Die eine will sich von der andern Trennen;
Die eine halt, in derber Liebeslust,
Sich an die Welt mit klammernden Organen;
Die andre hebt gewaltsam sich vom Dust
Zu den Gefilden wohrer Ahnen.
* * * * * * * * *
Ganz leise spricht ein Gott in unsrer Brust,
Ganz leise, ganz vernehmlich, und zeigt uns an
Was zu ergreifen ist, und was zu fliehen.

—Goethe.

The fate of the soul on this earth, clad as it is in a crude material body, and forced to serve its coarse desires, reminds us in some respects of the ancient myth of Prometheus, who, by order of Zeus, was chained by Hephaistos to a rock, and who could not prevent a ravenous vulture from feeding on his ever growing liver. Is there no hope for the soul, that a Herakles may, even here in this life, arise to deliver her from the hated chain, or at least loosen the pressing fetters? Perhaps the soul, like Prometheus, knows the secret of her deliverance! Or does this hope receive fulfilment in death only? Let Socrates's daemon answer us:

"Yes, I see clearly that to die now and to be liberated from the heavy cares of life is verily the best that happen to me, and that is the reason why my daemon's voice is silent to-day."

And with inspired words the genius of the poet describes this deliverance:

"What am I becoming?—light clouds lift me up—the black armor becomes a winged garment—upwards—the earth flees back—short is the pain and everlasting is the joy."—Schiller, "Jungfrau von Orleans."

COMPOUNCE ASSOCIATION, CONN.

The Forty-fourth Annual Picnic of Spiritualists.

The forty-fourth annual picnic of the Compounce Association of Spiritualists was held at Compounce Lake, Bristol, Conn, Wednesday, June 17. Business meeting opened at 10:15 a. m., with President Kenyon in the chair. After reading of the constitution and by-laws, a finance committee consisting of Mrs. J. E. Dillon and Mrs. A. E. Merriam were appointed to collect the membership fee of twenty-five cents. The report of the secretary-treasurer, J. E. B. Dillon, was read and approved, the report of Mr. Edward Brewer, as delegate to the N. S. A. convention held at Washington in October, 1907, was given; after which the following officers were elected: President, Earl B. Kenyon, of New Haven; vice-president, Edward Brewer, East Hartford; secretary-treasurer, J. E. B. Dillon, Hartford. Mrs. F. J. Storr, of Hartford, was appointed delegate to the N. S. A. convention, to be held at Indianapolis in October, with the power to select her alternate if unable to attend. It was also voted to send the annual fee of five dollars to the N. S. A.

At 11 a. m. President Kenyon made a few remarks in memory of the members of the association who had passed to the higher life during the past year; a few moments was then spent in the silence for the benefit of those who might be ill and suffering. The conference was then opened, interesting remarks were made by many, and at twelve a recess was taken for dinner.

At 2 p. m. the sessions were resumed in the open air theater, and when President Kenyon presented the speaker, Mrs. May S. Vanderbilt, of Brooklyn, N. Y., she was received with an ovation from an audience of over a thousand people. After an invocation music was rendered by the quartette, after which Mrs. Vanderbilt read a poem entitled "Not Understood," and took for the subject of the lecture, "Modern Spiritualism." She held the closest attention of the large audience, and gave a lecture replete with truths.

After singing by the quartette, she gave her messages, every one being recognized and all were wonderful in their accuracy. It is the first time in three years that we have had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Vanderbilt, and in the opinion of all she never did better work.

The singing of the Arion quartette of Hartford helped to make the meeting a success, and we adjourned with the hope we might have many such meetings in the future.

P. L. O. A. Keeler.

To the Editor: I see in The Progressive Thinker an account of a sitting with P. L. O. A. Keeler. I wish with your permission to say a few words about a sitting I had with him about twenty years ago, at my house in North Scituate, Mass. He was at my house about 5 p. m. I went home to tea and took with me from the store two very large slates, washed them, tied them together, and then wrote six questions on six separate slips of paper, rolled them up like old-fashioned "spit-balls," laid them on the slate and covered them with my hand, and he did not touch them at all. He did not take the slates in his hands, and I do not remember that he touched them. He was sitting about two feet from the table, reading. I heard scratches on the slate, and soon three raps were given, and I untied the string that held the slates, and there found answers to each of my questions, and the name of each one to whom the questions were addressed. Signed in full and addressed to me. I used my own name.

My wife had a similar experience with him after I left for the store, and they to us were perfectly satisfactory. A. P. SMITH.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power, by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyancee than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. THE GREAT DEBATE

Between
JOHN W. RING AND J. W. CHISM.

This work contains a six-day's discussion, in which Mr. Ring affirms the fundamental principles of Modern Spiritualism to be identical to the spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus the Christ—Chism denying.

In the second proposition, Mr. Chism affirms that all spiritual gifts ceased with the Apostolic age—Mr. Ring denying. This is a nicely cloth-bound volume, with title in gold letters and in addition to the discussion has a short biography of both disputants. Will be found intensely interesting. Price, $1, postpaid. CARLYLE PETERSILEA'S BOOKS.

Oceanides.—A Psychical Novel.—Prices, paper cover, 50 cents.—This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted inspired author. The question of soul mates, or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting. It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

Mary Anne Carew.—Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat cloth cover, Price $1. This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

It points to the planet as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." By Eleanor Kirk. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 | CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 11, 1908 | NO. 972

SPIRIT PHENOMENA.

An Artist Claims Harriet Beecher Stowe as a Control.

Thinking a few lines from far west Nebraska might interest the many readers of your valued paper, and as the same refers to physical phenomena, I will try and be as brief as possible in the description of the same.

Soon after Christmas my guide began drawing through my hand, and as I am now past sixty-four years of age, never having taken a drawing lesson nor having talent in that direction, nor any of my antecedents as far as I know, makes it the more wonderful, and to my mind fully proves spirit return. I will begin with the description of the first picture, there being five in number, and all executed with lead pencils, no rule or measurement of any character having been used, but simply by my right hand.

The first is a portrait of myself and life and guide, 20x28 inches, the guide's right hand resting on my right shoulder, her left index finger pointing to a small cross resting on my head supporting a wing at the butt of which is a trumpet, by the side of which is the All-Seeing-Eye. In the wing is the words "My Disciples". Two trumpets meet at the large end just over the guide's forehead, and in one the words "Hear Ye". Around the guide's neck is a small chain with a cross attached and a dove over the cross. Two large wings make a kind of jacket for her person, then in front of her dress proper are six trumpets meeting each two at large ends, four being upright and two horizontal. Then in the corner of her dress are five small trumpets, two black and three white. Between myself and wife is a shepherd's crook, in the handle of which occur the words "The Lord Is Our Shepherd." A banner at the top of the crook occurs, on which is inscribed the words "Our Religion, to do good and love one another." My right hand is pointing to the banner, while my wife's left hand grasps the staff. A beautiful dove hovers over my wife's head, dropping the wreath upon it.

Over the banner is the bible. To the left are three mountains, resting on one is a cross and near it are trees with little doves in the branches, the All-Seeing-Eye being in the sky above all. My guide's hair hangs down to her back, while my wife's is done up in a knot on top of her head.

The second picture represents the dawn of peace or millennium, I suppose. It is 30x40 inches. My portrait, very natural, appears with arms in circle upwards with index fingers pointing in the same direction, the fingers in the right hand closed tight, in the left they lie open in palm of hand. On right index finger rests a cross with crown hanging on cross bar and a dove sitting on top of cross with olive branch in its mouth. On left index finger is the Bible resting in the center of lower edge, my elbows resting on the points of rocks which cut off my fingers at the bust. Near the left elbow is a tree with two tiny squirrels in the branches. Under the left elbow is a fountain overflowing on two sides with a pitcher sitting in it, with the words "Fountain of Love" on the edge. On the next tier of rocks below stands a deer, then an Indian with a broken bow in his hand, then a tiger, then a little distance away sitting with his back against a tree is a large Ape chained to a stake with one link out of the chain which he holds in his hand, representing the missing link I suppose. Then on the next tier of rock still below is a large lion lying down, and curled up beside is a little lamb, the lion having a chain on its neck and a little girl stands a short distance away holding the chain. The figures on this picture unlike the others are brought out in white, the rocks making a black back-ground, that is all below my portrait.

The third picture is 24x36, being my portrait standing erect, with the portrait of my two scotch collie dogs. One dog jumps up in front resting his fore-paws on my chest, while my left hand is spread out in front as if to keep him away. The other dog stands behind in a looking attitude—as much as to ask what are you two doing? Behind each dog is a cherry tree full of cherries and leaves. A cap rests on my head.

The next picture (the fourth) is 24x36. My portrait standing erect almost identical with the other. A black horse, which I own stands behind resting his head on my shoulder. One dog jumps up in front, resting his paws on my chest, while my right hand drops a cracker in his mouth. The other dog jumps up on my side resting his paws against my body, my left hand resting on its head. Behind the center of the horse is an apple-tree in full bloom. On the other end of the picture and behind the dogs is another appletree in full bloom. Behind the horse is a dead tree with a grape-vine wound around the body and some of the limbs full of leaves.

To take the place of this picture which is going away is the fifth. It is also 24x36. My black horse and jersey cow stand heads a little apart. The horse is striking with right fore-foot at one of the dogs who is nipping at his nose. The cow's head is turned outwardly as though hooking at the other dog who is also nipping at her head. Going up behind the animal's head is a large shade tree extending its branches out over all the animals, being in full foliage. I am coming up with a stick in my hand as though driving the animals from under the tree, with hat in place of cap on my head.

These pictures are all framed and under glass and are hanging in my parlor, and I am not ashamed to have anyone look at them. Doctors, lawyers, ministers, in fact many in all the walks of life have visited my home to view them, among the number three judges, so that I feel if I am arrested for practicing mediumship, I shall have the judges on my side at least, yet I feel, Brother Francis, that there is but little danger to one who is practicing honest mediumship.

I have tried to give as good a description of these pictures in as brief a manner as possible, but they must be seen to be fully appreciated, and I cheerfully extend an invitation to you or any of your readers if passing this way, to call and see them, as all the facts I have stated regarding the manner of obtaining them, and also as to my inability to produce them of myself, can be substantiated by many others. The artist in the case claims to be Harriet Beecher Stowe, and as she has written a book which will make five hundred pages, at least one hundred poems, and during the last year two novels and at least forty stories, I am inclined to think it is she. Another thing, she plays some striking exercises on the piano with two thicknesses of cloth thrown over the keys, and very seldom misses a key. Had I no other proof of spirit return, these pictures would satisfy me, but we get many other tests that prove the presence of the invisible ones, and these mementoes which hang upon our parlor walls, constantly remind us of their presence and undying love, and as our gray hair denotes that we, too, shall soon be counted with that innumerable host, yet we do not go down to the tomb sorrowing, but with the blessed knowledge that immortality and life on a higher plane await us, nor neither will we be compelled to await the sounding of the trumpet, for it has already sounded, and our loved ones have arisen and are awaiting us, as represented in the first picture by my beloved guide.

Yours for Truth.

BOY REVIVED AFTER BEING UNDER WATER 13 MINUTES.

Policeman Langlois' Work in Restoring Lad to Consciousness Is Praised by Physicians at German Hospital.

Two boys were rescued from drowning yesterday afternoon at Lincoln Park. One of them was revived after he had been under water thirteen minutes. The rescued boys are:

HOLBERG, GEORGE, 9 years old, 95 Delaware place; fell into lagoon; rescued by Thomas Rahlbin, a park employe, and Thomas Carey, 450 Dayton street.

THOMPSON, EDWARD, 10 years old, 394 Austin avenue; fell into the lake at North avenue and Lake Shore drive; rescued by Policeman Edward Schiberg.

Many persons who were near the lake at the time cheered Policeman Schiberg when, after two attempts, he brought the unconscious boy to the surface and swam ashore. The boy had been under water thirteen minutes.

Policeman J. Langlois, formerly with the United States life savers, worked over the boy with Schiberg for an hour before he revived.

"Few persons have been revived after being as long under water as Thompson," said Policeman Langlois after the boy had been taken to the German hospital in the police ambulance. The hospital physicians praised Langlois for his skill in reviving the boy.—Chicago Tribune.

Externalization.

ATTEMPT OF EXTERNALIZATION OF THE ASTRAL BODY, WITH MANIFESTATIONS PERCEIVED BY THREE PERSONS.

Translation from M. Pierre Piobb's L'Annee Occultiste et Psychiques.

(Translated from the French especially for The Progressive Thinker by Mrs. A. Monthan Tattersfield.)

M. T. L——, a clever experimentalist, who modestly desires to remain anonymous, relates the following very curious facts:

A few years ago, he says, I was connected with a woman whom I regularly every week put to sleep by magnetic passes.

I had proved in this hypnotic state several phenomena of communication with the invisible and raps at a distance.

One day I made a resolution without telling her beforehand, to try to appear to her in her room which was in a house close to the railway station du Nord, I myself being in my house at the end of Boulevard Saint Michel.

After coming home one evening I went to bed about midnight, and concentrated my will power in order to free my astral body, as the Theosophists express themselves. As well as I can remember I went into a kind of trance without losing consciousness of myself. After a few minutes I fell asleep with the same wish, thinking strongly on this woman whose exact features I held before my imagination.

What was my surprise when the following evening towards six o'clock, when I had arranged to meet her, she suddenly bursts out in bitter reproaches against me as to the hypnotic influence I exercised over her, and that I had caused her a very bad headache the night before.

And my astonishment was at its height, as I did not expect to succeed in my experiment, when she told me that the evening before towards midnight, the time when I willed to appear to her, she saw me just as I was in this moment, sitting at the head of her bed, and as I approached her she gave a cry of terror and the vision vanished. Unfortunately nobody was with her at the time. Such is the fact, that is difficult to explain by the hallucinatory hypothesis, on account of the coincidence of the phenomenon with my will to produce it.

Last September, a lady living near Condom saw me in the same way in her drawing room, where we had the evening before been discussing modern Spiritualism.

But on that day there was no effort on my part to appear to her; only, it ought to be mentioned, that at the hour of her vision I was fast asleep. These two facts, particularly the first one, are of such a nature as to give proof to those who believe that "thought" is a force, or rather a being who under certain conditions can act at a distance without aid of the material body.

It ought to be mentioned that M. T. L—— is a frail esoteric poet, whose last work, "Voices from the Tomb," describe actual vision from higher spheres; it is not then astonishing—at least psychologically speaking—to find in him occult faculties. But what must particularly be noted is that M. T. L—— is not a subject of any description whatever, but a thinker, an observer, occasionally an experimentalist, consequently a serious, disinterested, reliable person.

STARS AND SPIRITUALISM.

Is It in Accord With Science to Call Planets "Stars."

Dr. Hutcheson, of North Abington, Mass., is to be commended in his effort to save people from exposing their ignorance of astronomical names and terms." We should, as brothers, help one another in our search after truth. Brother Hutcheson says: "People of learning and erudition will only sneer at the person exposing his ignorance of facts and terms used by truly scientific men."

That is true. As I have been for many years a student in the field of astronomy everything on the subject interests me.

He says: "Let all Spiritualists learn" the enormous distance "of the nearest fixed star outside of our planetary system."

He then adds: "From this slipshod way of presenting facts comes very pertinent criticism."

The doctor declares that the ignorant, "slip-shod" statement was made that "the nearest star is about 38 millions of miles away."

That is correct. Score one for the "spiritual rostrum."

Dr. Hutcheson says: "There is no star at that distance."

But there is. Mars "is about that distance from the earth at times," admits the Doctor. Quite right. Is not Mars a star?

The Doctor says Mars is a planet. Yes, and a planet is a star. No, says our friend. "Planets are never called stars by scientific men."

If that is the case, then I am as "ignorant" as some lecturers upon the Spiritual rostrum. Do not scientific men call Venus the "evening star?" and sometimes the "morning star?"

Is not Jupiter called evening star or morning star?

Mars the same? And Saturn? Uranus? Neptune?

These are all planets, and are called stars by "scientific men," by such astronomers as Lockyer, Proctor, Flammarion, Young, Doolittle. Prof. Eric Doolittle, astronomer at Pennsylvania University, says of the skies in this very month of June: "Venus and Jupiter are still the brilliant evening stars."

"Saturn and Uranus are now morning stars," says Prof. Doolittle.

Astronomy is a grand and inspiring science. It should be studied by all classes. It broadens the mind. It reveals to us the comparative insignificance of this earth.

SEEK HAPPINESS.

When Truth throws a darkening veil
Around you, in your keeping
is strength to make its shadows pale;
Such strength is not in weeping.

When heavy clouds obscure the way,
No cheering sun is shining,
That strength to make all bright as day
Will seek the silver lining.

Look always to the right in life;
The gain is yours by doing it.
Farewell to every worry, strife;
Find happiness in wooing it.

A Remarkable Vision by a Remarkable Woman

MILLENNIUM SEEN IN DREAM VISION BY JULIA WARD HOWE

Author of "Battle Hymn of the Republic" Tells of Remarkable Apocalypse.—Beholds Vice Destroyed.—All Evil and Misery Overcome by Men and Women in Great Battle.

Boston, Mass.—Julia Ward Howe, the famous author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," has had a remarkable vision of a new era for mankind.

In a manner believed by Mrs. Howe and her intimate friends to be supernatural the veil of the unseen has been lifted before her eyes. Her own statement as to what was revealed to her in a vision, impressively told by the venerable woman to a reporter at Oak Glen, Portsmouth, R. I., yesterday, is here given:

"One night recently I experienced a sudden awakening. I had a vision of a new era which is to dawn for mankind and in which men and women are battling equally, unitedly, for the uplifting and emancipation of the race from evil.

"I saw men and women of every clime working like bees to unwrap the evils of society and to discover the whole web of vice and misery and to apply the remedies, and also to find the influences that should best counteract evil and its attendant suffering.

Sight of the New Day Dazzles.

"There seemed to be a new, a wondrous, ever-permeating light, the glory of which I cannot attempt to put into human words—the light of the new born hope and sympathy blazing. The source of this light was born of human endeavor, the immortal purpose of countless thousands of men and women who were equally doing their part in the world-wide battle with evil, and whose energy was directed to tear the mask from error, crime, superstition, greed, and to discover and apply the remedy.

"I saw the men and the women, standing side by side, shoulder to shoulder, a common, lofty and indomitable purpose lighting every face with a glory not of this earth. All were advancing with one end in view, one foe to trample, one everlasting goal to gain.

"I saw them like a mighty army laden with the fruits of their research, their study, their endeavor in this battle with the powers of darkness and ready to tear vice from the earth, to strip away all selfishness of greed, of rapine.

Sees Vice Blotted Out.

"Then I seemed to see them stoop down to their fellows and to lift them higher and higher. Men and women, a vast host whom none could number, working unitedly, equally, with superhuman energy, all for the extirpation of the blackness of vice and for the weal of the race.

"And then I saw the victory.

"All of evil was gone from the earth. Misery was blotted out. Mankind was emancipated and ready to march forward in a new era of human understanding, all encompassing sympathy and ever-present help, the era of perfect love, of peace passing understanding."—Chicago Examiner.

Positive Proofs of Spirit Return.

Much has been published in various papers trying to prove that the return of the former inhabitants of this earth from the spirit world to their former relatives and friends here is untrue.

I have been to many hundreds of seances during the past twenty-five years and have never been troubled or disturbed by evil spirits, although I see them as they go to those who are looking for and expecting them.

My very best results is when no mortal is present except myself, and the medium is in plain sight of me all the time; then have my relatives and friends come up from one to six or more at a time, looking as perfect as they did in earth life; in fact it would be difficult to find any difference between the mortal and the spirit, except to see them come and go.

Other proofs of their powers is when they tell of matters elsewhere of which you may not know at present, but learn afterwards that it was correct in every particular. My uncle gave me notice several days in advance.

I have many positive proofs in my own keeping that I prize very highly, as they cannot be produced by mortals. Most of them were produced in my own hands in a few minutes by friends, and will show them to callers whenever desired.

No one could ask for more positive and convincing proofs than I have personally received. C. B. RICE.

John Stuart Mill a Spiritualist.

From the "Revue Chretienne" the "Review of Reviews" takes some important details furnished by Pastor Rey, of Avignon, regarding the belief in immortality and spirit influence which was held by John Stuart Mill during the last years of his life, which were passed in that city. Starting as he did from absolute unbelief, we are told, Mill's "rupture with Atheism was a terrible crisis. Then came a vein of mysticism into his life." He attended Unitarian services, and met Mrs. Taylor, who became his wife. After only seven and a half years of married life, Mrs. Mill died, and her husband bought a house near the cemetery in which her remains were laid. But, continues Pastor Rey:

"He soon repaired the broken thread in his life, and continued to work in the company of her who was only absent in the flesh. He surrounded himself with her mystic presence, he continued to have intimate relations with the being who to him was more alive than ever, he listened to her inspiration, and desired everyone to remember that everything which he wrote after her death was the product, not of one mind and conscience, but of three—namely Mill, his wife, and his stepdaughter. Surely this was, consciously or unconsciously, a practical affirmation of immortality."

Yes, and of more than the fact of immortality; of the reality of the power of spirit consciousness to impress and inspire those still on earth; the distinctive feature of Spiritualism in its practical bearings as teaching the continuity not only of life and consciousness, but of the interest and influence of departed loved ones.—Light, London, Eng.

PRINCESS IS A RED CROSS NURSE.

D'Antuni of Italy Goes to Hospital Train to Show Clairvoyant Powers.—She Received the Impulse to Do Philanthropic Work During Her Spiritualistic Seances.

The Daily News of Chicago has the following special cable from Rome, Italy:

"The Princess d'Antuni has joined the nurses aboard the Red Cross hospital train, which, equipped on a war footing, leaves Rome to-day on an experimental trip to the towns of Umbria. The Daily News correspondent is assured that the princess does not intend to forsake her place in society or retire to private life, but has been led to dedicate most of her time to nursing, owning to an impulse repeatedly felt during her Spiritualistic seances. This has compelled her to use her extraordinary powers on behalf of suffering humanity. The princess is convinced that war is remote, but she hopes that her example will be followed by other women of the Roman nobility. She intends to institute a special corps of nurses, who will offer Spiritualistic as well as material aid to the wounded, especially in cases of painful surgical operations, which, even if successful in healing the body, damage the spirit.

"The princess, according to reports, already has put clairvoyance to practical uses. At several surgical operations her presence is said to have rendered the use of anesthetics unnecessary and insured the speedy recovery of the patients. Both the princess and the Red Cross doctors who favor the new theory withhold all details, as they fear that publicity will lead to opposition of the scientists, who resent the intrusion of unknown powers into the field of surgery. The king is reported to be enthusiastic over the action taken by the princess.

THE WILD ROSE.

A white rose by the doorway blooms;
Its snowy petals, one by one,
Fall lightly on the pathway worn,
Beneath a June day's glowing sun.

We fill the pleasant farmhouse old,
With wealth of yellow roses fair;
With crimson, damask, deepest red,
And claim for each some beauty rare.

Last eve I wandered out alone,
Down by the brookside, o'er the hill,
To where a little churchyard lies;
A few grey headstones standing still.

And there, in great abundance grew,
Beneath the spreading locust trees,
The wild pink rose—no fairer flower,
Was ever kissed by sun and breeze.

I've gathered them upon the marsh,
Along the shore old ocean laves;
But sweetly sad their presence here,
Beside these lone, neglected graves.

Mother's Dear Girl.

There was joy in the home when the little one came—
'As a birdling from heaven—with beautiful name—
Her angel name—only her angels might know;—
Nor was it revealed to her kindred below.
She lay in the hush of a strange new surprise,
'As she looked at her mother, with wondering eyes.

The mother heart, thrilled with delight and with fear,
Thought of sorrows and joys that in time might appear
In the little one's life—of the bloom and the blight,
That might gladden as day or make cheerless as night;
Of the love that might shine as the sun in the skies,
Or the woe and distress that in moans might arise.

Like a plant in the garden of promise she throve,
In the nourishing warmth of a mother's rich love;
Like a rosebud just bursting in beautiful bloom,
Delighting with beauty and fragrant perfume.
And the mother heart, loving each ringlet and curl,
Held the sweet loving thought: "You are mother's dear girl!"

In movement, in features, the mother could trace
The charm and sweet fulness of beauty and grace;
The blithesome effulgence of nature refined,
That shone in her actions, reflecting her mind:
And the mother heart, prizing this beautiful pearl,
Said in sweet loving words: "You are mother's dear girl!"

Love shone in her actions, and flowed from her heart,
And bound the dear mother with love's wondrous art;
The ties of affection grew stronger each day,
Made sweeter and stronger in love's potent way;
And the mother heart felt, mid life's bustle and whirl,
That her child of sweet promise was "Mother's dear girl."

For lovelight angelic e'er beamed in her eyes,
And oft filled the mother with gladsome surprise;
The sound of her voice was sweet music to hear,
And brought to the mother the brightest of cheer;
And dearer her words than were riches of pearl:
"I am glad, O, so glad, I am mother's dear girl!"

As an angel descended from heaven above,
Her thoughts and her ways were in beauty and love,
And she oft told her mother her angels were near,—
She told of their speech, which was sweet to her ear;
In her gladness and love she would cease from her play,
To tell her dear mother the words they would say.

"O, mother!" once said she, "to-day when they came,
They told me that I had a sweet angel name!
I would know that sweet name when they called me to come,
To live with them there in their beautiful home!"
And the mother heart felt her HOME ANGEL would go,
Too soon, all too soon, from her earth-life below,

Like a bud in the garden of promise she bloomed
In beauty and sweetness, nor knew she was doomed
To wither and fade, in her dear mother's arms—
The ashes of hope be the end of life's charms—
For she faded and faded, and failed day by day,
Nor love's ministrations could rescue death's prey.

Her life and her strength were fast ebbing away;
When she said to her mother, one beautiful day:
"O, mother, dear! mother, my angels are come!
They call me away to their beautiful home!
Such beautiful beings! with love all aflame!
They call me now, mother—my own angel name!"

"I must go, mother dear, to that beautiful home!
You will follow me soon—I will help you to come!
I shall love you, my mother, the same as before—
In your sorrow and sadness, I'll love you the more.
Over there, where I see the bright banners unfurl,
I'll be glad, mother dear, I am mother's dear girl!

Good-bye, mother dear,—how I love you!—they call—
I must go—they are waiting—so beautiful all!
I love them—my angels—they're loving and true—
They're helping me, mother, and we will help you!
Don't cry, mother dear! See! the beautiful home!
My angel name—mother—you'll know when you come."

The smile of an angel illumined her face,
As she passed the bright portals. Sweet beauty and grace
Still lighted her features, in placid sweet sleep,
As she went, her fond tryst with the angels to keep.
And the mother, with sadness yet gladness of heart,
Felt that distance nor death could e'er keep them apart.

The dear mother gazed on the face of her dead,
And kissed the loved lips whence the spirit had fled,
And sadness and joy mingled deep in her heart,
And she smiled through her tears that would lovingly start;
For the sweetness of death marked the beautiful face,
And added a new and a wonderful grace.

Though that loved voice was hushed in the silence of death,
And no more on her cheek would she feel that sweet breath
Of her loved one, a wonderful comfort she knew,
And she felt in her heart: "Love undying is true,
And while angels of goodness love's banners unfurl,
In heaven or earth—you are mother's dear girl!"

And now since her loved one has passed from her sight,
Her heart often thrills with a wondrous delight,
As she senses a loving sweet presence—her own
Dear angel, who ne'er leaves her mother alone—
And she hears the sweet words, mid earth's turmoil and swirl—
"I am glad—O, so glad I am mother's dear girl!"

And often while busy with cares of the day,
And oft in the silence, all cares put away,
Her angel comes sweetly and lovingly near,
And whispers sweet thoughts that give comfort and cheer.

"You are mother's dear angel now, darling," says she,
"As an angel you live with your angels—and me!"

The new church will be founded on moral science. Poets, artists, musicians, philosophers, will be its prophet teachers. The noblest literature of the world will be its Bible. Religion of the Aztecs, Its Parallels in Roman Catholicism

"Judge Ladd of California turned the light of legal evidence on Christian Origins, and found no reliable proof that such a person as the ecclesiastical Jesus ever lived."—Progressive Thinker, March 21, 1908.

I propose to offer indisputable historical evidence to prove the truth of the above quotation, and demonstrate that all the essentials of the Roman Catholic—the Mother Christian—church, were known to the ancient Mexicans; that her various rites and ceremonies were in practice among them for several thousand years before the Christian era, and that the gods of both were practically the same; founded on the Sun Myth.

I will quote from Prescott, from the histories of Diaz, Martyr, Gracia, Torquémada, Sahagun, and other Spanish writers; from a valuable work by Jesuit de Acosta, "Natural and Moral History of the Indies," written when he visited Mexico in 1586, and the "Antiquities of Mexico," by Lord Kingsborough, who was, so it is report, elevated to the peerage in recognition of this work. It is very extensive and explains the Aztec paintings and hieroglyphics in the various libraries of Europe.

After Cortez had conquered Mexico, Pope Adrian VI., who had been tutor to the Emperor, undertook to care for the spiritual welfare of the inhabitants. Cortez had written a secret letter to Charles V. which has mysteriously disappeared from the Archives. It is unknown whether the original or a copy was sent to the pope. William Robertson, D. D., states in the preface to his History of America, that Sir Robert Murray Keith, the English Ambassador to Vienna, having obtained royal permission to do so, caused a search to be made, but the letter was not found.

Adrian issued a bull ordering that none but Spaniards should visit the conquered country, and even they had first to register in Seville. "All lawyers, surgeons, students of people of an inquiring mind," as the bull states, were especially prohibited. Also, all heretics and persons suspected by the Inquisition, and their descendants to the third generation. Even secular priests were excluded, and only Dominicans and Franciscans were allowed to go. The government was enjoined to a strict observance of these provisions and the law remained in force for more than thirty years.

Why all these precautions? Why send only the Dominicans and Franciscans, who, between them, controlled the infamous Inquisition? Kingsborough gives us the key. In reviewing the "bull" which he gives in full, he says: "It would appear that, whether or no she (the church) wished to conceal from Europe a fact which she feared might shake its institutions, shock and confound the prejudices of ages and unmodel its laws, she took all the precautions which she could have done if she really had entertained such a fear." Kingsborough, though not a papist, was an avowed orthodox Christian.

The missionaries found the Aztecs to be a highly cultured and intelligent race, whose religious rites and beliefs so closely resembled their own that the difference was simply in the name.

They claimed to have originated in a far Eastern land and had emigrated by express command of their god, who had promised them a new and beautiful country. They divided their time, since their emigration into four periods, and they exhibited their proofs, copies of which are to be found in the "Codex Vaticanus."

Humboldt laboriously examined these claims, and says that the first period covered 520 years; the second 4804; the third 4010; the fourth, up to the time of the conquest, 4008; in all, 18028 years, "being 6000 years more than the Persian Ages described in the Zend Avesta." How much older their civilization may be is in doubt, as the Aztecs were preceded by three other distinct races; the Toltecs, the Chichimecs, and the Nahualtecs.

Prof. Max Muller, practically agrees wth Humboldt. He says: "In their languages as well as in their religions, traces may possibly still be found, before it is too late, of pre-historic migrations of men from the primitive Asiatic to the American Continent, either across the stepping-stones of the Aleutic bridge in the North, or lower South, by drifting with favorable winds from island to island, till the hardy canoe was landed or wrecked on the American Coast, never to return again to the Asiatic home from which it had started."

All investigators admit an Eastern origin for the Mexicans. Damaso Sotomayer, who had devoted many years to the study, claims that the Aztec writings have enabled him to decipher Chaldean writings. Dr. Le Plougeon, I believe, after nine years of investigation in Yucatan, adheres to the Eastern theory. In 1897, when the descriptions were discovered carved in the rock near Hermosillo, a learned Chinaman pronounced them as very good Chinese.

The country of Chili is evidently named after the province of Pe-chili in China, and, some time ago The Progressive Thinker gave us the testimony of missionary, Rev. Dr. Bridgman, that "the 23rd and 24th verses of the 19th chapter of Job are nearly verbatim in a very ancient Chinese work." Moreover, what is very significant, the Aztecs believed that the Sun and Moon were not only brother and sister, but man and wife. This is a belief held by the Chinese, regardless of cult," and is one of the insurmountable obstacles that face the Christian missionaries.

In comparing the Aztec movements with those in the East, Sir R. K. Porter queries: "Whence did they take the model of these edifices? Were they of the Mongolian race? Did they descend from a common stock with the Chinese, the Hiong-nu and the Japanese?"

Humboldt says: "We think we perceive that they all descended from the same stock, notwithstanding the enormous diversity of language which separates them from one another."

More than a score of prominent investigators have noticed the obliquely-set eyes, prominent cheek bones and flatted nose" of the remnants of the Aztecs, to be found as far South as Panama, and they all agree as to their Mongolian origin. That being so, it explains whence came their religion; their virgin-born crucified Savior; the cross, an emblem of phallic worship and other degraded superstitions of pre-historic man, which are the bed-rock of Christianity.

The Aztecs who were examined by the Inquisition gave a summary of their religion and exhibited their writings and monuments in proof thereof.

They believed in a Trinity;; Father, Son and Holy Ghost, whom they styled, "Lord and Father Sun, Son-Sun and Spirit Sun." This is an exact duplication of "The three Honorable Fo" of the Chinese. This triad was also called "Three in one and one in three." The two former were represented by images; the latter, always by "an eagle." The Father had created man "after his own image and likeness," the Son was "co-equal" with him; the Holy Ghost sprang from "the love existing between them."

Prior to the creation of man, there had been a war in heaven. The rebels were ousted. Their Chief, who had numerous names, was an object of dread or veneration, and was always represented as a serpent endowed with supernatural powers. God then created the Earth and peopled it with a pair. Their Eve was made from "a man's bone" by one of their gods, named Xoloth. She had numerous names: "The woman with the serpent," "The woman of our flesh." She had committed the first sin by "eating the fruit of a tree." Several paintings represent the devil, in the guise of a serpent, tempting her. She is also pictured as the one pent's head," and as "she by whom sin came into the world."
came into the world."

Veytia says he saw an ancient painting "representing a garden with a single tree in it, round which was coiled a serpent with a human face." In speaking of the historian Torquemada not entering fully into this subject, Kingsborough says it was "lest he should too clearly prove that the Mexicans were acquainted with the history of Adam and Eve." But Torquemada admits that their Eve had "Two Sons" whom he compares with Cain and Abel.

On page 48 of the Vatican paintings their Eve appears with two children. They had been fighting and one was killed. In speaking of this, Humboldt says: "We might be led to suppose that the two vases which we see at the bottom of the picture, one of which is overturned, is the cause of this contention."

As their Eve had brought "original sin" into the world, Baring-Gould says that they had special prayers and a peculiar form of baptism for children to cleanse them from "the Original Sin committed before the founding of the world."

In this myth, the Aztecs are several points in advance of Christians, for, when the boss gods heard that Xoloth had created Eve without their permission, there was another row. Xoloth was bounced; he landed on the Earth, married Eve, and by becoming the father of man entitled us to claim relationship with the gods.

As most of their paintings describing their first three epochs were destroyed by the church, their entire story is incomplete. But their fourth period, which dated 4008 years before the conquest, making it 5530 years ago, shows a deluge. Humboldt says it is "remarkable that we find an American people who, according to the same calendar in use among them on the arrival of Cortez, indicate the days and the years in which the world underwent great catastrophies, further back than twenty ages."

Their Noah, Coxcox, with his wife and six others escaped in a boat. In describing a painting, Prescott says: "The boat in which he (their Noah) escaped, was filled with various kinds of animals and birds." Humboldt holds that their account of the Deluge and the subsequent events, even to the sending out of a raven and dove (only they substituted a humming-bird for the dove) which returned with a leafy branch, is identical with the Bible narrative and adds "They showed Mount Colhuacan as the place where the ark rested."

They also had the legend of "the confusion of tongues" and the "building of the Tower of Babel." The descendants of Coxcox built it, "to see what was going on in heaven." Kingsborough says: "The base of this tower is, at the present day, (about 1830) still remaining and its circumference is 1800 feet." Humboldt says the same. When the Spaniards arrived, it was in ruins and the Aztecs explained that "The gods, angry at the audacity of man, set fire to the Tower and then each family received a language of its own." This work was performed by a dove—presumably their Holy Ghost. Clavigero describes an ancient painting which shows a dove with thirty-three tongues, being the number of languages that had been taught to these families. The Spaniards found thirty different languages between Florida and Panama and 120 dialects on the Continent. In 83 of these, examined by Barton and Vater, only 170 words were found the roots of which appear to be the same.

The 11th, 12th and 19th pages of the Borgian MS. describe the plagues. Says Kingsborough: "A man is represented holding up in his left hand a rod, which became a serpent. The plagues, consisting of frogs, locusts, lice, flies, etc., were also represented, and the thick darkness which overspread the land for three days, and the slaughter of the first born, and the curious symbol of one serpent swallowing another."

Their god, the Father Sun, was also called Tezsatlipooca. It is a compound name composed of a certain mountain, tili—dark—and poca, smoke. He once appeared on a Mountain, Tezcatepec, to one of their holy men. "No one ever saw his face," and adds Kingsborough, "a figure with bandaged eyes, or a veil over his face, (like Moses) frequently occurs in these paintings." Squire describes similar paintings in the collection known as the Codex Vaticanus.

According to Higgins they claimed that one of their holy men once stopped the Sun in its orbit, and they were well-acquainted with that other undoubted solar myth, of a man being swallowed by a big fish.

The Aztecs were undoubtedly Sun-and Fire Worshipers. They kept a fire or a light continually burning on their altars, same as the Eastern nations and just as the papists do to-day in a lamp before the altar, never allowing it to be extinguished; but, if that should occur, it may be relighted only from some other holy flame. In speaking of this fire worship Jesuit Acosta says: "Next to Viracocha, or their supreme god, that which most commonly they have, and do adore, is the Sun; and after those things that are most remarkable in the celestial or elementary nature, as the Moon, Stars, Sea and Land."

They were fully aware of the Pythagorian doctrines of Metempsychosis; practiced circumcision; like the Chinese, believed in nine heavens; venerated the serpent; and as they possessed the cross, they were phallic worshipers. This last is admitted by Kingsborough; and Squire in his "Serpent Symbols," after comparing their sculptures with the Phallic symbols in the temples of India, says that in all of them "we find precisely the same symbols, separate and in a Trinity, and Herrera tells us that they "confessed a supreme god and Lord and framer of the Universe. He was the principal object whom they adored, looking up to heaven and calling him the creator of heaven and earth." Martyr, after a careful study of their theology, says: "They believed in the immortality of the soul and a future state of rewards and punishments."

In regard to the second person of their Trinity they informed the missionaries that while the Virgin Chimalman was seated at home with her two sisters, an angel appeared and dropping on her a feather, announced that she was to "conceive a son without connection with man." This was from the Holy Ghost, who usually appears in their paintings as an eagle. The two sisters died of fright, but in due time the virgin conceived a son who was called Quetzalcoatl. Plate 10 in the Codex Vaticanus represents this annunciation. Kingsborough gives several of the same nature. The Spaniards found this myth as far South as Brazil and North to Florida. Each nation had a particular name for this god, but the main instances were practically identical.

The devotion of the Virgin was universal. She was called "Queen of Heaven" and was their chief intercessor before the throne of God. The Vicar of St. Dominic, a Dominican Monastery, relates that he saw copies of very ancient pantings depicting this annunciation, and adds: "She who, was represented as Our Lady (a papal name for Mary) had her hair tied up in the manner in which Mexican women tie and fasten their hair, and in a knot behind was inserted a small cross, by which it was intended to show that she was the most holy, and that a great prophet would be born of her, who would come from heaven and whom she would bring forth without connection with man, still remaining a virgin; and that his own people would persecute that great prophet and meditate evil against him, and would put him to death, crucify him upon a cross; and accordingly he was represented in the painting as crucified with his hands and feet tied to the cross and without nails. The article of the resurrection, how he had to return again to life and ascend to heaven, were likewise painted.

This is a remarkable statement in view of the fact that the second person of theChristian Trinity, during the early centuries, was represented as a lamb. His human nature was discovered by the council "In Trullo," in the year 703. Then for the first time, appeared the crucifix, on which he is represented with hands and feet tied to the cross.

What a Dazzling Light Surrounds Me!

Madame Rufina Noeggerath's Funeral.—Translation from Revue Spirite, Leopold Dauvil, Editor-in-Chief, Paul Leymarie, Managing Editor.

(Translated from the French especially for The Progressive Thinker by Mrs. A. Monthan Tattersfield.)

It has taken flight, the beautiful soul of that noble woman whom, from a sentiment of filial veneration, her friends and assiduous visitors to the little drawing-room on Rue Miltch, called "Bonne Maman."

I would have liked to deliver to my readers all the correspondence that the regretted, but expected death of the honorary president of the "Allan Kardec Circle" has stirred up, but the columns of the Revue are filled, and time fails me to write a paragraph worthy of her whom we mourn, a paragraph which ought to be written by a more powerful pen than mine.

Sunday, Apri 12, I called upon "Bonne Maman" without thinking that she would die so soon, though I could see that she never would rise from her bed again.

Her distinguished daughter, called to her bedside more than a fortnight ago, cared for her tenderly, as well as the faithful Anna, who for twelve years has been her devoted servant. Monday the invalid grew visibly weaker; Tuesday she lost her speech, and Wednesday, on the arrival of her second grandson, whom she seemed to have waited for before closing her eyes forever, she died at four o'clock in the afternoon, after, with great difficulty, uttering her last words: "WHAT A DAZZLING LIGHT SURROUNDS ME!"

From Thursday to Saturday, April 12, the day of her obsequies, all her friends and admirers were filing past the bed placed in the little drawing room, draped in mourning, where laid the smiling dead imbedded in lilies and violets, her favorite flowers.

Finally, Sunday at three o'clock the light remains of our illustrious dead were laid in the coffin under the portico of her house, which wreaths and candles had turned into a mortuary chapel. There, on the threshold to the home, made so hospitable by her who now was going to leave it, Leon Denis, with his vibrating voice, spoke the first farewell. Then the funeral procession began to wend its way towards "Pere-Lachaise."

The journey is long, but the sun, veiled in the morning, now accompanies her, who, sleeping the last sleep under wreaths and sheaves of flowers, is craping the capital.

Many ladies consider it an honor to accompany the hearse on foot in order to show homage to her, who had so many times received them with affection. In the cemetery, before the open grave, Leon Denis was the first to speak, and I regret that he was not able to deliver to me what his heart so well expressed with such eloquence.

After him read Camille Chaigneau, out of the spiritual doctrine, a passage from his deep and conclusive studies. He remembered that he had the happiness to collaborate with Mme. Noeggerath at a whole series of these fine seances, where under the dictation of the most exalted spirits, with the aid of mediums of unquestionable integrity, they received beautiful communications from the beyond.

Mme. Noeggerath collected all these materials of great value, commenting them with this delicate sense that resulted in the beautiful pages of which her book, the "Survival," is composed, a most complete work that ought to be read by every Spiritualist.

After M. Chaigneau, the poet Tubair Larroche read some beautiful verses dedicated by him to "Bonne Maman."

Finally, myself, in the double title of president of the "Allan Kardec Circle" and editor of this "Revue," which has contained so many brilliant thoughts of Mme. Noeggareth, I have fulfilled, but more as a friend, the promise given, now more than seven years ago, the day after the memorable fete on her eightieth anniversary, to bid her the last farewell, on the brink of the tomb! I have done so, dear old friend. The words of farewell were very simple, but they came from the heart.

Mme. Noeggerath, her worthy and distinguished daughter, came from Germany, with her two daughters and two sons, to attend the funeral of their venerated mother and grandmother. They have all been witnesses to the respect that presided over the obsequies of her, whose departure they mourn, not realizing how much they ought to rejoice to have seen this exquisite soul, full of kindness, charity and tenderness for humanity rise towards this "Beyond" where she now knows the happiness reserved for angels.

A Case of Obsession

Outside of Spiritualism, Illustrating the Existence of a General Law.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OBSESSION.

Illustrating the Important Fact That Evil Influences Exist on the Spirit Side of Life—A Pot of Filth Brought by the Obsessing Spirit—Most Remarkable Spirit Manifestation as Given in the Hindu Spiritual Magazine of Calcutta, India.

During my stay, in July last, at Galsi, a village about 12 miles north of Burdwan, the following account of spirit manifestation was related to me by one Mr. N Banerjee, an inhabitant of that village. His statement was corroborated by more than a score of persons still living who had witnessed the phenomena, and some of whom were his relatives and some neighbors. His house was situated close to my lodgings and he used to visit me now and then to talk on various private matters. In course of our conversation one evening, I enquired of him about certain mysterious phenomena which, I heard, had been occasionally taking place in the house of a neighbor of his and he replied that they were nothing in comparison to what had occurred in his own house in his own presence. He then narrated the following:

"More than 15 years ago my brother, who was a Pundit in some school in Calcutta, came to spend his summer vacation in our village. With my brother came his wife. She was about 14 or 15 years of age. Our troubles began almost from the day of their advent in our midst. Our family was a fairly large one and we all lived together under the old patriarchal system. A couple of days after the arrival of my brother and his wife signs of disturbance became visible. Clods of earth came rolling down from the ridge of one of the thatched houses day and night. It was at first thought that it was the work of some mischievous folks in the neighborhood. As the news spread from village to village, many daring fellows volunteered to keep guard over the house, and if possible to catch the miscreants, but their endeavors failed. Not only did the lumps of earth roll down as usual, but mud, pieces of stone, and brickbats commenced dropping down inside the rooms from the ceilings. The persons who had been on the watch gave up the job after 4 days as hopeless. Our condition was most distressful, and our lives were made very miserable. People said it was an evil spirit which had been playing pranks with us. They suggested that the services of ojhas (ghost doctors) must be secured at once. A few miles from our village there lived one who was reputed to be an expert ghost-doctor. He came and tried all his arts, but failed to do any good. The activities of the evil one were now diverted to many other directions. For example, one day I had sat down to my meal. After taking one mouthful I was going to take another, when, lo, the whole plateful vanished. I was dumfounded. Again, earthen and metal pots danced and careened about the room from one side to the other. Their uncanny antics however stopped as suddenly as they began. On another occasion, a new-born child of 4 or 5 days was taken up from the lap of its mother, raised to the ceilings, carried in a slanting position through the door and placed lightly in the middle of the courtyard. The mother all the while screamed, shouted for help and followed the child to the place where it was set down. She clung to the child and brought it back into her room without any apparent harm having been done it. But the child died in a few days.

"Some persons named a certain famous ojha of Naihaty, in the district of the 24-Purgunahs, and advised that he should be sent for, as he was a veteran in his profession. Duly he came, stayed for a couple of days and exhausted all the stock of his learning but he was thoroughly discomfited, for as he was repeating the mantras (incantations) the carpet on which he was seated was snatched away by the spirit and beaten upon his head while a few kicks and cuffs were also administered on his shoulder and back. The poor fellow had to run for his life. Bones, carcases, filth and dirt of every kind fell on us from every side.

"We were so exasperated with the troubles that we thought of leaving the village. But naturally this we did not do until our troubles became unbearable. Whenever my brother's wife went by herself to take her bath in an adjoining tank, some unseen hands would take hold of her cloth and attempt to snatch it from her person, putting her in a most embarrassing situation. It was therefore impossible for her to go out unless in company with some other females who would take her to and bring her from the tank. She was pestered in divers other ways. Consequently her condition was extremely painful. Furniture from one room used to be shifted to another and vice versa. On many occasions cooking utensils containing rice partly or fully boiled would be taken up bodily from the hearth and dashed over it, thereby spoiling the rice and causing the whole family to starve. Once a brass pitcher full of water went straight up to a height of about 20 feet and then dropped down below. Not less than 50 times was our food spoiled and we had to go without any.

"I had a great liking for fish, and having tasted none for days together I bought a big one. No one would touch it or venture to cook it. All my people remonstrated with me, but I was determined to have it cooked outside the house. With this resolution I cut up the fish, and just as I was taking the piece for washing off the scales in the pond preparatory to cooking, the pieces began to jump up from the basket and flying up in the air and at last disappeared in the skies. My fish was all gone and I returned home with the empty basket, disgusted and disappointed.

"An uncle of mine, an old man, thus apostrophised the Spirit, moved by this incident:—Mr. Ghost, you are doing us all sorts of evil, can't you do us some good, give us some sweet things to eat.' As he said so, in a minute or two there came down from above, in front of us, a large earthen jar with a cover over it. My uncle was much delighted. But no sooner did he take off the cover than horror of horrors! It was full of filth with worms squirming in it. Involuntarily he exclaimed 'Ram, Ram;' and was fleeing from the place hastily, when the tuft of hair on the crown of his head was caught hold of and he was dragged mercilessly in circles towards a mud wall close by. Poor fellow! he shrieked in agony but we could do nothing to help him, until the whole of the tuft of hair was uprooted. The dear old man's head bled and he was quite senseless for half-an-hour.

"During these times we could not sleep inside the rooms. So all of us had our respective beds in the spacious verandah attached to the front of the haunted room. At night this room was kept lighted. One day just as we had got into our beds the light suddenly went out and we asked one another to go inside and re-light the lamp, but no one ventured. The door of the room was wide open and we were chaffing one another for cowardice, when I volunteered, and taking a match box with me entered the room. But as I struck the match it was blown out, and in the darkness both my legs were caught as it were in a vice, and were tied together with a piece of rope, above the ankles, with such force that I screamed in pain and cried aloud for help. To all my appeals I was only advised to come out, but how could I come out? I was a prisoner in the hands of the vicious spirit. I stretched both hands, caught the rope at its end, and tried with all my strength to take it off. The rope was stiff and drawn taut though not held by any visible hands. Yet I was being pulled all about the room, and finally carried towards the staircase with such force that I felt blood oozing out of the part tied. Luckily my feet touched the first step leading to the stairs and pressing them against it I made desperate efforts with the strength still left in me to free myself. The rope now snapped, and by what agency I know not, I was pushed out into the open space between the open doors. From here I was pulled out into the verandah. The rope had to be cut with a knife, as the knot was tied peculiarly and could not be loosened. The part hurt was washed and dressed, but I fell ill with fever from which it took me a full fortnight to recover.

"We then left the village, and went to another a few miles distant, to the house of a wealthy relative of ours. We stayed there for a month or thereabouts, but all the same we experienced the same troubles there. Again we came to our village the evil spirit following us at every step. We suffered for two or three months more after which his Satanic Majesty left us of his own accord, for which we thanked him and thanked God for our deliverance. Since then we have not been troubled any more."

ANGEL GUARDIANSHIP.

Our aim has been ever to work for the right,
To walk in the pathway of Truth's holy light;
Though oft may have err'd and mistaken the way,
Have yet been sustained from day unto day.
A hand from on high has guarded our life,
From fields of confusion and battles of strife—
Has led us through valleys of plenty and peace,
Where pure living fountains to flow never cease.

Has strewn in our pathway the beautiful flowers,
From gardens immortal and evergreen bowers;
Has led us e'er onward and upward by love,
Toward the bright mansions and glories above!
No fearful foreboding e'er enters our soul,
For faith points us ever beyond the dark goal,
To a life which is fuller and fairer than this,
With no earthly limits to mar its sweet bliss,

Or hinder its flight into fields which are new,
Where action is pleasure and life ever true;
Where clouds which now darken are swept far away,
And shines the bright sun of an eternal day!
If motives and deeds while on earth be aright,
With love and true justice kept ever in sight,
Some day we shall find in those realms on high,
The golden fruition for which we now sigh.

Rich treasures beyond our conceptions to see,
'Till death claims the mortal and sets the soul free,
And then will the glorious vision unroll,
A gladsome surprise to the newly-born soul!
And then will resound sweet peans of praise,
For the hand which has led us through mystical ways,
To the portals of peace, our true home above,
Enwreathed with the laurels of immortal love!

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

Psychic Research, Its Relation to Science and Theology

Extracts from Dr. H. V. Sweringen's Paper on "Psychic Research, Its Relations to Science and Theology," Read at a Joint Meeting of the Fort Wayne Medical and Ministerial Associations, June 30, 1908.

Mr. President, Gentlemen of the Fort Wayne Medical and Ministerial Associations, Ladies and Gentlemen: The best apology I can make for my appearance upon the program of this evening is the fact that I made an effort to keep off of it, and to have some other member of our society appointed in my stead.

I am supposed to represent the medical profession at this meeting of physicians and preachers, but lest I should chance to misrepresent it, I desire at the outset to relieve my medical brethren of any responsibility for what I may say, should they feel disinclined to endorse my utterances.

I propose merely to submit a few thoughts or suggestions under no special title or subject, the object of this meeting being that of a pleasant evening social with our ministerial brethren, rather than that of exhaustive investigation of any medical or theological or medico-theological subject. Perhaps "Psychic Research and Its Relation to Science and Theology" might properly be considered the subject of this paper.

When informed that this was to be a joint meeting of physicians and preachers, several subjects of interest to both professions suggested themselves to my mind, but with their suggestion came also the conviction that a free expression of opinion upon them might not be altogether agreeable or acceptable to the hearers and possibly result in a heated discussion out of all harmony with the intended spirit of the occasion.

I think it true of both physicians and preachers that they are disposed to conceal from each other and the public their innermost thoughts touching the soundness of each other's ideas upon many points in science and theology, for fear of giving offense to the more popular and accepted thought of the day.

I have for some time past been in correspondence with men of national and international renown in science and literature, and am surprised at the marked difference in the tenor of their private and published utterances on the subject of psychic research, etc. Thus public opinion, like conscience, "doth make cowards of us all." We are too much in fear of public opinion, comment and criticism to express our innermost honest thought upon many subjects, and so we manifest an outward approval of the current popular and accepted ideas while our reason perhaps rejects them. Policy and diplomacy, self-interest and the like, often retard the progress of truth.

Heredity and environment are probably very largely responsible for the conditions that obtain with nations as well as with individuals and it becomes the practical duty of the physician and the preacher to try as best they can, as teachers seeking to benefit humanity, to learn how to eliminate the influences that come from the past that are of a nature to bring about evil results, and at the same time to seek to learn how to augment, to strengthen, to enforce any impulse or tendency that makes for good. There can be no doubt that whatever our inherited conditions may be and the diversified influences that are derived from environment, we are ultimately making for the good.

It is hard to conceive of an absolute evil. It is difficult to accept the doctrine of total depravity. A so-called heathen, whose name I cannot now recall, prayed: "Oh, God, be kind to the wicked; to the good thou hast already been sufficiently kind in making them good." This prayer was suggested, no doubt, by a study of heredity and environment, and evangelists of the Jones and Sunday type who are prone to unkind and severe criticism of their brethren in the regular ministry, would do well to ponder deeply, for it is within itself a most important sermon.

* * * * * * * * *

It is certainly a self-evident fact that a man's early theological or religious affiliations are as little the result of his own free choice as the color of his hair or of his eyes. There are few more gratifying signs of our advanced and still advancing civilization, than the marked decrease of the animosity arising from difference in religious belief. In times past, men who, but for this difference, might have been friendly neighbors and helpful citizens, were thereby separated into hostile bands. Dogmas rose up between them like huge walls. They stood behind these like armed garrisons, glaring angrily over on all beyond. But, thanks to the progress we are making, these dogmatic walls are crumbling. The light of reason, human kindness and education are entering the dark enclosures, the free air of liberty sweeps through the pinfolds, and men casting down their weapons, begin to wonder why they regarded as enemies those who only exercised the divine quality of thought and stood firm to their convictions. I can well remember when an Episcopalian would hardly look at a Methodist or shake hands with a Presbyterian; and when sect was arrayed against sect. Religious and sectarian animosity and prejudices were most marked and bigoted. Some years ago when the spire of the Episcopal church in this city was struck by lightning, a prominent layman of the Methodist church here seriously expressed the opinion that the stroke was the expression of the Almighty's dislike for that church.

That a great change has been wrought in this direction is proven by the fact that before the Rev. E. W. Allen left his pastorate of the West Jefferson Street Church of Christ in Fort Wayne, he made an effort to get the pastors of the different churches in the city to occupy his pulpit and to tell his congregation why they were Presbyterians, Methodists or Catholics as the case might be, the Rev. Father Delaney having been one of the number invited. This move on the part of Rev. Allen certainly indicates that the churches are getting closer and closer together. The gentiles have had the use of the synagogue of our Jewish brethren on various occasions and I remember of hearing the late eminent Rabbi Wise deliver a lecture in the old Berry Street M. E. church. But give it a little more time, and the whole human race will get together.

That there is in the church to-day a condition of unrest from various causes, must be plain to the most superficial observer. Here and there throughout Christendom are pulpiteers giving expression to views not exactly in accord with the doctrines they were ordained to preach, and they have in consequence been obliged in many instances to sever their connections with their congregations, although in some cases the latter have followed them to independent organizations. But recently as we are informed by the Associated Press, nineteen clergymen of the Episcopal church have gone over to the Catholic, in which church likewise, all is not serene, if between the lines of the Pope's recent encyclical on "Modernisms," we read aright, and correctly interpret the reply thereto by the Rev. Father Tyrell. We believe, however, that out of this ferment going on in all the churches, will come a better, more tolerant, liberal and civilizing condition that will finally make for the betterment of humanity at large.

The foregoing remarks lead me to the consideration of the question: Why does the Christian church refuse to enter into the spirit of the present age, which is one of scientific research for settlement. The most interesting, the most important, the most serious, scientific and theological question of all the ages, was asked by Job: "If a man die shall he live again?" This question has never been answered satisfactorily, conclusively or positively in the affirmative by the Christian church. Indeed it would not be difficult to cite Bible passages in support of a negative answer to Job's question.

The physician and the preacher meet at the bedside of the dying patient and parishioner. The former in all probability is a materialist and an Agnostic as are the great majority of physicians, who have no scientific evidence that death does not end all. But with bowed head and a sad countenance he listens with respectful silence to the spiritual comfort administered by the preacher who reads the fourteenth chapter of John or the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, administers the sacrament and through the inspiration of faith derived from an early theological education, points his dying parishioner to a glorious future life, and he dies in peace, in the faith of his pastor. But notwithstanding all this, Job's question remains unanswered: "If a man die, shall he live again?" The physician and scientist want the scientific proof that he DOES live again, while the preacher SEEMS to be satisfied with his faith ALONE that he does. We are instructed by the Bible, however, to add to our faith, knowledge; this is what the physician and scientist want, and it is in conformity with this instruction and a natural desire to develop the facts of science that the American Psychical Research Society was formed as was also the British Society, the great object of which societies is the solution of Job's conundrum. "The most important work which is done in the world—by far the most important," said the late Hon. W. E. Gladstone, is the work being done in these societies."

The church, however, does not seem to be in sympathy with them and therefore offers them no assistance.

If the church, religion or philosophy were able to meet the arguments of materialistic science as presented by a Haeckel; if the church was in possession of facts and arguments to substantiate its own theories, it might well stand aloof from and independent of these societies. But to relegate the proofs of man's immortality to the domain of faith alone will prove less and less satisfactory as the scientific spirit of the age advances, and it seems to me that the church cannot afford to longer ignore the efforts of science to answer Job's question.

The religious, moral and emotional arguments, however strong they may be, do not equal the scientific proof of life beyond death. The natural inference is that the church is more in sympathy with materialism than with its opposite, Spiritualism, on the subject of Job's question.

In the North American Review for June of last year, is an article from the pen of Rev. Dr. Mackay, pastor of St. Nicholas, Fifth avenue and 48th street, Manhattan, which probably explains the church's lack of interest in the subject of psychical research. After quoting the late F. W. H. Myers' scientific prophecy that "within a century the scientific proof of personal immortality would be so strong that no reasonable man would question it," the reverend doctor continue:

"The hope of immortality will never be more than a hope, and faith in it must rest rather in the region of the affections than in that of the intellect. * * * If the certainty of the future life were revealed so clearly and definitely that doubt would be impossible, that knowledge would not only cheapen, but degrade the nobler side of life."

Now, I ask in all candor, can it be possible that such an argument as that is advanced by a twentieth century Christian minister? It is presumed that ministers of the Gospel preach a future life, and yet, according to this reverend gentleman, if what they have been preaching for nearly two thousand years should turn out to be true,—should become demonstrated to be a fact, a scientific and theological truth instead of a mere "hope" or "faith" or "dream" or "supposition," that knowledge would 'cheapen and degrade the nobler side of life." Here then is an instance wherein it is not desirable to 'add knowledge to faith." If this is a sample of orthodox logic on this subject, there is not much wonder that materialism and agnosticism are making such inroads in the church.

Personally, I would like to see the church take an interest in the scientific investigation of the evidences extant and accumulating of a future life. I believe it IS taking an interest in it but is keeping that interest concealed for some reason or other, probably that suggested by the Rev. Dr. Mackay. Here and there are preachers giving expression to personal experiences which would be of great value to societies of psychical research, experiences similar in character to that reported by Bishop Bowman, of the M. E. church, to an assembly of preachers (preachers only, remember), or to that of the late Senator Carl Schurz as related only incidentally, in McClure's magazine for April of this year. The late Bishop Newman, of the M. E. church, was also possessed of experience of great value to psychical research societies, but who related them only to his brehren in the ministry.

I believe the tendency of the church is toward a wider faith and a more positive knowledge than it has ever had. It is surely growing more liberal and tolerant as the reference we have made to the Rev. E. W. Allen clearly proves. If the church in general would recognize this fact and fit itself to the new condition of affairs, it could easily become the leader of the scientists in their explorations along the line of psychic research and fill up its pews with interested, eager listeners. But if the church persists in emphasizing the formulas of other days and continues to ignore all sources of information except those to which it has been accustomed, the people will go on without it and find leaders among themselves.

At no time in the world's history has there been so much interest in the subject of man's immortality as now, as is proven by the tenor of the general literature of the day as printed in book, newspaper and magazine. Nor has there been so much legitimate curiosity as to the conditions which will prevail in that other life to which we are all hastening.

An alumnus of Harvard University, a graduate of the class of 1805, George G. Ingersoll, bequeathed to that institution the sum of five thousand dollars for the purpose of establishing in it a lectureship on the single subject of "IMMORTALITY,"—one lecture to be delivered each year, on any day between the first of June and the first of December.

It seems, however, that none but those inclined to materialism and agnosticism are given an opportunity to deliver this lecture. We would naturally suppose that the authorities at Harvard would select those to deliver this lecture who had had some experience in this line of investigation, but not a single psychic researcher has thus far been invited to deliver it. It looks as if Harvard did not want immortality proven, probably having assumed the position of Rev. Dr. Mackay on the subject.

The lecture of 1904 was delivered by an eminent member of our own profession, Prof. William Osler, M.D., F.R.S., who had on a previous occasion declined an invitation to deliver it, probably because as he remarked in the opening of his lecture: "No problem has so stretched to aching the pia mater of the thoughtful man as that put in such simple words by Job: 'If a man die, shall he live again?'"

Dr. Osler fails to give us his own personal opinion on the subject, confessing that in the presence of so many mysteries the scientific student cannot be dogmatic and deny the possibility of a future state, and, however distressing a negative attitude of mind he asks to be left reserving his judgment, but still inquiring. Recognizing the value of the belief to the community, he with the vast majority of our profession will doubt the possibility of proving it to the individual.

Now, a few years ago, or prior to the organization of the Psychical Research Societies of Europe and America, Dr. Osler with the great majority of his profession maintained a more positive negative position on this question, and denied even the possibility of a future life. But since scientists of world-wide repute have personally experienced evidences capable of no other interpretation than that of the continuity of the mind of man after its separation from the physical body by death, he now confesses that in the presence of so many mysteries the scientific student cannot be sure that death does end all. This certainly is a rift in the clouds of materialism. The fact that Dr. Osler finally consented to deliver the lecture is of itself significant. He begins to think that after all there's "something doing" in the domain of the occult.

As was to be expected from a physician lecturing on the subject of immortality, Dr. Osler makes use of the well-known negative argument as follows: "The association of life in all its phases with organization; the association of a gradation of intelligence with increasing complexity of organization; the failure of the development of intelligence with an arrest in cerebral growth in the child; the slow decay of mind with changes in the brain; the absolute dependence of the higher mental attributes upon definite structures; the instantaneous loss of consciousness when the blood supply is cut off from the higher centres—these facts give pause to the scientific student when he tries to think of intelligence apart from organization."

Now, we freely grant that this is a most formidable argument against the probability or possibility of the continuity of personal identity after the death of the body, and one which very naturally and forcefully appeals to the physician whose work lies on the confines of the shadowland, but in the presence of the personal experiences of and evidences which have come to such men as Crookes, Wallace, Flammarion, Lombroso, Virchow, Wundt, Zollner, Fechner, Hodgson, James, Hyslop, Savage, Lodge, Coues, Gibier, Edmunds, Watson, Lincoln and thousands of others who formerly felt the force of and advanced the very same argument, we discover facts which likewise give pause to the scientific student and suggest that after all intelligence MAY exist apart from organization, and that possibly there are yet some things not dreamed of in his philosophy.

That Dr. Osler indulges the idea that the future may yet develop something along the line of psychic research which will prove a future existence, can be logically interpreted in my opinion from one of his closing sentences:

"Some of you will wander through all phases, to come at last, I trust, to the opinion of Cicero, who had rather be mistaken with Plato than be in the right with those who deny altogether the life after death; and this is my own confessio fidei."

It certainly behooves the church to join its forces with those of the scientists of the psychical research societies engaged in the great work of proving to a scientific demonstration the continuity of life after death, thus adding to the faith of ancient Paul, the knowledge of his modern scientific disciples.

It is evident from a study of the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, that the great Apostle Paul was possessed of the true spirit of scientific investigation and if he were living to-day would no doubt be a charter member of the psychical research societies of England and America and would write an "Epistle" to the church in America urging it to participate in the efforts of that society to demonstrate scientifically a future life. It is extremely doubtful that he would endorse the position of the Rev. Dr. Mackay that "a knowledge of a future life would cheapen and degrade the nobler side of life."

The great Apostle Paul was a student and inclined to scientific argument and metaphor or simile, but with both his argument and illustration he failed to establish the fact of a future life satisfactorily to the scientific mind of the present day. He comes nearer to it, however, than any other man whose writings are recorded in the Bible, and his argument is therefore utilized upon almost every funeral occasion. His illustration as embodied in the thirty-sixth verse of the chapter referred to: "Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die," is a most beautiful, intelligent and suggestive one, but is not literally true as all know. Life is not absolutely extinct in the seed sown; if it was there would be no reproduction. Its material bulk rots, decomposes, dies, but the germ, the spirit that quickens into renewed life and reproduction does not die, any more than the life principle of the caterpillar dies to give life to the butterfly into which it is transformed. But the Apostle Paul is entitled to great credit for his grand effort by scientific argument and simile or illustration to answer Job's question in the affirmative.

For many years the familiar illustration of Paley in proof of a Creator or universal designer, that of the watch, suggesting its maker or designer, has ranked in importance equal to that of Saint Paul's of a future life. While the modern theory of evolution has shorn Paley's illustration of a good deal of its force, yet in my humble opinion it still holds good. Evolution does not do away with the original creation of that from which all things have evolved. It does not do away with the great original designer and Creator, however severely it weakens the Mosaic account of the creation.

* * * * * * * * *

Now, what would be the effect upon the moral and physical condition of the human race of a KNOWLEDGE of a future life—of an assurance as positive as that to-morrow's sun shall rise or that day follows night? This is a question for the physician and the preacher. We know what effect two thousand years of faith and hope in it HAS had, a faith hardly strong enough to remove mountains, but who can estimate the effect an absolute knowledge thereof would have on the human race? Rev. Dr. Mackay's prophecy of what the effect would be strikes me as being somewhat narrow and contracted. Nor is he very consistent in his treatment of the subject. He says: "Faith in immortality must rest rather in the affections than in the intellect," and yet at the close of his article he is pleased to recognize intellect in the premises in the following sentence:

"In these ways, science (intellect) and religion seem to be coming together in recognition of the most glorious and inspiring truth that human thought can grasp, the immortality of the human individual soul."

Now, that is exactly the point I am trying to make in this paper. My object is to get religion and science together. In the beginning of his article, however, Rev. Dr. Mackay is keeping them apart, while in his close of it he seems to be glad that they are getting together in establishing the fact of a future existence. He congratulates religion because of the present tendency of science to prove a future life, and yet starts out in his article with the assertion that "The hope of immortality will never be more than a hope, and faith in it must rest rather in the region of the affections than in that of the intellect, and that a knowledge of a future life would not only cheapen but degrade the nobler side of life." His closing sentence seems to me to be in direct contradiction to his opening declaration.

Professor James H. Hyslop, in replying to Rev. Dr. Mackay's article, in the American Psychical Research Journal, very significantly remarks as follows:

"The age of science or intellect has gone for the church on its own admission. But this was not its position in the inceptive stages of its history. The New Testament, which is supposed by the religious mind to be authority and history, appeals to FACTS, present facts of human experience in proof of a future life, and does not base its conclusion either on 'faith' or philosophic assumptions. The "miracles" and the "resurrection" were alleged facts and they were appealed to as conflicting with the conclusion of speculative materialism at that time. Many phenomena which to-day come under the scrutiny and investigation of the Society for Psychical Research are alluded to in the New Testament record and made the basis of a belief in immortality. The appeal in this was to the intellect, not to the emotions."

Professor Hyslop further asserts that "Psychic research is the method of the New Testament which is not that of Rev. Dr. Mackay. It was in appeal to alleged and perhaps in some sense real facts, and not to 'faith' as assent to propositions. If religion is to have any intelligent basis at all it must come to this method. Hence, so far from attacking the religious mind the method here proposed is one that reconciles it with science as no other does. I understand the distrust which has infected religious minds of anything scientific. Physical science has so long antagonized, and successfully antagonized, religious beliefs, that it is not easy to conceive it as a friend of its fundamental postulates. But this traditional prejudice must be overcome and the sooner that the religious mind overcomes it and accepts scientific method as its best friend the better for the intellectual and ethical, to say nothing of the political status and influence, of religion as a respectable force in the community. Unless it does this it must go the way of Paganism, which could not sustain its usefulness after it fell to the rank of incredible things. The vitality of all beliefs is dependent wholly upon the measure of intelligent support that they can secure, and a doctrine so useful in the ethical and social system as the survival of personality ought not to be allowed to lapse in assurance for the lack of an intelligent appreciation and application of the method which can give it strength and recognition."

While all the mysteries of the universe are not solved, yet from what we DO know, the thinking mind can logically reason from "Nature up to Nature's God"—from the finite mind with its almost unlimited capacity, to the Infinite mind of the universe.

With what pleasure do we turn, then, from the gloom of annihilation, materialism and agnosticism to the cheering faith of the church, weak and unsatisfactory as that faith is, and the knowledge which promises to be added to it of a future life, as afforded by psychical investigations now going on.

The demonstrations of these psychical societies in addition to the demonstrations which long preceded them among investigators unorganized as societies have already proven that we are born for a higher destiny than that of earth; that there is a world in the unseen future where the soul shall live forever. These demonstrations teach us that all nature proclaims the overwhelming presence of an Infinite mind, the control of an Infinite power, and the existence of an Infinite God. The American Psychical Research Society is deserving of and should receive the hearty support and encouragement of the American pulpit.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

The Progressive Thinker will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1.00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Post Office Money Order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE.

At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

If you do not receive your paper promptly, write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1908.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Destroying the Comfort of Millions.

"Why should we seek to destroy the comfort that millions of tired and perplexed souls to-day find in what they understand to be the promises of God?"

Such was the honest inquiry of our Marblehead correspondent of several weeks ago, to which we replied in our issue of May 30; but the subject will not down at our bidding.

The words credited to Jesus, John 5:30, "Search the Scriptures; for in them YE THINK YE HAVE ETERNAL LIFE," crowded themselves on our attention until we opened to Deuteronomy 22:10-16 inclusive, and read:

"When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it. And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein, shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee [that is, shall be their slaves]. And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it. And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thy hands THOU SHALT SMITE EVERY MALE THEREOF WITH THE EDGE OF THE SWORD: But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD THY GOD HATH GIVEN THEE.

"Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. But of the cities of these people which the LORD THY GOD DOTH GIVE THEE for an inheritance, THOU SHALT SAVE ALIVE NOTHING THAT BREATHETH."

It would be very wrong to "destroy the comfort that millions of tired and perplexed souls who derive from these blessed words of the Lord our God" who delighted to slaughter, and feast on the products of other's toil.

Several readings, to impress every feature of these inspired words on the mind, should be made. And note, good reader, that holy book, inerrant in every feature, translated into near three hundred different languages, and scattered broadcast among all peoples for their guidance, contains not only the blessed words quoted, but scores of similar passages follow, each concluding:

"So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly DESTROYED ALL THAT BREATHED, as the LORD GOD OF ISRAEL COMMANDED."

No, no, such valuable words of "comfort" should not be withheld from the Christian world. And the book containing such noble sentiments should have a place as a text-book in our public schools, and a copy should be placed in the hands of every little heathen and dirty little infidel as well, showing the loving character of the "Lord our God."

Let us see! Was it not this God, so generous to his friends, so cruel to the invaded cities, the inhabitants of which for declining to submit, and become the slaves of the aggressors, did he not repent that he had made man, and was he not grieved to his heart on account of his defective job, and was it not he who overwhelmed all in a common ruin, saving only a favored few to people the world again? It must have been a real "comfort" to those people to be thus destroyed, as there is a pleasure in directing attention to the affair.

Paul caught the spirit of these events, when he declared: "Great is the mystery of Godliness," and we are a convert to the theory.

Parallel Cases.

A short article in these columns, in our issue of June 27, and appearing at the head of the fourth column, first page of that date, copied from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, has special value to physiologists and Spiritualists. We invite particular attention to it, in connection with facts of a similar character with greater detail, which attracted the writer's attention more than three-fourths of a century ago, as related in a missionary magazine of 1797, and is briefly referred to in the "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," article "Tennent, Wan:"

Tennent was born in Ireland in 1705, and came to America when fourteen. He studied for the ministry with his brother, at New Brunswick, N. J. Close application to studies impaired his health, terminating in his apparent death. Preparations were made for his burial, but a young physician, a friend of his, detected indications of life. The funeral was deferred to the next day, and then, no animation, save a little tremor in the arm pit, when time was begged by the doctor by the hour. At the last moment, when appeals for further delay of burial was denied, the supposed decedent opened his eyes. He made a slow recovery; but his entire educational knowledge had departed. He was a child again, and did not know the alphabet.

While in his trance condition Tennent found himself in heaven, where he beheld a glory and heard songs which were indescribable. He was about to join the vast throng, when he was told: "You must return to earth." He groaned and opened his eyes. "For three years," says the narration, "the delightful sounds he heard were not out of his ears, and earthly things were to him as vanity."

Tennent, on recovering his health, resumed his studies, and made rapid advances. Again he was prostrated by illness; again he passed into a cataleptic condition, simulating death. Finally, aroused to consciousness, all he had learned since his former recovery was lost, and his earlier and forgotten education was restored to him. The friends of his earlier years were repulsive to Tennent after his first trance, but these came back to him with increased ardor with the revival of his earlier learning.

Like Mrs. Carton, Tennent said he knew everything that was going on around him, but he was without power to speak or move.

For thirty years this writer has clipped from the public presss, and has carefully filed, with dates, parallel cases to these, enough of themselves to make a large volume. He has also built up a theory on the accumulated facts, in which he accounts for insanity, and also for lucid intervals. He believes the difference between the sane and the insane is a matter of which the several lobes of the brain act their part. Anatomists tell us there are five lobes of the cerebrum, to wit: The frontal, the parietal, the tempero-sphenoidal, and the central lobes. These do not all seem to be active at the same time. Suspension of action of a lobe heretofore active produces forgetfulness of whatever transpired while it was dominant, and its restored action revives the past again; but obliterates whatever transpired while it was at rest.

The wandering traveler who has lost his personal identity, ignorant of his own name, is a case in point. An untutored lobe aroused into activity, void of memory, is met with in the insane. Restore the old lobe to action and we have a healthy, vigorous brain.

Will the doctors kindly consider these facts. There is more to it than may be suspicioned at first thought.

Conspicuous Inexactness.

The greatest sin of all the ages, and the one sure to be punished with endless damnation, an orthodox Christian telling the story, is the denial of the Godhead of Jesus; whilst belief in him atones for every crime, and is a sure passport to glory. The thief on the cross, without one worthy action, declared his belief, and was assured: "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." But this was a case of conspicuous inexactness. Acts 1:3 says Jesus "showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days." And Acts 1:9 says: "He was taken up; and a cloud received him out of sight."

If we are to build our faith on "inerrant revelation," there ought to be more harmony in its statements. "This day in paradise," then an interval of forty days before going up to that paradise where the thief awaited his coming, doesn't harmonize worth a cent.

The Slaughter of Dogs.

A war of extermination against all unmuzzled dogs is being waged in Chicago. And, really, it is none too soon. Better had the work commenced before a dozen humans, including several children, were bitten by rabid animals.

Strange how some people seem to delight in declaiming "there is no such thing as a rabid dog," hydrophobia being with them only the exaggerated imagination of superstitious ignorance—a borrowed lie from Mrs. Eddy.

I would rather be a poor man in a garret with plenty of books than a king who did not love reading.—Macaulay.

A Deserved Chastisement.

The Progressive Thinker, on several occasions has called attention to the vulgarity of that eminently vulgar pulpit orator and revivalist, Rev. Billy Sunday, an ex-baseball player, whose later mission it is to lower the standing of pulpit oratory to fit the slums of the large cities. It has seemed astonishing that churchmen with good morals could encourage such coarse and ribald methods to advance what they esteem the truth. It remained for the editor of the Christian Herald of New York, now under the management of the Rev. Dr. Klopsch, a well known Christian philanthropist and scholar, to administer a rebuke which may lead to a reform. Said the Doctor in a late leading editorial:

"Evangelist William Sunday delivered an address to the Presbyterian ministry at Pittsburg the other day which, if correctly reported, stamped the speaker as a man who has missed his vocation. The stream of vulgar abuse which flowed from his lips might have passed for wit on the ball field, the circus, or the variety stage, but it was altogether out of place in the pulpit, especially so on the occasion in question. Certainly the man who could apply to the average preacher such choice terms as "fudge-eating mollycoddle," "stiff," "salary-quack," "grafter" and "candidate for the funny house," is not one to command or deserve the respect of any American audience of average intelligence. His proper place is as interlocutor in a minstrel show.

"People may bear with Mr. Sunday's eccentricities in language, and even with his crazy, chair smashing theatrical antics; but when he undertakes to revile men who are a thousand fold abler, more respected and incomparably better qualified by nature, training and experience for their work than he can ever hope to be, he simply exposes himself to ridicule. His amazing suggestion to tear down the seminaries as useless and to 'stand the professors on their heads in mud puddles,' was his wildest recorded flight of oratory, and shows to what extent it is possible for a man to unmask his real character when he 'cuts loose,' as Mr. Sunday did. It would be a charitable construction to say that his language was that of a man who had lost his mental equilibrium.

"We regret to say that the Christian spirit was conspicuous by its absence throughout the address. Such an incident discredits evangelism and does more harm to the work than Mr. Sunday can ever repair."

Catholicism is Doomed.

The Catholic Archbishop of Milwaukee, Rev. Sebastian G. Messmer, as given in the Associated press dispatches, discoursing awhile ago on the disestablishment of the Catholic church in Italy within a few years, said:

"I would not be at all surprised to see a disestablishment of the church in Italy within a few years. From late indications, I believe the government is intent upon the same action that has taken place in France. The government for years has been the enemy of the church. Catholics in Italy, by papal decree, are barred from voting on national questions, and there is no one in the government favorable to the church. It is true a large portion of the people of Italy seem to be drifting away from the church, many of them into infidelity. This is due to two causes: First, to the fact that in the universities and other high class institutions, free thinkers are apportioned to professorships and the work of the so-called German philosophers, which tend to infidelity or at least to a denial of Christianity, are translated into Italian and taught in their institutions. Thus infidelity is being sown broadcast among the upper classes.

"The second reason for the religious indifference—and here I am speaking only of Southern Europe—is the neglect of the clergy to give the people proper relief in legislation. The people are ignorant of the principles of their religion. They don't understand it; they have gone to church from habit and not from principle, and consequently they have drifted away since the anti-religious sentiment has gone abroad in the land."

Whistling to Keep Up Courage.

The Catholic Archbishop of Paris, Monseigneur Amette, is reported to have declared in a public address that "The first year of separation of church and state has proved the first year of liberty." He says:

"The Catholics of Paris can now build as many churches as they choose without consulting any one excepting their diocesian. I feel we ought to be congratulated on the present condition of the church of Paris."

It is a probable fact that the efforts of the church party in the United States to get God into the Federal constitution, to get him acknowledged on our national coin, and in every way as far as possible to reunite church and state, have contributed largely toward producing the bad odor which surrounds all the American churches.

Prisons for Churchmen.

There were committed to the prisons of Canada during the year 1891, 11,810 persons for high crimes. Of these, 4,359 were Roman Catholics; 3,631 were Episcopalians; 1,624 were Methodists; 1,498 were Presbyterians, and of all other denominations there were 698; but not one Spiritualist; not one Infidel; not one Atheist.

Two decisions from the bench on scriptural subjects are reported. A Kansas City Judge rules that our first parents in the Garden of Eden contracted a common-law marriage, and Justice Gaynor decides in effect that "the Sabbath was made for man."—New York World.

There is in spring a sort of mental unrest, parallel with the impulse at work in nature. I always think there is something in me which I have not yet discovered. It leaves me to rest. Is it a thought? Is it a feeling? Is it a word? A deed? I know not. But I feel as if I wanted to give vent to something.—Auerbach.

COMMERCIAL MEDIUMSHIP.

A Ringing Letter From Harrison D. Barrett, Containing Information With Which Every Spiritualist Should Be Familiar.

To the Editor:—Once more I crave your indulgence for the purpose of responding through your columns to numerous inquiries submitted to me at different times relative to the above-named subject. I stated my position frankly in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker. I have nothing to retract from what I then said. Indeed, it is to emphasize my views that I seek further space at this time.

It does not seem wrong or "immoral" to me, for a medium to charge for his or her private sittings. It does not seem immoral to me for a medium to give incidental advice upon business or material affairs, PROVIDED SUCH ADVICE IS NOT THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE INVOLVED IN THE SITTING. The cases cited by my good friend Mrs. Longley illustrate my meaning in a very pronounced manner. Let my opponents take note of the fact that Mrs. Longley uses the word "incidentally" in respect to the two or three readings she cites. Such "Commercial" phases as she cited bore directly upon the spiritual needs of the sitter. Anything that adds comfort, consolation, instruction, soul-culture, etc., to the questioning sitter appeals to me as being SPIRITUAL.

The kind of "commercialism" to which I take exception is that of graft, and all of the evils associated with it. A "medium(?)" here in Portland took $25.00 from a hard-working, heart-broken Swede to bring him "good luck," and—never saw his victim afterwards.. Another "medium (?)" here took twenty dollars from a sick man, from whose spine the villainous grafter was to "pull an evil Catholic spirit," and, during the "pulling" robbed his victim of eighty dollars more! That kind of "business mediumship" I detest and abhor! The kind that locates gas wells, finds "hidden treasure," determines the position of rich mines of any sort, restores love, finds lost lovers, husbands, etc., I also consider FALSE AS HELL, and as great an abomination unto the God of Truth as is the terrible crime of murder!

I repeat my words: "I consider every man or woman who advertises as a "Business Medium" open to suspicion!" Take the "medium (?)' who advised (?) Cashier Bartnett and President J. Dalzell Brown of the looted bank of Oakland, California, for an example. Does HER work appeal to lofty-souled Spiritualists as being "STRICTLY MORAL, PURELY SPIRITUAL, and individually uplifting?" Take the "medium (?)' who misled Millionaire Lane and caused his financial downfall. Can any moralist argue that her work was inspired of God or by the clean-souled angels? Take the "mediums (?)", who receive pay to inveigle innocent young girls into dens of infamy, or into houses of ill-fame. Can anyone be so presumptuous as to assert that such commercialism is ever excusable or defensible?

Take those "mediums (?)" who hold from one to four or six shows per day, calling them "Materialization." Does any intelligent man or woman presume to affirm that there is an atom of honesty or of spirituality in such performances? Take those "mediums(?)" who hold six or eight "trumpet-shows" per day, at fifty cents admission for each person, there to witness, or be regaled by cheap vaudeville performances, risque jokes and almost obscene utterances ostensibly from the "spirit-world." Does anyone dare claim that there is a particle of spirituality or comfort in such wickedness? Take those "mediums(?)" who advertise "Business Sittings a Specialty," "Mining and Ores Their Specialty." Is there one person of ordinary intelligence brazen enough to stand up and declare that there is anything "comforting," "consoling," "spiritual," or "uplifting" in such pretensions? A certain "medium (?)" (and a few of her special friends) once claimed that she was the "private medium" for His Royal Highness, Mark A. Hanna, and His Excellency, Thomas C. Platt, and that it was the advice given through her organism that led to the selection of Roosevelt for McKinley's running mate in 1900! I am aware that there are those who would consider her an "archangel from glory" for so doing, but—I am NOT of that crowd, thank God! I prefer a man with a tender heart and a loving soul to one of iron and bloodshed for Chief-Magistrate of this Nation.

In face of all the foregoing examples, I yet dare affirm my faith in many mediums, and have the temerity to declare my belief in the doctrine of paying all honest mediums for their services. As my able brother, Rev. G. C. Love, well puts it, "Why should a lecturer be paid for his work, while a medium is asked to serve gratis?" To my mind, the honest workers, both lecturers and mediums, should be paid for their labor. In saying this, let it be understood that I am far from approving the methods now in vogue among our people. I do NOT believe in anarchistic methods in anything, especially in regard to spiritual work. The present itinerant system for our speakers and independent private sittings by our mediums are both decidedly wrong from my point of view.

A speaker and a medium should both be employed for at least one year, at one and the same time, by a local society. The medium should be accorded a place of equal honor and merit with the speaker, when his or her work is honest and reliable, and vice versa. THERE ARE TRICKY AND COUNTERFEIT SPEAKERS, AS WELL AS TRICKY AND COUNTERFEIT MEDIUMS! I do not feel that it is best to have the phenomena, the philosophy and religion of Spiritualism presented to the public at the same service. Special public meetings should be held by the Society for these divisions of our work, so long as there is REAL NEED OF PUBLIC PHENOMENA! To me, the home circle, the laboratory of the scientist, and spiritual communion service, are the only places where our phenomena should ever be given. I speak only as an individual, but my words are not idly chosen. I speak from conviction, feeling that Spiritualism would be greatly benefited by such a course.

I do not believe in the present method of giving sittings indiscriminately to "Tom, Dick and Harry," or to anyone who may apply for the privilege. Every medium should be employed by a legally corporated religious Spiritualist Society, upon a living salary. Every private sitting should be planned for by the officers of the society. Every dollar paid for such sitting should accrue to the treasury of the society, and not to the individual profit of the medium. I do not believe that more than six private readings should be given by any medium thus employed in any one day. The money received from this work would all come back to the medium in the form of a salary, upon which she could live without worry as to the source of her material supplies. The case of Mrs. Piper demonstrates the fact that this plan works well when honestly tried. I believe that it is the method employed by the Spiritualist societies in New Zealand, where it is also eminently successful.

I see no need of forsaking the good old name "SPIRITUALISM." It is plenty good enough for me, for it is broad enough to take in all forms of thought or study: Spiritualism is phenomena; it is science; it is philosophy; it is religion. Being all of these eminently respectable things, it must, of necessity, be likewise "eminently respectable!" There is no need of a change of name! As for the N. S. A. adopting a code of rules for the protection of mediums, let me say that it was done several years ago, and that those rules were amended and reaffirmed at the National Convention in 1907. Those rules (Usages) provide that all psychics and mediums for the production of physical and mental phenomena, or who depend upon private sittings for their income, shall be the "Associate Ministers of Spiritualism."

Those Usages define their duties, and wisely provide that they must all be members of some local society for a period of one year before they are eligible to appointments as Associate Ministers. Such ones are not entitled to use the term "Reverend," nor can they perform marriage ceremonies, both of which provisions I deem wise, just and proper.

I wrote the original draft of the provision of this division of "Associate Ministers" myself in the year 1903. It has been wisely improved and placed in perfect legal form by our honored Vice-President of the N. S. A., Hon. Charles R. Schirm. Wherever I have exhibited this special provision of our Usages to legal authorities, the universal reply has been, "All that your people now have to do is to use your own rules and Usages!" The trouble is this: Many speakers and mediums have a supreme contempt for rules and Usages of all kinds, and take special delight in defying the law! Let our representatives make proper use of our organic machinery, and there will be no further trouble for any honest worker. The individualistic tendencies of the majority of mediums, whose "guides(?)" refuse to permit them to join any Spiritualist society, are largely responsible for the positions in which mediums stand to-day before the law. Let them become members of duly incorporated societies, take our papers as Associate Ministers, and they will be as amply protected under the law as are the clergymen of any church organization.

The Unitarian Schism, and the split in the Quaker denomination, led to a test case being taken to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the rights of the "Regulars" and of the "Seceders." About the year 1837, the Supreme Court handed down an opinion to the effect that whatever the National or Supreme body of any sect decided as to points of doctrine, church polity, Usages, etc., constituted the supreme law for that denomination. Our N. S. A. is the Supreme body for the Spiritualists of the United States. It has adopted certain Usages, ceremonials, etc., regulating the work of our people. Ordination is very properly provided for in those Usages; the appointment of Lay Ministers, or licentiate speakers, is also authorized; our mediums, both for physical and mental phenomena, are protected by being accorded appointments, when they have lived up to the rules of their local societies, as "Associate Ministers." Under the ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court, all mediums who avail themselves of this provision will have ample protection, so long as they do honest work! What more do they want?

It is passing strange that many mediums should be the open enemies of the N. S. A., when it is the only body that can afford them full protection—the only body that has ever offered them means by which they could stand upon equal footing with the representatives of other faiths. The fact is, many, very many mediums have refrained from joining local societies from purely selfish motives. So long as they could make money without any interference on the part of the law, they would stay outside, and complacently pocket their gains. Whenever they got into trouble, they did not hesitate to run to local, State and National Organizations for aid. Reciprocity is the highest law in life. Let the mediums remember this salient truth, and they will get along much better than they now do in all departments of their work.

In closing, permit me to say a few words to the "chronic kickers" against the N. S. A. A few days ago a wealthy Spiritualist informed me that he never heard of one good thing the N. S. A. had ever done! He was knowing to the fact that the N. S. A. he was condemning, was pensioning ten or twelve worthy people every month, and has been carrying all the way from ten to twenty such on its roll of honor for the past six years. Why is not this action on its part a good deed? In what way is the work of caring for the needy reprehensible? Why is it "EVIL" to provide for the protection of honest mediums? Why is it wrong to do needed charitable work? Why is the endowment of the organization (the N. S. A.) that does all of these good deeds, such a crime in the eyes of the "Individualists" who pose as Spiritualists? Is not their opposition to and denunciation of the N. S. A. based upon pure, unadulterated selfishness, rather than upon what they assume to be, spirituality? Is it not "up" to the opponents of organization to the enemies of the N. S. A., to the advocates of individual selfishness, to show us a better way, more intelligent methods for the conduct of our work, and means by which the evils attached to bald commercialism in mediumship can be avoided? Yours for Spiritualism,

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

"If" The Progressive Thinker Should Suspend

The Progressive Thinker is by far the largest Spiritualist paper published on earth to-day. It contains eight pages, seven columns to the page, and is furnished for ONE DOLLAR per year; and if it should suspend NOW (it will not of course) no other paper of its size could possibly be started to fill its place, and be sustained at one dollar. It is THE ONE Spiritualist paper that has lived and prospered for about twenty years. If wiped out of existence to-day, as said before, no DOLLAR PAPER, like it could possibly BE PUBLISHED with any degree of success. To do so would be utterly impossible with the present price of print paper.

The Progressive Thinker stands forth in a unique position. It is the ONE PAPER of the whole world that has persistently presented the DARK SIDE of Spirit Return along with its ANGELIC, SOUL-ELEVATING SIDE, and in so doing has been educational all along the line. Standing in this unique position, if it should cease to exist this moment, it would be impossible for the N. S. A., State Associations, camp meetings, speakers and societies generally to reach the public as they do to-day. Such being the case it is the duty of every Spiritualist who has the best interest of the Cause at heart to sustain The Progressive Thinker and extend its circulation.

A MODERN SERMON.

It is Far More Valuable Than Gold or Diamonds, as It Teaches an Important Lesson on "Habit and Life."

We spend a good deal of time [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] denouncing bad habits and warning the youth against them while somehow, we have lost sight of the fact that there is just as much help in a good habit as there is hindrance and harm in a bad one. Habits may be allies just as truly as we find them to be enemies.

There are those who are habitually vicious, why should there not be those who are habitually virtuous? It is as easy to learn to do right and to have the doing of right become second nature as it is to learn to do wrong. It is just as easy both morally and physically to acquire the habit of walking upright as to acquire that of walking with a slouch.

Once we were taught that we were all naturally altogether depraved, that man was born in this world with a bent to evil, that the clean life and the upward tending life really were abnormal. Whoever first invented that doctrine must have had a terrible lot of iniquity which he was trying to account for with a theory.

Every man's chance of holiness is at least as good as his chance of health. Make up your mind that you were born to be sickly, the victim of predatory disease, and you never will be disappointed; you will have all the aches and pains that the most ambitious drug store almanac could covet to catalogue.

Make up your mind that Providence has cast you into the universe doomed to depravity, branded as a fallen being, a lost, undone, miserable sinner, and you have at least handicapped yourself by the adoption of such a view in any attempts to defeat Providence and to be better than you were destined to be.

Health of any kind is a matter of habit. But we never will acquire right habits unless we have faith in man as a being to whom goodness is no less attainable than baseness. You never will be any better than you believe you may be.

There are two ways of doing things, the intermittent and the habitual, the difficult and the easy. If you were to speak only once a year the act would involve as much difficulty as some people have, for example, in thinking. The rarity of the exercise determines its difficulty.

If the life of goodness and truth means to you the doing, with special, separate effort, of a long series of separate acts, then it certainly is a path of great toil that opens before you. May it not rather mean the steady doing of the right in all things until the determination and the doing of the right seem to require no special consideration and volition in each case?

Habits are life tracks; they lead either up or down. Habit is character in action working without conscious reflection. The laws of habit apply to to good as well as to the evil, to the higher life as well as to the lower. If it is possible habitually to breathe correctly, eat correctly, why should it not also be possible habitually to choose the right and do the best?

If we had to stop and measure every breath, count every vowel, reason over every step, one day's living would be enough to blight the life. So in the higher sphere of morals, living is a weary business if you still have to individualize and argue out all your actions.

Daily living is the gymnasium of the soul where moral muscles are trained to habits of implicit, apparently mechanical obedience to the impulse of high ideals, right motives, and noble standards. Here power is acquired to meet all temptations, to overcome difficulties, to be master of life itself.

He has a good education who has acquired the best habits of doing and of thinking. He is learning life's great lessons, finding the fullness of an education, to whom each day comes with its opportunities of training the soul, through tasks and troubles, to the habits of the higher life, to self-mastery, and to efficiency in service for our fellows.

HENRY F. COPE.

Is He an Agnostic?

To the Editor: The enclosed beautiful poem is from the pen of J. Edward Morgan, known as the Nebraska poet. Mr. Morgan calls himself an Atheist or Agnostic, yet on the death of his sister, whom he dearly loved, he writes this poem. Is he an Atheist? Does not his true belief reveal itself here when his bereaved soul throws off disguise? This same belief is revealed in all his poems, yet he openly fights the Spiritualists, calling them fakers, etc.

G. E. BROWN.

Denver, Col.

In Memoriam.

To write of one I knew and loved,
Whose spirit set forever free,
From cold confines and pangs of earth,
A joyful task assigned to me.

For it shall be my soul's delight
To point to where this flower did bloom,
Where blushed and gushed its quickening life,
And wafted forth its sweet perfume,

And say to each who loved her true;
As wide love's sweet contagion spread,
Where'er she smiled, whose tears fall fast,
"Oh! peace, be still, she is not dead."

Why flow the burning tears like rain,
As bow ye o'er her lifeless clay?
Why droop ye at the mocking tomb
And turn with breaking hearts away?

Because ye seek the loved and lost
And search the mocking house of death;
Oh! where is now its sacred prize?
Whence flown our darling's hallowed breath?

Oh! Buddie's laugh and song and cheer
That scattered sunshine far and wide;
Not all her harrowing pains could hush,
Not all Death's subtle arts can hide.

Gaze not upon the lifeless form,
'Tis but a baffled prison cell;
With broken panels, bolts and bars
That held her captive for a spell.

Where is she? Smiling from the flowers,
Her breath floats on the balmy air,
And Death's dark, charnel house of gloom
Cannot withstand her presence there.

A burst of sunshine as I write
In swelling billows o'er me roll,
And Buddie's laugh rings sweet and clear,
Awakening my sinking soul.

Pain sore distressed; fond Mercy stooped
In love, and silent turned the key;
And out the joyous spirit flew
To realms of light, forever free!

And Buddie walks with Maggie now,
And all our grief they know and share,
And whisper "cheer, for all your pain,
Behold the healing balm we bear."

They are not dead, nor yonder far,
But with us in the dear old home;
From father's, mother's love and care,
Our spirit loved ones will not roam.

The friends, the haunts they loved on earth,
They find, by guiding spirits led,
And haste to soothe the heart of grief,
And comfort those who mourn them dead.

And Buddie lives with those she loved,
And comforts those she loved on earth.
She is not dead—Death burst the bars
And gave her soul a grander birth.

A sweeter life, a rosier path,
Than e'er her blessed feet had trod;
A far sublimer pilgrimage
Thro' the eternal fields of God.

—Johnnie.

Nature is stronger than cold intellectual philosophy. It is stronger because it is truth; and its soul sentiments are allied to and have their foundation in eternal and immutable Nature.

This beautiful and expressive poem did not spring from Agnostic philosophy—but from Nature's fount in the human heart.

What Nature has written in the hopes and longings, and spiritual love nature of human beings—is true to Nature itself, and so it is that when an Agnostic gives vent to the natural sentiments and feelings Nature has implanted within him, he must and will express the thought of Spiritualism, of immortality and spirit return.

In the time of deep bereavement, the natural hope of the Agnostic, like Robert G. Ingersoll, will "hear the rustle of a wing," of spiritual import and deep, true meaning, conveying in Nature's way, a truth taught in Nature's own text-book, in the constitution of the human being.

We are so vain as to set the highest value upon those things to which nature assigned the lowest place.—Seneca.

Signs of Promise.

A Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue of Hartford, Conn., at Springfield, Mass.

(Reported stenographically by F. H. Beadle for The Progressive Thinker.)

I will read a part of the thirteenth chapter of Acts, beginning at the fourth verse;

"And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

"And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

"Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia.

"After they were come to Mysia, they essayed to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered them not.

"And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas.

"And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

"And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us to preach the gospel unto them.

"Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

"And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia and a colony; and we were in that city abiding certain days.

"And so on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made: and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

"And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshiped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

"And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, if ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

"And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed of a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying;

"The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

"And this she did many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

"And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers.

"And they brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city,

"And teach customs which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

"And the multitude rose up together against them; and the magistrates rent their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

"And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailer to keep them safely;

"Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

"And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God; and the prisoners heard them.

"And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken; and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

"And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

"But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm; for we are all here.

"Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas.

"And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

"And they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

Ending at the thirty-first verse.

I will read a poem by one of your former towns-women (Laura Cummings, now of Hardwick, Vt.), and I hope that the same spirit that quickened her thoughts may come to your hearts, that you may see the light:

My Castles.

Oh! the beautiful castles I've builded,
And they reached from my heart to the sky,
Though noiseless and void of confusion,
And measured by no human eye.

From no chart or design were they builded
Ever known to humanity's art,
But the turrets and domes were unnumbered,
As they rose in the air from my heart.

I have planned in rain and in sunshine,
At morn, and at noon, and at night;
When the daylight was lost in the darkness,
And the clock tolled the hour of midnight.

I have planned till my heart is near breaking
With pain, and unrest, and despair,
And my soul has grown weary with building
These beautiful castles in air.

Sometimes when I thought they were finished,
My heart would rejoice, free from pain,
But the storms would sweep down on my castle,
And in sorrow I'd build it again.

But sometime it will all be completed,
Each alcove, each hall, and each stair;
In the beautiful realm of the spirit,
I will find all my castles in air.

I shall select for my subject this evening, "Watchman, tell us of the night, what the signs of promise are."

The Infinite Spirit that pervades human life as upon this earth has as many watchers as there are thinkers; as many souls unmarking the progress of the ages, as there are men and women observing the laws and striving to obey their behests. There are in this life a variety of conditions incident to human experiences through which the world is moving on and upward to higher and better conditions. There are laws not yet fully revealed, or comprehended, by which all races are rising to a higher appreciation of the purport of life. The time has come when man is no longer living for yesterday and to-day, but he is paving the way for something better, something stronger, something mightier, that has preceded him.

Matthew Arnold very tritely says:

With aching hands and bleeding feet,
We build our lives, lay stone on stone,
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done.
Not till the dawn of light appeared,
Do we observe what we have reared.

No man is living for to-day alone; he is living for the outcome of the prophecy of the present time. He is looking forward to the fulfilling of hope, to the advancement of the ideas he cherishes, for the thought he is demonstrating each day of his life; he is believing and hoping that his hopes or desires may be fulfilled, or the plans that he has cherished may have been consummated in that which shall give to him the higher happiness. The gradations of happiness vary according to the organism through which perception manifests itself. The ignorant man, he who sees nothing beautiful above his present surroundings which encompass him, does not dream of the artist's heaven, or the beauties that are formulating themselves in the minds of those who stand upon the heights; he does not conceive of the wonders of the astronomer who is peering into the mysteries of the heavens; he merely sees the stars that are passing athwart the skies, but does not realize their relations to human life, and is wonder-struck, when he is taught the distance which exists between the planets out in yonder sky and himself is so great, and can hardly conceive of the marvels they are revealing to the eye of the student. The man who is grovelling in sin, who only knows through his ignorance the way to happiness is by the committal of some crime, believing that somewhere there is gratification to be enjoyed, and thus he commits the act which may bring to him great punishment, he does not conceive of a better way, it is the only path to that gratification to which he looks forward.

How are we to remedy the evil in him? Not simply by judging the act, but going to the causes, recognizing the causes from which this act sprung, realize the cause which produces the result, and thus apply the remedy for the source or cause and if this was done, justice would be rendered more directly than at this time, and the world which at this time is applying the sentence for the deed, will strive to supply the remedy direct to the root of the cause, and substitute something better. What will be the result when this shall have been accomplished? Prisons will become houses of instruction, churches will become individual centers from which the light of intelligence will go out into the world. There will be no longer cant or dogma and incompatibility of thought; our public commerce will be based upon justice, the rights of man will be honored, there will be no longer the discord that prevails between man and man, but there will be a higher justice prevailing amongst humanity.

The time is coming, and the signs in the heavens, and the signs of human society, prognosticate a future that shall bring a better condition to human society. The time is not far distant when charity shall mean conduct, when it shall mean love, when it shall mean helpfulness, when it shall not only imply raiment and food, but it shall imply spiritual instruction, spiritual kindness, spiritual charity, the brotherly love which Jesus taught, and of which the world to-day stands in great need.

There is prevailing in the land the mistaken idea that power is concentrated among and upon the few. The poor exists, as Matthew Arnold describes, in the minority of one. The power that rules the world is not always in the majority, but the influence that is percolating human society is in the work and thought of the minority. It belongs to the people everywhere, and whatever their acts may be, their influence is going out, and they are breathing into human life that which shall elevate and uplift and purify the world. Salvation from sin, salvation from disease, salvation from ignorance (which is sin), salvation from the wrongs that prevail in the human life here upon this earth must be brought through the general, the universal exercise of the power we may exert over one another. Intelligence is the Savior of mankind, knowledge is the Redeemer from sin. It is that which brings the world into closer relationship. It is that which binds nations together. It is that which redeems the laws of the land. It is that which gives each one individual opinions. It is that which inspires men and women to nobler living. It is that which leads you to place your offerings upon the altars of human life, and not to put away from you the kindly acts by which the world shall be benefited.

Once the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon declared, "I would save the world if I could, I would redeem all sinners from their sin, but the power of God is not great enough in me alone. I must join my forces with those who will labor with me in their behalf." Neither Spurgeon, nor all the religious teachers of the world can redeem humanity until they have taught mankind a better method of living, emancipated them from dogmatic faith, and freed them from the prejudices and fetters of bigotry and superstition. We must emancipate the intellectual and spiritual slaves before we can expect a free people, to think and act freely, independently, and wisely. All the religions of the world, so long as they are enclosed in the four walls of creed should be entirely emancipated from such thralldom, and be given an opportunity, each and all, to use them to brighten and beautify.

Religion has too long been the gem that has been in darkness and has not been polished and refined by use; it has been encompassed by the dogmatic faith of the ages; it has been sheltered by the influence of creed, it has been confined within circumscribed limits, and its influence has not been as wide-spread in the conduct of life as it should have been.

Emerson declares that it is the conduct of man that marks the condition of races, it is the conduct of man that outlines the intelligence of humanity. It is the conduct of man that tells how much godliness prevails amongst men, and how much goodness abides within them.

The signs that outline the future are many. Men are coming into the recognition of truth so thoroughly that they are requiring evidences by which they can demonstrate the laws, that they can prove beyond all question the principles before them by which they may probe to their depths every law that is given to rule; that by which they may question and receive direct answers to all the importunities that they may put forth concerning the principles of laws of their being. Everywhere justice is becoming more universal. A larger love is prevailing between nations and between societies, between the people everywhere. There is a recognition of the rights of man that is becoming established more and more in your midst everywhere. There is coming into use a larger thought, by which man is coming to know the reasons why he should think for himself, and judge for himself, intellectual food that should nourish him most, that should build up for him the better conditions into which he might enter, and he is coming into a recognition of the divine law that inheres his own being.

What has accomplished this? Simply the great needs of the world, that have been clamoring year after year, and age after age for a sign, and the sign comes to the seeker, it comes to the earnest investigator, and who will see and hear and know for himself the truth that is best adapted to him. My eye cannot see the wonderful light of Jupiter that you may appreciate its beauty for you. My eye cannot recognize the marvelous rays that are emanating from the distant planets for you; they may thrill me through and through, they may manipulate my brain it may be until every nerve and fiber of my being may respond to their beauty, but all this is nothing to you, until you are able to see for yourself the beauty that inheres those conditions. So it is with thought. I may receive a message from some source that may contribute to my happiness, that may mark my course very clearly before me; but it is of no value to you, until you can see, until you can hear, until you can feel for yourself that same potency that shall uplift your spirit. Truth appeals to all men. It varies in its manifestation as much as your desires vary. In science, no two scientists peer into the mysteries of nature through the same channels, each one selects his course for himself, he must direct his telescope to each planet for himself, and each must discover for himself. So it is with spiritual truths. What seems best to me may not seem best to you. What seems highest and truest to my consciousness, does not appeal to your intelligence, that you may accept it in the same degree that I did, consequently we differ in opinion, but as a result we grasp the whole subject, dissecting it according to our own abilities, and find the gems that inlay it, and consequently to-day, the agitations and opinions are bringing to the light its value, and the world is growing stronger thereby.

Religion is being probed deeper than ever before, and the world is stronger because of its verity. The religious world is clamoring for a sign as of old, and may have not seen or heard the signs that have been given, because their eyes have been closed and their ears shut to the resounding rhythm that was sounding through the universe, the glory of the Divine truth that is being poured upon you and into your lives. Modern Spiritualism has contained within its realm many signs that are prophetic of the future, the manifestations that belong to Spiritualism are by no means new. The Jewish Scriptures are filled with the history of them. The Christian Scriptures are full of the manifestations that occurred in their time, and they were as direct to to the believers and observers as they are at the present time. No man can receive for another these messages that shall appeal to him, shall convict his intelligence, and shall bring to him the actual knowledge. He must see for himself. Your father, your mother, your husband, or wife, or brother, or friend, must speak from his intelligence to you, in order that you may appreciate and identify those who may come to you.

Spiritualism has outlined to the world the promise, the sign of immortality. It has brought also manifestations bearing an influential value that no mind shall ignore, and that tell you that not only life here is earnest, spiritual, and under the domination of Divine law, but they tell you that life is continuous beyond the grave, that it is a larger life, a broader life, a sweeter life, a purer life, a truer life, because your eyes see and your ears hear just as you are. The veil has been rent, by which you deceive or contribute falsehood one to another. You are seen as you are. You have heard, and your senses imply not, as you utter language for others to accept as they may please; but you are to receive for yourself, see for yourself, know for yourself there, as you may here.

I would ask no man or woman to accept spiritual phenomena until they appeal to his intelligence, until his reason endorsed them, until he could bring to his own conscience the knowledge that he was communing with some friend who had walked and talked with him upon the earth. Until he receives this testimony, he can only accept the philosophy of eternal life, grounded upon the facts which inlay nature based upon the principles that are ever Divine, that belong to humanity. He cannot receive the testimony to his own consciousness that shall reveal eternity. The church has furnished evidences that others have accepted, but they do not satisfy, they do not gratify our hopes or our desires. You would not go into the chemists' laboratory and be satisfied with simply information. If you possessed a knowledge of chemistry you would desire that the elements might combine and bring forth results to the world. You may recognize the laws that oxygen and hydrogen (and all the elements that belong to water) are in the ice, but by the change of vibrations they are no longer the flowing streams, and note how beautiful they are, but the chemist knows that their waters are composed of oxygen and hydrogen. You may go out and look upon the ice-covered streams, and what do you discover, that oygen and hydrogen (and all the elements that belong to water) are in the ice, but the change of vibrations they are no longer the flowing stream, but are the solidified ice. Until you know these conditions, until you recognize the laws that govern them, you mistake the relationship of those elements, you do not comprehend why those combinations should produce those results, until you are able to know what they are, and to what laws they are amenable.

You look into the atmosphere, and you are able to comprehend its laws, it may be. It has within its realm oxygen, and nitrogen, and carbon, and hydrogen, and all those elements which contribute to human life. They are there, and take any one away and there is an imperfection in the atmosphere; you have not pure conditions without you in nature; it does not supply the great wants that nature demands, man demands, the material world demands. Any one element being withdrawn takes from the whole that part which is needful to its perfection.

Just so it is with the spiritual life of man; he needs all that contributes to his intellect or spiritual growth. He needs the truth, he needs love, he needs kindness, he needs charity, he needs helpfulness, he needs not only to receive it but he needs to bestow it, else his religion has no intrinsic merit; it is valueless so far as its application goes, and without it religion has no potency whatever in human society. The religion that belongs to perfection is not the religion of Christ, it is not the religion of love, and it has in it no signs of progress, only of decay. The signs of promise are the larger charities, the higher universal kindness, that is going out from one locality to another, What is in the home belongs to the community, what belongs to the community belongs to the country, what belongs to the country belongs to the nation, belongs to all races, because all are required to make that great unit of all things, the Eternal God.

Friends, you may well ask what Spiritualism has to do with all this. For more than two hundred years there has been going out into the world and has been sounding through the corridors of heaven the prayers of the sorrowing: "Where are my beloved? Prayers have gone from mothers' hearts, from men and women who have sorrowed and been bowed down by the weight of grief. Prayers have gone out: Where are my children, where are my fathers, where are my mothers, where are my brothers, sisters and friends? If there is a God, what sign is there that they still live, and what has been the consequence of the unanswered prayers?

Skepticism and infidelity have prevailed, until the world is clamoring to-day, as never before for a sign, and there has never came to the world in the history of man in any age any religion that has come as a theory with the evidence in the other hand to demonstrate that theory as has Modern Spiritualism. It has brought the testimony that appeals to the sorrowing heart, it appeals to the wise man, and to-day science is stretching forth her hands to take forth the testimony that it offers to prove the continuity of life beyond the grave. If this be true, what does it mean? Does it mean that we are simply here, and it means nothing more or less? It means that we are in the kingdom of God, it means that we are in the primary school here upon the earth, and that we are going out into a larger life; and it is our duty that we must obey, that we shall improve our minds, better our conditions, enlarge our happiness (and I mean universal happiness), to acquire all knowledge possible. It requires that we shall learn the causes of evil, that we shall know more of one another, that we shall remember the organic causes that induce so many wrongs, striving to to reach the inherent forces and remove them. If we make a better sanitation for the spirits, we shall have better spirits, the same as with the bodies. It is time, friends, that these questions become of serious importance, and it is time that we take hold of them and make them what they should be for the world.

Spiritualists, you have obligations upon you that are a thousand fold greater than any other religion, simply because you are preparing how to live, you are getting ready for a journey that knows no end. You are only revealing a still higher path you may climb, learning that progress, eternal progress, is the destiny of humanity. When you have acquired this knowledge, and it has become to you the imperative ruler of your lives, then you will become better. There will be a better sense of honor; falsehood, slander, envy, deceit and bitterness will fade away and in their places will come love, kindness, and helpfulness. These are the products of true religion, and they are the answers to the prayers that have been going up for ages, and they are the signs of the present time, they are the prophecy of what may come to us from better living in the future.

Friends, it is time we take up these duties in earnest, that we make the world better because we are in it, that we make the world purer because we are shedding a pure light upon the world; that we are making cleaner the standard of morals because we are leading moral lives, because we are becoming more earnest and truthful and just, because we are acquiring a greater justice. Hence, what is the result? I will tell you what is the result, the conditions of human society will have changed as soon as these principles become the dominating ruling power that shall govern society. The moment the rights of man are recognized, then no more claims will be made from one nation by another. Capital and labor are as dependent upon each other as they are independent in themselves. There is no use of a dollar for any man, unless he can use that dollar for the betterment of himself, and capital and labor must justly contribute to each one its own power. The place of one is as important in the economy of the world as the other, and it is a religious necessity that they shall be allied to each other, and based upon eternal justice to yourself, justice to each other, justice to humanity, justice to heaven. It means to make the world better, and truer, and nobler. It means that the wrongs throughout the world shall be abolished, and that sin shall fade away, and righteousness shall live instead.

The signs of the times are better, they are prophetic. They must come from a sweeter brotherhood, they must come from an internal sense of justice that has heretofore been shut out from the consciousness of mankind. It means that when man shall realize that the God of the universe is the God within, and the Divinity of man is recognized as belonging to every human creature, then man will begin to believe that there is something in brotherhood.

God has been put too far away, beyond the the stars, in a heaven made of dogma, and bigotry, and superstition; it is made according to the ideas and desires of the thoughtful artists of the time, but now Deity is being enthroned in reason, and finding a home in the hearts of the world, and mankind is becoming stronger and mightier everywhere. The world is better to-day than ever before, its standards of living are higher than ever before, its justice is more wide-spread than ever before. There is a recognition of rights that apply to individuals that heretofore have been shut out from human vision. Religion in fact is becoming a living fire that shall warm the hearts of mankind until they shall be blended as one, until humanity shall be one, God one, God all, over all, through all, and humanity shall be a brotherhood.

Benediction.—May that blessing crown your lives that shall bring peace to you, peace and good-will to each other, loving God because you love humanity, that is the joy of the world. Amen.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore the "Actina" treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

J. J. Pope, P. O. Box, No. 43, Mineral Wells, Texas, writes—"I have spent thousands of dollars on my eyes, consulted the best doctors in the United States, dropped medicine in my eyes for years and "Actina" is the only thing that has ever done me any good. Before using "Actina" I gave up all hope of ever being able to read again. Had not read a newspaper for seven years. Now I can read all day with little or no inconvenience."

Rev. Charles Carter, East Springfield, N. Y., writes:—I have made a severe test of "Actina" by casting aside my glasses and have not had them on since except to see what change had been wrought since the treatment began. My eyes gradually gained strength and power, and now my glasses are no longer necessary, for I see as well, if not better, without them. I recommend "Actina" to all my friends.

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes:—"Actina has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego, Cal.: "Kindly announce that all demands for Loveland funeral fund have been met. No more money needed."

Correspondent writes "The camp-meeting at Brady's Lake, Ohio, had a most auspicious opening on Sunday, June 28. Oscar A. Edgerly, the speaker of the occasion, gave two most eloquent lectures, calling forth hearty applause from the large audience present. Mr. Edgerly will also be the speaker on Sunday, July 5. Everything points to a most successful meeting at this popular camp, this year."

Frank T. Ripley, lecturer and spirit message medium, is now ready for Fall and Winter engagements. Address all letters to Unity Camp Meeting, Wonewoc, Wis.

Life and Death:—I am sure, however, now of one thing as I was once of the hopes and expectations, ventured in a girl's first book—that life and death are not two disrupted conditions, foreign if not antagonistic to each other; but that they are the perfect serial story of our race—a continuous, harmonious, progressive thing—the masterpiece of the Great Author, who carries the tale to the climax of mystery and suspense, and, seeming to leave it there, holds its denouement—with whatever beautiful and wonderful surprises, who shall say?—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in Harper's Bazar.

Mrs. L. S. Chase writes: "The R. S. C. C. held its monthly business meeting, semi-annual meeting, election of officers meeting, and social jointly at the home of the secretary, West Pullman, about 40 in attendance. Mrs Longstaff held a parlor test meeting, and the society their business meeting at the same time, resulting in a re-election of officers, and plans laid for a Summer Picnic, to be held August 2nd, at Wooded Island, Jackson Park, and the secretary was instructed to invite the other Spiritualist societies to join with them in making the day one of joy and recreation. Bring basket dinners, and come prepared to get acquainted with other fellow-workers. All mediums in the city are invited as well as anyone who wishes to learn of the grand philosophy and phenomena. The Sunday evening Hall meetings will be discontinued during the summer."

Lina M. Schanbacher writes from Detroit, Mich.: "As a student of the Morris Pratt Institute, I wish to express to you my hearty appreciation for publishing those two excelent articles of Dr. Wilkins. It is a pleasure to know so many of our people are beginning to realize what an important part the school plays in the cause of Spiritualism, and such able articles published in a paper that has such a wide circulation will do much to bring the school before our people as it should be. Knowing what the school has done in my behalf, and what it can do for those earnestly seeking a spiritual unfoldment, I cannot but feel to thank you for publishing the articles that are to benefit the school, and in that way benefit humanity."

E. H. Manning writes from 35724 Englewood avenue, Chicago: "Having disposed of my office and practice at Elkhart, Ind., I am now seeking a new location, and in the meantime would like to hear from societies or camps that would appreciate a successful healer, one who will discuss and demonstrate the work, at the public meetings. This work, is of spiritualistic origin and should be made a greater power in our ranks. Christian Scientists have made millions of converts by healing. Let us claim our just portion and put it on our platform."

Be therefore of good courage. Nothing is irreparable; everything passes, evil, as well as good. Take whatever punishment is given you like a man and bear it with a laugh. That is their creed. There is one certain medicine for ills, and that is laughter. Do not let the trouble of the body eat into the mind. Keep your mind free. Sometimes this courage and this happiness will cure the ill. The body is not always master of the mind; it should be the servant. The mind should be the master. The will should dominate. It can control in many things the body: it can make cures of illness. The West has suddenly discovered this as a new thing; the East knew it always. It can by sheer will sometimes restore health. Not always. That time when Will shall be the Lord or All is very far from us yet. We must have science as well as will. But it it cannot cure it can bring forgetfulness, an anodyne. The child who falls and hurts itself is caught within its mother' arms and told, 'now laugh.' It laughs: the pain-drawn lips relax, and then the pain is gone—forgotten. Laugh! Time will make all things right.—The Inward Light.

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "At Universal Occult Society, 77 East 31st stree, we had a very fine meeting. A short lecture was given by Dr. J. M. Temple. The Doctor needs no introduction to a Chicago audience, as all the old friends are glad to hear him again. The lecture was followed by spirit messages by the Doctor, and Mrs. Seybold, Mr. Hillis and your correspondent. Music by Mrs. Allen. All are welcome at our meetings, especially strangers in the city. Meetings conducted by Mrs. Maggie Henry, 3103 Prairie avenue."

Mrs. W. McCaslin, who is well known at Lake Brady and other camps, will visit Lily Dale this year, and act as agent for The Progressive Thinker.

Mrs. C. Bergere writes "Daughters, sons and friends, don't forget that the next semi-monthly social of the Fraternal Daughters, will be held at Mrs. Goldstein's home on Wednesday afternoon and evening, July 8, at 420 Ogden avenue, near Robey. An interesting program and good things to eat are promised. Supper will be served from 6:30 to 8 p. m. Test as usual by first class mediums."

W. J. Colville has just completed a long term of work in California, and is now again journeying eastward. Farewell meetings have been held in San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley. On July 12 and 19, and on all days between, Mr. Colville is announced to lecture at New Era camp, twenty miles south of Portland, Oregon. After completing that engagement, he will proceed direct to Boston, where his address will be care of Dr. F. J. Miller, 108 Huntington avenue. His engagements at summer resorts this season are, Onset, Aug. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7; Burlington, Vt., Aug. 10 to 17 inclusive; Lily Dale, N. Y., Aug. 19 to 31. While residing in Boston he will visit Worcester, Haverhill and other cities during September and October, before returning to Australia via England and India.

Hattie F. Pebt, corresponding secretary, writes: "The next 'Summer Social,' given under the auspices of the Band of Harmony, will be in the form of a picnic, at Lincoln Park, Thursday afternoon and evening, July 9. Coffee served on the lawn at 6 p. m.; as usual, coffee checks, 10 cents. Ladies will bring lunch for themselves and friends; also cup, plate, fork and spoon. Meet at 8 p. m. at the Center street entrance to park. All members and friends cordially invited."

Rev. May A. Price will speak at Lake Brady Camp, Ohio, July 13 and 19, and goes to serve the First church of Hamilton, Ont., during August and September. Mrs. Price is both an inspirational speaker and test medium, and will make engagements with other societies for months during the fall and coming winter. Address her at Morton, N. Y.

The Indiana state officers are working hard for a successful grove basket mass meeting, which they will hold July 19, at Chesterfield camp. The best of talent will be present. Good message bearers have been engaged, and a good live time is expected. This meetings is in part a preparatory to the National Convention. Do not miss this gathering on July 19. For information, address Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Muncie, Ind.

The picnic of the Illinois Sunflower Club, held at Lake Bluff on July 4, was a joyous affair, a large number being present. Our hostess, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, welcomed us in her most charming manner at this her summer home, with words of greeting and plenty of delicious hot coffee. Nature welcomed us with sunshine and showers. The tree, the grass and the birds joined in the welcome, and grand Lake Michigan made the music of harmony complete. Mrs. B. C. Peterson talked on the "Beauties of Liberty," and a number of message mediums did their part in making the day one long to be remembered.

Parrott hall, 2309 Santa Clara avenue, Alameda, California, remains open indefinitely for public work. Miss H. M. Young continue in charge and will regularly supply The Progressive Thinker and other good literature. The platform of that popular meeting place has recently been frequently occupied by Dr. Wilson Fritch and several other prominent lecturers. Mrs. Sophia Seip, from Portland, Oregon, will be a prominent worker there during July and August.

The Church of Spiritual Harmony (Spiritualist) held a social last night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kruse, 343 Callahan avenue. The object of this social, as stated by Rev. Milton Baker, assistant minister for the Spiritualists of the city, was first, to enable the members and friends of the Spiritualist parish to enjoy a pleasing evening in social intercourse, and to raise money to defray the expenses of the church. The sitting room and parlor of Mrs. Kruse's home were filled with guests. Ice cream and cake was served by the Ladies' Aid Society.—Muskogee, Okla., Democrat.

NUGGETS.

Heaven and Hell.

Those who seek for them will find
That heaven and hell are states of mind;
Heaven is ours when "all is well,"
A guilty conscience gives us hell.

Impractical.

He who takes no thought for the morrow,
Must either steal, beg or borrow;
He'll have no means his board to pay,
And naught for a sick or rainy day.

Sunday.

All days are earth's unceasing roll,
That bear us towards our heavenly goal;
We needs must have one day in seven,
For rest and spirit culture given.

WEIGHTY THOUGHTS.

Emanating From the Mind of an Octogenarian.

In our day and generation in this great country of ours, where so many people have become enlightened in knowledge and general information of the world's history it takes magnetic, eloquent and spiritual speakers, writers and teachers to reach the minds and thoughts of the people.

The growth of intelligence has been slow in all generations of men, and it takes master minds to arouse humanity and set them to thinking and investigating all subjects of importance.

Most readers like to read stories, and trashy fiction, and more light literature is read than facts, and deep subjects that require thought and careful study.

Book of great authors lie upon the shelves of libraries and are only read by a few literary persons compared to the multitude.

Is it any wonder, then, that progress, the eternal principle of growth in mind and thought is made manifest so closely in humanity's unfoldment for the higher and spiritual life?

Ignorance and prejudice keep the thoughtless masses from investigating Spiritualism or any great cause; and were it not for agitators and advanced educators, thinkers, speakers and writers of reform, the multitude would go back to savagery and a state of nature. But good impressions are made upon the minds of the people, who listen and think, by the above class of individuals, who are progressive and spiritual. In that manner good is accomplished for the children of men that is more precious than gold or silver.

Human nature is frail and fickle, as we learn by experience, and while under the power and influence of eloquent speakers and writers, we resolve to raise our standard of living and doing higher, and be useful to our fellow men.

But in the struggle for existence under present selfish conditions of society, we forget too often the good impressions received in our better nature under the influence of spirit power of love and wisdom.

I am made to believe, through experience and observation, that mankind is naturally wicked, and can only attain virtue, truth, love, knowledge of goodness and wisdom, by constant effort to overcome the evil in our nature, and reach a high standard of righteousness. True character is what exalts individuals and nations in this world, and it is the principle that will count in the vast future.

The great battle in this life is to overcome self, and be prepared to reach the higher spheres of existence, according to its development upon the earth plane.

I will now change my subject, to have variety. I was much pleased in reading the article of Mrs. Jerry Simpson, in No. 966, of our great moral and spiritual paper, as given previously in the Eagle of Wichita, Kansas.

Such individuals of true principle in any cause are worthy of imitation by all persons who love the truth, and hate imposition and hypocrisy.

It requires courage and firmness in combating impostors, frauds and fakes, who are bringing more disgrace upon the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism than all other causes.

But those abominable creatures are found in the orthodox churches and in all grades of society. But to imitate our cause they can make money.

All honest mediums should be paid for their advice and time, but the fortune tellers who travel over the country for the dollars, are generally found to be frauds.

In all reforms and emergencies, true leaders rise up to combat the wrong and advocate the right.

Ridicule, scoffs, frowns and persecutions have to be endured by true reformers, before their principles become popular with the multitudes.

The politics that Jerry Simpson advocated were very unpopular in his day, as his widow states, and he did not live to see them advocated by the opposition of his time.

So I trust it will be in the cause of pure Spiritualism. The old promoters of the Glorious Cause will all soon have passed over to their reward; and may the bright light of the spiritual world that they have started in this country shine on in splendor and glory until all shall see it, from the youngest to the oldest, is my sincere prayer.

HEAVEN, OUR HOME.

There is a land, so we are told,
With gates of pearl, and streets of gold,
Where angels sing "Praise God on high,"
With crowns and harps, and tearless eye,
And righteousness doth so abound
That not one sinner can be found,
And no one minds, so well they've learned,
They sing while friends are being burned!

I like not this idea of heaven,
With ties of love and friends thus riven—
So that "saved souls" can say "'Tis well"—
While friends are languishing in hell.
Let us decline this dreary creed,
So deadening to human need.
Our Heav'nly Father's loving hand
Ne'er tortures souls in future land;
However high—however low—
They're his dear ones—where'er they go.

For God is love, and pity, too,
And both are given to me and you,
And both so clearly are akin
They love the sinner, while the sin
They treat as a disease, so grave
That Christ laid down his life to save
The world from its corrupting power—
And all mankind shall bless the hour!

Truth sets us free! And from the chains
If ignorance and sin remains
But links rust-eaten and so weak
That men need but to break and seek
To find and follow the better way,
That leads from darkness unto day,
Where Love unites, as but Love can
Our Father God, and brother man.

SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS, and How to Attain Them. By B. F. Austin. New Thought Lessons. Beautifully printed and bound in cloth. Helpful in every way. Price 50 cents.

To the Spiritualists at Large.

The ladies of the "Colby Luther Bazar" will thankfully receive any articles (fancy or otherwise), books, etc., that the friends in the Cause may donate. We would also like to add as many new members as possible to our list this season. Membership fee, 25 cents per year. This is a noble work and we hope all who can will respond. Address all donations to Mrs. F. C. Moore, 2102 Central avenue, Anderson, Ind., until July 23, after that date, Chesterfield, Ind.

MRS. F. C. MOORE,
Secretary.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

As chairman of the committee appointed at the last convention of the N. S. A. to prepare an up-to-date book of music, crisp and modern in its words and tunes, intended to promote harmony and awaken the higher inspirations of attendants at all kind of Spiritualist services, I am able to report substantial progress in the work. Some appropriate music, and also excellent words for arrangement to notes have been already received.

Any one having suitable words or tunes, either or both, are invited to forward them right away. Remember, we cannot use anything upon which the copyright has not expired, without permission of the author, or composer, which rights run for 28 years, and may have one extension of 14 years more, or 42 years in all. Much interest in the outcome of this undertaking is being manifested. We hope our fellow Spiritualists all over the country will send us their suggestions and contributions of a helpful nature. Let us join hands to do the work in such a way, that the book will be a subject for pride, and set all our people to singing Spiritualism, not only with the lips, but from the heart, with the spirit and the understanding.

Any one wishing to give substantial encouragement to the committee's labors, is invited to forward me at Centreville, Michigan, pledges of financial contribution towards the expenses.

TO INDIANAPOLIS SPIRITUALISTS.

Big Basket Picnic at Chesterfield Camp, July 19.

The Spiritualists of Indiana are going to be given an opportunity to spend a most profitable day at Camp Chesterfield, July 19, and at the same time assist the State Association to carry forward the arrangements necessary to entertain the National Convention to be held in Indianapolis in October.

A program of unusual interest has been completed for the day, which must please and instruct all hearers.

For the morning session Dr. Samuel Gould, of Argos, Indiana, one of the wheel horses of Spiritualism, will give one of his soul-stirring talks. He needs no introduction to Chesterfield audiences, for he has long been recognized as a fervent defender of the truth of our beloved Cause, and has convinced many into an acceptance of the fact of continuity of life.

At the afternoon session, Morgan E. Genge, the liberal lecturer, author, sailor and world-wide traveler will deliver his lecture on "The Uplifting Value of Ideals." Mr. Genge is a native of New Foundland, where he was educated, but finished his studies in the colleges of this country, Harvard being one of them. He has lectured in all the large cities of America, and spent years in travel and research of truth, is broad in conception and logical in conclusions. To fail to hear these two gifted orators will be to miss a rare treat.

Other speakers and workers will be present, also several of our noble mediums, who never fail to bring consolation to the sorrowing. The names of mediums will be published just as soon as arrangements can be made with one or more.

Good music on the grounds and some cheering songs at the services in which the entire audience can take part and promote the harmony.

Come with well-filled baskets and a mind open to truth, and a heart full of good cheer.

Indiana Spiritualists should be alive to the importance of this occasion and act accordingly, encouraging the State Association by their presence or sending money to our worthy secretary, Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, of Muncie, Ind., to help defray the expenses to be incurred by reason of the National Convention taking place in our beautiful city, and leave nothing undone that will promote the success of the meetings at Chesterfield.

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. Abiah J. Bunnell, an old-time resident of Lawrence township, Van Buren Co., Mich., and a firm believer in the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism, passed to higher life June 26, 1908, aged 75 years and one month. She leaves a son and brother and many true friends to mourn her departure. Services by the writer at the home of her brother, Mr. Lamphere, in the village of Lawrence, Sunday, June 28.

H. L. CHAPMAN.

Marcellus, Mich.

Mrs. Sophia Porter, aged 86 years, and mother of one of our best known mediums, Mrs. F. A. Gregory, passed to spirit life June 23. She has long been an invalid and patient sufferer, and most gladly did she exchange this for the spiritual expression of life. She wanted no tears nor sorrow expressed over her departure, but counselled her friends to move along in their accustomed channels as though nothing had happened. She was a firm Spiritualist, having positive knowledge of the continuity of life. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, the earthly tenement being deposited amid a profusion of flowers in Mt. Hope cemetery.

Vermont State Convention.

The Vermont State Spiritualist Association held its Semi-Annual Convention at Hale's Pavilion, Barre, Vt., June 12, 13 and 14.

The first session was called to order at 2:30 o'clock, Friday, with President, Mrs. Effie I Chapman in the chair. The meeting consisted of short speeches by the different speakers present.

Friday evening opened with a large audience. An address of welcome was given by the president of the local society, S. S. Smith, which was fittingly responded to by the president, Mrs Effie I Chapman of the State Association.

A song of welcome was sung by Mrs. A. W. Allen of Barre, Vt., who furnished us with her sweet music throughout the entire convention.

Mr. A. F. Hubbard of Tyson, Vt., then gave one of his best lectures, taking for his subject, "The New Thought, and What Do We Mean By It?"

He is one of our best speakers and always ready to lend a helping hand in the line of progression.

Mrs. Effie I. Chapman followed with spirit messages, which are always sought after in our conventions.

Saturday morning dawned bright and beautiful with everything in nature to make the convention a success.

Mr. F. A. Wiggins of Boston, Mass., spoke during the afternoon and evening, taking for his subject: "Can a Fountain Send Forth Both Sweet Water and Bitter?"

Mr. Wiggins is a message-bearer and soothes many aching hearts with his loving messages from the other side, giving names and answering questions which were very satisfactory.

He gave us several fine lectures which were appreciated by the large audiences present.

Taking all in all we had a fine convention

THE SECULAR PRESS.

The Great Work It Is Doing in Spreading the Gospel of Spiritualism—Letter From the Venerable William F. Nye, of New Bedford, Mass.

To the Editor:—I am pleased to receive this week's number of The Progressive Thinker, containing the first sketch of my 43 years' careful investigation of Modern Spiritualism. I am writing these up from time to time for the secular press, more particularly for the Sunday papers, as I find it is thus drawing attention to Spiritualism even more effectually than the spiritual press. They do not now play shy of this phenomena and philosophy as they once did, and they invite me to give them any phenomena that I met with. "Glad to have it," they say. The vast public that seldom, if ever, read a Spiritualist paper, thoroughly reads the secular press, and Spiritualism to-day is getting more publicity in that way than from the spiritual press. Since I have published these manifestations a great number of thinking men in the more humble walks of life have beset me on the street, in my office and in my home, telling me of the glad surprise they experienced in reading them, asking if it is really so, that we live on after death, and wanting me to tell them further what I know about it.

Really, I never expected to be a missionary after this order, but the fact is, I am in for it for all it is worth, but I stand firm and unflinching in this city where I have spent 72 years of my life. Priest and prelate have to listen to my analysis of the philosophy along with the sailor just in from a long voyage of fitting for another far-distant whaling cruise, and whom I supply with The Progressive Thinker, and I believe many a sailor has been lead to its soul teachings while whiling away lonely hours in the tropical seas. I verily believe that these manifestations lead the soul to logical conclusions; they develop the power of thought; they fairly discount the Societies for Psychacal Research, and impel them to tell the world that the souls' instincts are far superior to their science.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM F. NYE.

THE LESSON OF LIFE.

Never Tell Anybody if You Feel Badly

In her great papers in Harper's Bazar on "The World Invisible," Elizabeth Stuart Phelps is writing of this life, as well as of the life to come. In the July Bazar she says: "'My dear,' said a woman of the wise world to a young girl, 'never tell people how you feel. Nobody wants to hear.' What is true of bodily disorder is as true of mental pain. 'Nobody wants to hear.' We learn the difficult art of silent endurance. Repression, reserve, courage, replace the first natural outcries of suffering. After a time, we begin to feel almot ashamed of ourselves, not for the pang, but for complaining of it.

"Then, from the rebellion of youth, from the endurance of middle life, we passon into the patience of advancing age. An impatient old person is a scholar at the foot of the human class; he is persona non grata at the court of life; he may be tolerated, but he will not be loved, and he will speedily find out, if he did not know it before, that he who has outlived his welcome in this world might as well be somewhere else."

King Solomon's Mining Scheme.

To the Editor:—Can you give me the address of "King Solomon's Mining Company," of altruistic fame?

I invested $50 in it, and never heard from it since they got my money. I wish some investigation could be made in it, and the facts made public in The Progressive Thinker. It might help some others to get their hard-earned money back. I also invested money in The Eldorado Copper Mining Company, of which C. Walter Lynn was a promoter. This company got out some very promising circulars, but I never heard from it after my money reached their hands. Any information regarding these parties would be gratefully received. Thanking you for past favors and wishing you the best of health, I am yours fraternally, ***

Hoboken, New Jersey.

Will someone of the hundreds of stockholders inform us about the above parties?

DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago. Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

N. S. A. Convention at Indianapolis, Ind.

It is somewhat premature to announce the convention of the N. S. A. to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 20 to 24, 1908, but it is early receiving so much attention, and so many are interested that it is best to state the exact date, as above.

The convention will begin on Tuesday morning, and conclude not later than midnight of the following Saturday. Many who are now arranging to attend, and as delegates desire the facts of the coming important assembly, will appreciate this advance notice, if my correspondence warrants such a conclusion.

The early interest in the annual convention is certainly an indication of a grand one to be held this year.

Announcements will be made soon; and these suppled to all who may desire. The addition of a Monday night reception, and the following Sunday mass-meetings, will increase the desire of many to attend.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In Reference to the Indiana State Association.

The Indiana State Association of Spiritualists, through the management and kindness of the Chesterfield camp organization, has been granted the privilege of holding a Grove Basket Massmeeting on Sunday, July 19. This is just one Sunday before the beautiful grove is opened to the public proper for the camp season.

The Indiana State Association is working hard to make all arrangements for the coming N. S. A. convention, which will be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, Oct. 20 to 24. The best of talent will be secured, and message bearers will be present.

The camp season is short this year, and this will afford an opportunity to visit the beautiful grove early and hear speakers who are not on the camp program. The State Board desires a full attendance, that they may present their state work to the people of Indiana. Remember the date, July 19.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead." These words stand out on the cover. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet the author, Edward C. Randall, believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50.

SCIENCE AND A FUTURE LIFE.

By Prof. James H. Hyslop.

This work is one of the most valuable acquisitions to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. It is scientific in its method, profound in its ethical deductions, unanswerable in its logic, and above all sympathetic to the truth whatever it may be and wherever it may be found. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

By Minot J. Savage, D. D.

QUESTION AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of
HUDSON TUTTLE.
Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Peter Madsen:—Q.—Who started the Catholic church? Where was the Mormon Bible found? How many Bibles are there?

A.—The Catholic is claimed to have begun with St. Peter, because Christ said, "on this rock," etc. As a church, however, it had a much later origin. It may be said to have been a growth through the ages, and not until its separation from the Greek, can it be said to have begun a distinct organization. Before this time the church was more Greek than Catholic.

Solomon Spaulding, wrote an historical romance sometime before 1812, but he failed to secure a publisher. By some means Joseph Smith came in its possession and had a revelation of the place where the Book of Mormon was buried. Accompanied by witnesses the place was disturbed, and in a stone box the gold plates were found on which in "reformed Egyptian" the text was found written. Those who buried it had conveniently left the "Urim and Thummim," a sort of spectacles by which, by putting on, Smith was able to understand and translate into English the strange hieroglyphics. Good and honest Oliver Cowdery was the scribe who wrote the dictations of Smith, while in his trance state, sitting behind a curtain. Then witnesses said they saw these plates which disappeared and were never again seen. These witnesses after a time repudiated the rascally leader. The deception was so crude that only the most ignorant could be deceived.

It is an object lesson in the origin and growth of religious sects. It came in recent times; in the blaze of knowledge. If it had come 500 or 1,000 years ago, before the era of newspapers and reporters, before books and general information, how different might have been its fate!

If by Bibles is meant sacred books, the number of Bibles is large, for all nations at some time have regarded all writings as sacred.

The oldest book in the world is the Egyptian Book of the Dead. The collection of Hebrew writings up to a certain date make the Old Testament. A collection made on obscure grounds, of the Christian writings of the first six centuries passes as the New Testament. The works of Confucius are sacred to the Chinese, as are the Kings. The Zend Averts contains the early literature of the Persians and is Holy Bible to that people. The Vedas and Shastra are sacred books to the Hindus. The Greeks regarded the writings of their poets as divinely inspired, and the Romans had the Sibylline Books.

The "runes" often of any one letter or a word were the beginning of a Bible with the Druids.

The Incas and Aztecs had sacred writings, preserved in indecipherable hieroglyphics carved on temple walls.

M. J. Faivre, M. D.:—Q.—What is the difference between memory and recollection?

A.—Memory is the name of the faculty; while recollection, remembrance, etc., are the exercise of the faculty. We recall ideas or experience; recollect the mental operations of the past. Memory is the active faculty which furnishes the records of past events and experiences. The distinction is between that which is remembered, and that which remembers.

Adin Bugbe:—Q.—When was the divining rod discovered? Is it trustworthy?

A.—The divining rod is of so ancient origin that its discoverer is unknown. The reliability depends on the impressibility of its user. While its success has been sufficient to keep it before the public, it has not been certain to demonstrate the claims made for it. The forked branch of the witch hazel was considered the best, but slender rods of flexible steel have been considered preferable.

MIRACLE IN FRANCE; HAIL BEARS IMAGE OF VIRGIN.

Clerical Commission Hears Witnesses and Affirms Reality of Alleged Divine Manifestation.

Remiremont, France.—A diocesan commission has been conducting an investigation at Remiremont of an alleged miracle, and having heard 107 witnesses it recently affirmed the reality of the supernatural event.

During a violent hail storm in the month of May hailstones were picked up, it is alleged, bearing images of the virgin on their surface. Contact with the earth had split them in half, and on the smooth inner surface were the miraculous pictures. Local Catholics consider this phenomenon a divine response and rebuke to the action of the municipal council in vetoing a proposed procession in honor of the Virgin.

The secretary of the Academy of Sciences attributes the phenomenon to photofulgural or vaporographic impressions of certain medals struck in honor of the Virgin.

"The Warfare of Science With Theology." By Andrew D. White, LL.D. The two large volumes of about 900 pages are indispensable to the student, and no library is complete without them. Price $5.00.

DRIVING HOME THE COWS.

(A New England Legend.)

The setting sun, like a ball of gold,
Sinks to rest 'mong the tree-tops far away,
And softly the village bell is tolled,
From its ancient tower, for dying day.

Long shadows creep o'er the sun's last smile
To nodding maple and oak and pine,
As, with answering "low," in single file,
From the meadows, come the wandering kine.

"Co-boss! Co-boss!" At the pasture-bars,
Will, noisily lowers rail on rail;
From conflicts bovine, bearing the scars,
And hung on his arm is the milking pail.

They struggle out o'er the narrow road,
And pausing to snatch at a hasty bite,
Young "Caro" acts as an eager goad,
And barks as they run, with a dog's delight.

The rustic lane is a "Lovers' Meet,"
And a maid as fair as the blooms of May,
Whose glowing cheeks, so rosily sweet,
Were kissed by the sun through the live-long day,
Glides softly there by the side of him;
But is almost hid by his stawart frame.
Her star-light eyes with the tears are dim,
For her heart hath burst into sudden flame,

A great unrest hath entered his soul;
He longs to enter the strife of the world,
Where the grinding wheels of riot roll
O'er its victims, down in the struggle hurled.
A deep, low sob, like the sad pines stir
As, stooping, he catches her in his arm,
And gives her a kiss, and says to her:
"I'm tired to death of this dull old farm!

"There's a place for me—the world is wide;
And when it is found, I will surely come,
My darling! and claim you for my bride."
But the maiden's quivering lips are dumb;
The roused kine dash with their quickening feet,
In riotous thud o'er the yielding turf
As, fluttering in pain, her poor heart beat,
As the wings of a wounded bird the earth.

Many a tale the maiden heard
Of lovers leaving the sheltering farm,
And never after a single word
From the wanderer came, of good or harm.
"But I will return in one short year,
When I've found a home for my bride-to-be;
And, that you may know your Will is here,
I'll drive up the cows as I come," said he.

In the morn he went—the days dragged by,
Till a year had passed o'er the maiden's head.
She thought of him as the nights drew nigh,
For she ne'er forgot what her Will had said.
The setting sun, like an orb of gold,
Was hid 'mong the trees with the same bright glow;
And softly the village-bell was tolled
With the sad, sweet sound of a year ago.

She glanced down the lane where the cows came home;
Why grew her fair cheek so strangely white,
Like the rising crests of the sea a-foam?
Ah! slowly the cows have come in sight.
She stops not for hat, but, with streaming hair
She flies down the lane with love-lit eyes:
"Will! Will!"she cries. "He is surely there,
And drives home the cows for a glad surprise!"

Aye! surely 'twas Will! and still the same;
The same as he was in the year gone by;
Still sturdy of limb and strong of frame,
With the glow of health in his cheek and eye.
He flourished a stick, as he did of yore,
As stopped the kine for a wayward bite;
And the milking-pail on his arm he wore,—
The pail he had on that other night.

"Will! Will!" she cried, as, with outstretched arms
And with faltering feet, she gained his side;
But her fond heart filled with strange alarms,
For 'twas written thereon, "THY HOPES HAVE DIED!"
He reached not down for a fond embrace;
He smiled at her, but said never a word!
A strange, sad look was upon his face,
That was deathly pale; and he never stirred!

The maiden's heart was a cold, dead stone,
As, slow before her he faded away,
Till naught remained! when she stood alone,
While the 'wildered cows went all astray.
Poor Will was dead, but his wraith had come,
And had driven the cows to meet her sight,
Keeping his word, though his lips were dumb,
He had given to her that summer night.

"Spiritualism and the Law." A Series of Papers Compiled from Legal Authority by the Hon. Charles R. Schirm of Baltimore, Md. This pamphlet is one that every Spiritualist should read. It is a subject that people are not familiar with. Price, 25 cents

LIFE IS WORTH LIVING.

An Address to the Graduates of the Port Washington, Ohio, High School, Delivered May 20, 1908, at the Ninth Commencement, by Philip Lamneck, a Member of the Board of Education.

Ladies, Gentlemen, Honored and Respected Graduates: After listening to the fine class address delivered to you by the Rev. H. A. Fluck, and the opening prayer of the Rev. Theodore Fisher, both of which contained good advice and valuable admonitions, which if heeded, will help you over many of the rough places in your life's pathway; it again becomes my pleasant duty, as on several former occasions, to address a few remarks to you as graduates, before presenting you with your diplomas on behalf of the board of education.

You have now reached the milestone in your life's journey where you will have to enter a different school. Your future teachers will also be different. Your past school life has been comparatively easy and pleasant, because you enjoyed the aid and support of kind and loving parents, a board of education who provided capable and efficient teachers and the good people of Port Washington village school district, who furnished the money and means free to you of any cost, that you might be able to gain a good common school education.

In life's school the conditions will be different. You will miss more or less all these valuable aids and supports, and you will be obliged to fight the battles of life unaided and unassisted. To enable you to fight life's battles successfully has been the object of your past education.

Education is not an end, but only a means to an end. Education is like a tool in the hands of a skilled mechanic, by the aid of which he produces beautiful and useful things, but in the hands of an unskilled person the tool becomes worse than useless, in fact it becomes a dangerous weapon to himself and others as we see by everyday occurrences all around us.

Knowledge is power, and power may be a bad as well as a good thing. It all depends upon the uses that it is put to. Therefore it becomes important that you should realize the fact that unless you make the proper use of the education you have so far acquired it will benefit you but little.

Another important fact is that the acquisition of the material things of life, while necessary, should not be the chief end or aim of your efforts; because they, like education, are only a means to an end. Earthly riches are not bad things in themselves; only the wrong use made of them makes their possession a bad thing. Riches can be a blessing as well as a curse.

If this earth life was the only life, and the end of our individual existence, as many people believe, even so-called orthodox Christians, it might well be asked whether this earth life was worth living; whether it was worth all the sorrow, pain, sore and bitter disappointments, struggles and efforts to achieve higher and better things.

If you inquire of some people (even orthodox Christians) what they know about the future life, they only express a faint hope and very little faith; faith not even as large as a grain of mustard seed, and no knowledge; while some, and the most intelligent and so-called enlightened persons are rank materialists who do not believe in an individual existence after the dissolution of the physical body. But I am happy to state to you the positive fact of the existence of a future life, a life as real and tangible as this earth life is, only more perfect and more beautiful.

I make this statement not because I only hope for, or believe in a future existence, but because I KNOW from actual personal experience and knowledge, that the future life is a fact in nature, capable of scientific demonstration, the same as any other fact of nature is capable of scientific demonstration, and this fact is being demonstrated by the most scientific and learned men of the present day in all parts of the world.

In view of this positive fact and knowledge that this earth life does not end all, it becomes worth living, and worth living right, and it becomes worth all the sorrow, pain, sore and bitter disappointments, struggles and efforts which we are compelled to endure and make to gain the intellectual and spiritual heights. It is a blessing to be born.

Your whole earthly career is only a primary and preparatory school, to fit and equip you for that future and that higher life in that house and in that city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

I now have the honor and also the pleasure of presenting you, on behalf of the board of education, with the visible tokens of your efficiency and capacity to fight life's battles successfully; with the hope and wish that at its close you may be able to graduate into the higher life with even greater honors than you do today. On behalf of the good people of this beautiful village, as well as myself and the other members of the board of education, I extend to each of you our blessings and heartfelt best wishes for your future success, prosperity and happiness.

THE THINGS THAT COUNT.

Not what we have, but what we use;
Not what we see, but what we Choose—
These are the things that mar or bless
The sum of human happiness.

The things near by, not things afar;
Nor what we seem, but what we are—
These are the things that make or break,
That give the heart its joy or ache.

Not what seems fair, but what is true;
Not what we dream, but good we do:
These are the things that shine like gems,
Like stars in Fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give;
Not as we pray, but as we live—
These are the things that make for peace,
Both now and after Time shall cease.

"A Discussion on Reincarnation or the Successive Embodiments of the Human Spirit." Reincarnation, or the doctrine of the Soul's successive embodiments. Examined and Discussed pro and con by Dr. J. M. Peebles versus Dr. Helen Densmore and W. J. Colville. Price 30 cents.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

Experiences and Lessons in the School of Life.

Nature is true to itself, and all things balance in time. Many things exist as long as they are useful, then pass away. Ages come and go, each having its period of adolescence, maturity, decline, senility and extinction. Natural law is ever pushing things on from lower to higher, urging on the oft-flagging endeavors of feeble, frail humanity to surpass all previous unavailing efforts. We can always get knowledge and discipline out of a hard experience, if we cannot get anything else.

Upon the merits of another we cannot rise one degree, but must carve out our own career to develop the moral nature, set aside imperfections and meet the results of our own life. Individual action, growth, knowledge, are the basis of moral status responsibility.

Wrong of any kind soon brings its bitter fruit. Wrong-doing rebounds upon and wounds the wrong-doer.

Our religion makes life practical; leads manly and womanly men and women into the higher walks and thoughts of life; makes the poor, honest man feel rich in spirit, and the rich rascal poor; appeals to no money-bag or savior as god of forgiveness, but makes people haul themselves up before the mirror of retrospection for judgment by their own conscience.

A well spent life of correct conduct affords greater assurance of a happy future, than blind faith in anything whatsoever. Any person whose life has been thus spent can meet death without dread, horror or fear of a future world.

Any person who seeks to break evil habits, attain elevation of heart and life will certainly progress; yet the memory of the past reappears even in these days when he is striving to live a better life, and confronts him with its records. This is something which he cannot avoid; and the more sensitive the person, the more keenly will he feel the bitterness and sorrow which the reflection of the past seems to cast upon him; yet even through the scourge of bitter memory it lays upon his quivering spirit, may he rise to more glorious planes of spiritual effort and achievement.

He will look back upon his past follies and mistakes somewhat as he looks upon the failures of childhood, and so make allowance for them, because of the ignorance that clouded his life. If he finds himself strengthened in spiritual character, then he need not sink down under the memories that weigh upon him; for he may press onward toward the light by aid from spiritual sources, and finally he will find that peace and contentment which at present seem so far away.

Some spirits at once rise above the temptations that infested them on earth. In dropping off the mortal garb they leave the old desires and allurements behind them. But these are the souls who, while in mortal life, are above their surroundings; they are creatures of environment and inherited conditions; and while falling before temptation at times, do not willingly or easily yield to it; they revolt at doing wrong even while being swept down beneath the physical and magnetic forces that are too powerful to be resisted. Yet such individuals do not lie in the rut, but struggle on again, determined to win the victory at any cost. Such souls grow even amid the limitations and weaknesses of the flesh. When they do slip from the body their aspirations aid them to leave the temptations of the past and rise to a higher state.

Man without education is only an unfortunate animal, because his animal propensities predominate. Also education without ethics or enlightenment or knowledge how to shun inharmonious laws and improper living, has but little value in it. The faculties and functions of the mind require care and culture.

To excel nobly is not to outrival and surpass another in the race of life, but it is an honest endeavor to shine successfully in that particular sphere of effort where the individual can serve humanity best.

If young people are deliberately idle and vicious they must take the consequences of their folly and crime. They may have their fitful moments of revelry and fun, but if it results in harm to themselves and fellow beings they will have occasion to bitterly regret their course of conduct sometime.

"That we reap as we sow is a maxim of truth;
Though a hard thing to learn in the days of our youth;
But at last it shines out like the words on the wall,
This law has its debit and credit for all."

We have a persistent desire to live, to enjoy, to be happy by an impulse that leads us on to a career of progress, and the condition of being happy consists as much in the pursuit of things attainable as in their possession.

The soul that garners fruitage for spirit life is capable of grasping the enduring joys; and as the mental horizon widens the world beyond displays its unending vistas of spiritual attainments, in comparison to which the sordid acquisitions of the mundane plane pale into insignificance.

KAISER AND WIFE FEAR WAR BECAUSE OF OLD PROPHECIES?

Monks of Days Agone Said Great Conflict Would End Hohenzollern Reign With Death of Wilhelm II.

Prais, France.—The Echo de Paris quotes an anonymous member of Emperor Francis Joseph's entourage to the effect that it is well known in Austrian court circles that the German emperor, despite his bellicose talk, has a superstitious dread of war on account of two ancient prophecies, according to which he is destined to be the last Hohenzollern ruler.

The first prophecy is not wholly known, but was made by an old monk of Tehnim. The other is well known in several European courts and originated in an ancient monastery in the neighborhood of Mayence.

Both foretell the end of the Hohenzollerns with Wilhelm II., adding his death would be caused by a great war. The kaiser in shares in the superstition and is eager for peace.

THE HUMAN SOUL.

Is It Ever Disintegrated?

To the Editor: A few weeks ago I read an article in The Progressive Thinker from Charles Dawbarn, the Pacific Coast philosopher, wherein he makes the startling statement that certain denizens of the spirit world are disintegrated. I wonder how the Professor obtained that valuable information. In The Progressive Thinker of June 13 Mrs. Jennie Martin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes:,

"Yes, the distinguished Pacific Coast philosopher has presented thoughts which have attracted a great deal of attention. To me they are important witnesses as to what was given me by a controlling spirit some over a year ago. When first receiving the seemingly strange philosophy I did not care to impart it to others. I feared ridicule and strong opposition; but now when seeing it from the pen of our noted Charles Dawbarn, I no longer hesitate to give the important information that was handed to me from my reliable guide, who likewise claims that the so-called dark spirit has not evolved the brightness of the one we call our angel visitor. He also states that the retrograeding spirit is on the road to extinction, and to actual disintegration of his personality; and positively affirms that he will again appear in another form of existence."

I do not believe that such, as it seems to me, irrational statements, whether made by a spirit in or out of the physical body will be accepted as a fact by any thoughtful, analytical, thinking individual, because it is a subject that is absolutely unknowable. It is beyond the ken of either spirit or mortal man. When that profound knowledge has been obtained the ultimate analysis of the human race will have been solved. Is it possible for any denizen of this or the spirit world to positively know that even one single soul will live and retain its separate individuality through all the countless ages of eternity? If one soul will have an eternal future, I believe all will have, and if one is, in the course of time, annihilated, inevitably all will be.

Nature is just. She makes no discrimination in the application of her laws.

Disembodied souls may come to certain conclusions that are erroneous the same as we do who are in the physical body. It is not infrequently that those who have been supposed to be dead for many years appear in our midst alive and well, and may it not be possible that in the so-called spirit world some may disappear and the thought be obtained that the disappearance was caused by the spirit's disintegration.

The physical man, the body I mean, had a beginning, therefore it must have an ending, but the real man, the soul man, as some designate him, I believe is as old as time itself, having no beginning, and if it has no beginning, isn't it reasonable to suppose that it will never have an end? You find me one end of a string, and I will find you the other end; it may be made into a ball as large as our old Mother Earth, still the other end can be found. Everything that has had a beginning must have an end. I believe that to be a proposition that cannot be controverted.

Not one of us know, so far as our memory serves us, that we had an existence when we were 12 or 18 months old; still we do know that children of that age are living to-day, and therefore we may reasonably conclude that we lived at that age, and if we could or did live one year and a half without it being brought to the threshold of our memory, is there any good and substantial reason why we could not have lived through all the eternal past without a beginning, therefore without an end?

In my humble opinion, nothing can be created to-day that can or will have an eternal and everlasting future. I do not believe that one single atom can be or ever was created out of nothing. I believe that everything that is in this boundless universe to-day has been and always will be in it; that not one single particle can be taken from or added to it. The various forms may take on other forms, because constant change seems to be the universal order of the universe. The statements made herein are not stated as facts. I make make them simply because they are my honest opinions; only that and nothing more.

I have often observed that some people talk and write the most fluently about matters and things of which it is utterly impossible for them, or any one else to know anything about. One naturally comes to the conclusion, after reading what some think they know about God and divine power, that what they really don't know, in their own estimation, is not worth knowing. I believe I know as much about God and divinity as any one that ever lived upon this mundane sphere, and I am free to acknowledge that absolutely I do not know anything about either. I have never seen God, and I do not believe that any man, woman or child now living or ever did live upon the earth or anywhere else, ever saw him or heard his voice. I firmly believe that he is wholly an imaginary being created by the church and designing knaves. What does any priest or preacher know about God more than the most illiterate person knows. Positively nothing.

Using the Planchette.

I wish to write you of the very wonderful experiences my mother and I have had within the past four months.

My mother is 70 years of age, while I am on the downward side of life, and until within the past five months, we knew very little of Spiritualism. Last winter a friend of mine advised us to use a planchette, and see if we could not develop a phase. We did as she suggested, and after a few weeks were astonished at the results. We first began to draw scrolls and flourishes; then faces, seemingly wrapped in a mist. From day to day the pictures grew more distinct, until we were very much amazed at the productions brought forth by the little planchette.

I then began to try with pencil alone in hand. After many attempts and failures, I began drawing, and also got automatic writing, describing the picture. My pictures improved, and then writing began to come by impression. My mother also draws now with pencil, although hers is very different from mine, being principally portraits of priests, or men of the long ago, judging from the robes and peculiar head-dresses worn. My pictures are of temples and idols of past ages, and pre-historic animals.

TOTAL DEATH.

By a Long Violation of Natural Laws, the Soul Gradually Disintegrates.

Some Spiritualists have only lately heard of the idea that there can be a total extinction of the soul; or that some human beings have no souls strong enough to survive the death of the body. How can a born idiot survive in spiritual life? How can the totally insane or the totally depraved be made alive again? T. J. Hudson, the psychologist, said: "Unless we sincerely desire and struggle to attain immortality, we will never reach it or have it." An eminent psychologist said: "Unless the soul has spiritual food, how can it live? It is possible for the body to starve to death; but something more than that might happen, the soul might starve to death. "The soul that sineth, it shall die!" THAT IS, BY A LONG CONTINUED VIOLATION OF NATURAL LAWS THE SOUL GRADUALLY DISINTEGRATES AND LOSES ITS POWERS: not annihilated,, but dissipated, disorganized, annulled, rendered powerless to suffer or enjoy anything.

St. Paul says: "Quench not the spirit." If we can quench a part of the spirit, and we know we can, then it follows, as the night the day, we can quench all of it. Then we would become blind, deaf and dumb to all the splendors of the universe. It is a constant struggle to keep a soul. If we consent to fall we must struggle to rise.

We are either growing better or worse.

We are going forward or backward.

Immortality is the survival of the fittest. Those who are fit to live, do live; those who are not fit to live, die. And then what supreme satisfaction it would be to know that all the little devils and demons along with the supreme big devil, have been eliminated from the spirit world. And such a destiny could be best for all concerned. O. L. HARVEY.

A HORSE SEES SPIRITS.

Senses a Grave When Near One.

To the Editor: As set forth in the Kansas City Star these are sad days for Charger, an intelligent horse that evidently sees spirits.

Could anything be more humiliating to a proud country horse than to be brought to the "dinkey" market in Kansas City and sold to a junk dealer to haul a rickety wagon through the alleys? That is exactly what happened, not because Charger was old and worn out or had a mean disposition, but simply because he had a nose for ghosts. The horse saw spirits at night, and for that reason he was sacrificed.

Charger was not a plow horse. He never followed the long furrows. From the time the animal was a colt he was a pet. He was trained for a family riding and driving horse, and had not been subjected to hard labor. Charger could be driven double or single, he could go most of the gaits as a saddler, and he ate sugar from a child's hand.

"I had to sell Charger for my own peace of mind," the former owner, a farmer south of Kansas City, said. "He could smell a ghost a mile. Of course, I didn't have to use the horse but it made the family uncomfortable to have the superstitious animal on the place.

"There is a graveyard between our house and town. That horse would get scared and tremble in every limb and snort and pant every time he passed the graveyard at night. When I told the neighbors about the horse's actions they said that the animal was frightened at the white tombstones.

"Just to find out if that was the case I tied a thick cloth over the horse's eyes the next time I rode by the graveyard at night. I fixed it so I was positive the horse couldn't see. I put on the blindfold before I left home. Everything was all right until I got within about a mile of the graveyard. Then the animal began to show signs of fright. Charger had a chill when we passed the graveyard.

"The first time I noticed anything unnatural in Charger's action was about a year ago, just after he had been broken to ride. I was riding home late one night. As I passed through an open pasture I felt a breath of hot wind in my face and then Charger stopped and began to snort. It wasn't very dark and I could see in all directions. There wasn't a tree, a fence post or an object of any kind in sight, just the level land. But that horse stood there and shook until I thought he would fall over. I had to turn out of the road a quarter of a mile ahead. Charger was nervous all the rest of the way home.

"Afterwards I learned that there was a grave near the road in that pasture. The grave was not marked in any way, but the residents of the neighborhood were positive that a man had been buried there many years ago."

The farmer told of other similar experiences with Charger. They pointed to one conclusion: Charger always knew when he passed by a grave at night, and he saw spirits at other times.

"If I could have seen the ghosts, too, it wouldn't have been so bad," the farmer continued, "but it made me feel uncanny to know that Charger could see spirits that I couldn't see. I seldom rode or drove him at night that he didn't meet up with a spook.

"I'm out a good deal at night and I want a horse that has no insight at all into the spirit world. It's scary enough at night, any how, without having your horse reminding you that there's a spook in the road."

It is a well-known fact that animals often see spirits, and I have no doubt Charger was highly gifted in that direction. C. CHRISTE.

ILLIBERAL LIBERTY.

It Is Plainly Manifested in a "Liberal Club."

When a person magnifies his own qualities we naturally become suspicious of those qualities being real knowing that the true attainments of whatever nature have a tendency to make the possessor of them modest instead of boastful. Likewise, societies that boast of their philanthropy, progressiveness or liberality generally lack these qualities in practice.

We have an example of this in a society of this city, misnamed the "Liberal Club." Its members are all, or nearly all materialists, many of whom are great talkers, and some of them, chronic debaters. Having no platform nor stated belief in anything but their own individual opinions, its members are ready and anxious to debate any question for or against, if only for the fun it affords them, or to display their great oratorical talents. But although they are glad to debate any question under the sun with anybody it is when they succeed in getting a Christian, a Theosophist or a Spiritualist with whom to debate that they have the most fun.

To them the belief that man is an immortal spirit, or that there is a spirit world is so ridiculous and preposterous that the mere allusion to these things never fails to bring a broad grin to the faces of the members present, each one of whom is chock-full of quotations from materialistic philosophies that will answer any question and annihilate any opponent.

At a previous Sunday evening to the one to which I shall refer hereafter, Mr. Hall, representing the Prohibition Party, spoke at the club in opposition to W. C. Owen, one of its members, who agreed to sustain the proposition, "That the Prohibition movement is derogatory to personal liberty." Before the debate Mr. Bennett, acting chairman and champion debater of the Club, made a long, funny speech, in which he eulogized the Club members for their truth-loving qualities; for their impartiality and fairness to hear all sides of a question, and for their unexampled liberality in inviting a Christian, like Mr. Hall, to speak at their meeting.

Mr. Owen, in opening the debate, had no difficulty whatever in making plain to all present—at least to all the members of the club—that the Prohibition Party has done more than any other movement to curtail individual liberty. Throughout his speech he was listened to by all with the greatest attention and courtesy. But when Mr. Hall commenced to refute the sophistry of Mr. Owen's argument, all the "fairness, truth and liberty-loving" qualities of the Club members vanished. The speaker was continuously interrupted by interjections, and at one time it appeared as if all the members were talking at once. However, regardless the chairman's introductory "funny" speech, I doubt whether the vain, intellectual freebooters belonging to the Liberal Club felt the narrowness and incongruity of their behavior.

In accordance with the dominant wish of the members of the Club to get all the fun possible by non-plussing all that can be induced to speak for them, Professor Bowman was invited and advertised to speak last Sunday on "Spiritualism." He being well known as an able exponent of Spiritualism, a large attendance came to hear him. There were expectancy and subdued excitement visible on the faces of many of the Club members, who expected much fun, knowing that Mr. Bennett, their champion debater and annihilater of all arguments, was to speak in opposition to Professor Bowman.

After the basis of Spiritualism had been elucidated from an harmonial standpoint by Professor Bowman, he stated that Spiritualism has a scientific, philosophic and religious side, and that it is not based, as often supposed, upon a mental delusion, but upon personal evidence; and its philosophy sustained by reason. He admitted that there is much counterfeiting of its phenomena, but maintained that there is enough genuine to be found to prove Spiritualism. He was moderate and cautious throughout his entire address, and went so far as to commend the Club (which was a great mistake) for its liberality in allowing all opinions to be expressed from its platform.

Mr. Bennett then came forward with great gusto to reply to the arguments that had been made. He annihilated Spiritualism and the immortality of the soul first; then wound up his "flapdodel" oratory by reprimanding the Supreme Being of the universe, and finally wiped Him out of existence altogether. During the entire time he was talking he stood directly in front of the venerable Professor, who sat facing him on one of the front seats, addressing him personally; pointing one of his fingers in an impudent manner toward the face of Professor Bowman, as an accuser condemning a culprit, and occasionally looking over the audience in search of applause, which, by the way, never came.

The Club members as a whole, I am sure, felt ashamed of the conduct of their loud-mouthed professor.

There is a moral to be learned from the above incident: Next time you go to a materialistic, liberal club, do not go in a serious mood, but rather to have a good time poking fun at the absurdities of its professional reformers and its mushroom philosophers.

THE DEPARTED FRIEND.

Though he that ever kind and true
Kept stoutly step by step with you,
Your whole long, gusty lifetime thro',
Be gone awile before—
Be now a moment gone before,
Yet doubt not; anon the seasons shall restore
Your friend to you.

He has but turned a corner—still
He pushes on with right good will
Through mire and marsh, by heugh and hill,
That self-same arduous way—
That self-same upland, hopeful way
That you and he through many a doubtful day
Attempted still.

He is not dead—this friend—not dead,
But in the path we mortals tread
Got some few trifling steps ahead,
And nearer to the end.
So that you, too, once past the bend, shall meet again, as face to face, this friend
You fancy dead.

Push gaily on, strong heart; the while
You travel forward mile by mile,
He loiters with a backward smile
till you can overtake,
And strains his eyes to search his wake,
Or, whistling, as he sees you through the brake,
Waits on a stile.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

SPIRITUALISM IS DATA FOR [illegible] BANK'S UNDOING.

San Francisco Financiers Consulted Astral Syndicate, Says State.

San Francisco, Cal.—An astral syndicate, made up of the spirits of Jay Gould, C. P. Huntington, James G. Fair, and other dead financiers, directed the affairs of the wrecked California Safe Deposit and Trust Company, according to Prosecutor William Hoff Cook, who told the jury at the trial of Walter J. Bartnett yesterday that he would establish by direct evidence to what extreme Spiritualism had been carried in investigating the funds of the depositors.

Cook described the minutiae of dark-room seances which Bartnett, J. Dalzell Brown, President David J. Walker and other officers of the company attended with their wives, telling how a tapering trumpet went through eccentric twists in the center of a Spiritualistic circle presided over by Mollie Smith, a professional medium, and voiced messages which were applied to the material details of bank management.

"The power" or Spiritual syndicate, according to Cook, was quoted by Bartnett as advising the falsification of the books of the bank.

The above telegram to a Chicago paper from San Francisco, Cal., speaks for itself. That gigantic swindles have been perpetrated by alleged spirits at different times, every intelligent Spiritualist must admit. When Spiritualists learn that there is a very dark side to our Cause as well as one that is exceptionally bright, beautiful and soul-elevating, then they will realize its true status.

DIVINE WRIGHT.

AFTER DEATH.

Edwin Arnold, the celebrated English poet and journalist, is best remembered for his long poem "The Light of Asia," published in 1879. The extract below is from his "Pearls of the Faith" and is a paraphrase of Arabic verses quoted in "Palfrey's Travels in Africa." The word "Azan" in the third line is the Moslem name for the hour of afternoon prayer.

He made life—and he takes it—but instead
Gives more: praise the Restorer, Al Mu'hid!
He who died at Azan sends
This to comfort faithful friends:

Faithful friends! It lies, I know,
Pale and white and cold as snow;
And ye say, "Abdullah's dead!"
Weeping at my feet and head.
I can see your falling tears,
I can hear your cries and prayers,
Yet I smile and whisper this:
"I am not that thing you kiss;
Cease your tears and let it lie:
It was mine, it is not I."
Sweet friends! What the women lave
For its last bed in the grave
Is but a hut which I am quitting,
Is a garment no more fitting,
Is a cage from which at last
Like a hawk my soul has passed.
Love the inmate, not the room:
The wearer, not the garb; the plume
Of the falcon, not the bars
Which keep him from the splendid stars.

Loving friends! Be wise, and dry
Straightway every weeping eye;
What you lift upon the bier
Is not worth a single tear.
'Tis an empty sea-shell, one
Out of which the pearl is gone.
The shell is broken, it lies there;
The pearl, the all, the soul, is here
'Tis an earthen jar whose lid
Allah sealed, the while it hid
That treasure of his treasury,
A mind which loved him: let it lie!
Let the shard be earth's once more,
Since the gold shines in his store!

—Sir Edwin Arnold.

ALL THINGS SHALL BECOME NEW.

Dear ones who are drooping in sadness,
'Neath thought-waves of sorrow and woe;
Just look at the beautiful promise
God gives in the brilliant rainbow.
Dwell not in the valley of shadow,
Come forth in the glory of light,
For the All-Omnipotent Spirit,
Gave promise to banish the night.

Oh! dear ones, come out of the darkness,
If you have been weary and lone,
There's more in this beautiful earth-life
Than the crumb and pillow of stone;
There's a wideness, a richness and fullness,
A peace that shall ever abide,
There's joy in the knowledge of knowing
That Infinite Love, like a tide

Flows o'er us, dear ones, as the ocean
Sends foam-crested waves to the shore;
Let surges of life-giving water
Heal hearts that are wounded and sore.
There's never a shadow, but in it
A glimmer of light may be found;
There's never a sorrow so bitter,
But Infinite Love can surround.

Dear ones, there's a glory in living
In a world renewed like our own.
There's ever a gladness in giving
The best that we have, to be sown
Like grain that is scattered in springtime,
O'er the earth, its cradle to be,
So, only a thought-wave sent outward,
May cause fettered vision to see.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power, by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyance than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 24 Strathmore Rd., Brookline, Mass.

From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond,—what it it? What is its bearing on these present working years?" To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

THE GREAT DEBATE

Between

JOHN W. RING AND J. W. CHISM.

This work contains a six-day's discussion, in which Mr. Ring affirms the fundamental principles of Modern Spiritualism to be identical to the spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus the Christ—Chism denying.

In the second proposition, Mr. Chism affirms that all spiritual gifts ceased with the Apostolic age—Mr. Ring denying. This is a nicely cloth-bound volume, with title in gold letters and in addition to the discussion has a short biography of both disputants. Will be found intensely interesting. Price, $1, postpaid. CONDEMNS CHURCH AS HE LEAVES MINISTRY.

In Farewell Sermon Rev. E. C. Smoot Says Religious Organizations Are Losing Ground.

In leaving the ministry to take the lecture platform, the Rev. E. Calvert Smoot of the Second Unitarian Church San Francisco, Cal., made an unsparing condemnation, yesterday, of the modern church and modern theology. With his departure the society will disband and sell the property at 24th and Capp Sts.

That the modern church is losing ground because it is unprogressive and does not keep stride with the times was the conclusion of the Rev. Smoot on "The Church That Is."

The church its still under the guidance of a philosophy and theology, he said, that was founded before science and discovery had enlarged the conceptions of men as to the extent of the universe and of the world. Therefore, he believes, the church can not advance in thought. It is static while the world moves, and there is no room in the church for the man who reaches conclusions at variance with the established and accepted theological views. According to the speaker, it has ever been the last to accept a new idea, especially those born of science and has opposed the spread of new ideas with the cross, the stake, the dungeon, the anathemas, the ban. "The church is a human institution and every type of life fights for the preservation of life as it is."

Continuing the Rev. Smoot said:

"Men who on Sunday hear exhortation toward brotherly love go out on Monday and find themselves pitted against each other in business as enemies. The instinct of self-preservation makes everyone take care of himself, no matter what becomes of the other.

"Man dreads change because change means uncertainty, for he knows only that which he has experienced. This fact is responsible for the unprogressiveness of pulpit and pew. The church is founded upon a certain set of ideas and its ministers are expected to promulgate these ideas. When a minister reaches any conclusion which is subversive to these ideas he is expected to leave the pulpit. This is true of all denominations.

"From all over the land we hear the wail going up at prayer meetings, conferences, conventions and synods, deploring that the attendance at church is so small, and statistics bear this out—that the churches are not largely attended relatively. The reason is that the church is unprogressive and that there is little room for original thinking in the churches."—Bulletin, San Francisco, Cal.

LONGINGS FOR HOME.

I long to go back to the country so fair,
In the early sweet springtime of June;
Where the meadow lark's in the wild free air,
And Aeolian harps are in tune;
Where the raindrops like diamonds gleam bright on the trees
And the redbirds are pluming their wings,
'Tis there that my soul knows life's fullness of joy,
'Tis there my heart freely sings.

I long to go back to the meadows so rare,
Away down home on the farm,
Where wild roses blossom and ivy wild clings
To the home that shields me from harm.
'Twas there in the springtime of life I enshrined
In my heart, the fairest wild flower,
With petals of pearl, and with heart of pure gold
Growing wild in nature's fair bower.

How little I dreamed in that springtime of cheer,
That sorrow would ever betide;
I deemed that my love was so strong, so sincere,
'Twould shield her, my sweetheart, my bride.
But winter's chill blast struck a chill to her heart,
She faded and drooped like a flower,
Till angels in sweetness and pity came down
And bore her to heavenly bowers.

And yet, when I wander adown the old lane
Made sacred by memory and tears
My sweet spirit wild flower blooms brightly again
And a rainbow of promise appears.

THE WORLD TO COME.

"There Is Another World! And Fell Upon His Pillow Dead."

A distinguished German scholar who had devoted his faculties to what he claimed to be the demonstration of atheism came consistently to his death-bed. He was prepared, he said, to prove out of the expiring sparks of his own life that it must become a quenched and blackened flame. He observed the processes of dissolution calmly, with the long habit of the scientific method. Friends, themselves unbelieving and unhoping, stood about him, waiting to catch the last flicker of defiance from a soul to its God. For some hours he had lain unexpectedly silent, and with eyes closed. He had very dark, large eyes, piercing and powerful. Suddenly he opened them, and from their caverns shot out a fire before which the coldest scoffer in the room shrank back. With a loud voice the old scholar cried out:

"There IS another world!" and fell upon his pillow, dead.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in Harper's Bazar.

Simplicity forms a main ingredient in a noble nature.—Thucydides.

If you want to know the opinion of your neighbor, you want his honest opinion. You do not want to be deceived. You do not want to talk with ypocrite.—Ingersoll.

What Is Death?

A Highly Interesting and Suggestive Answer to the Question, by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C.

A city alley; tenement houses swarming with human beings, large and small; the signs of squalor and poverty everywhere—sin and crime are not unknown in that dingy lane, a poor place at best for the breeding of children, yet they abound in that locality. Little mites of humanity are tumbling over steps and each other, ragged and soiled, they show but little of the immortal soul that dwells within their dusty forms.

In a back room of one of the dirty tenements, a little girl lies dying; the surroundings are unattractive, all its conditions are foul and dingy. The child burns with fever and tosses to and fro without relief. All her little life she has known only want and the conditions of dire poverty; often extreme neglect; yet she has sang and danced and played in the streets and has not known the difference between happiness and misery. But she is dying; her father is away with other drunken companions; her mother, a bloated and miserable creature, watches the child in a half dazed and stupid wonderment. The little is oblivious to the surroundings, a soft haze—unseen by mortal eyes, envelopes her, in its cool meshes she is gradually growing quiet; the fever is lessening its hold upon her frame; a sense of something sweet, something so restful steals over her. It is so cool, so cool; not cold, like winter frost, not chilling like damp and gloom, but cool and beautiful and all the fevered pulses are becoming still. Death is in the air; the child is enmeshed by its delightful atmosphere, enthralled by its entrancing power. She is but six years old, yet she has lived long in experience in those half dozen years; she has learned much of hardship, of life's conditions, in home and street these things have come to her, things no child should know, but now she is drifting away from them, they have no part of the spiritual atmosphere which is slowly enveloping her.

Out of the mists, white forms appear. Tender faces are smiling at the little child; beautiful beings hold out beckoning hands to her; there are children among them and she smiles back to them. The unkempt mother does not see those forms, nor is the lovely mist apparent to her, but she does notice the smile upon the lips of her child, and is awed by it. The little one pays no attention to external things; she is gazing on other scenes now; a land of loveliness is opening to her consciousness. Now she feels herself being lifted in strong arms and folded to a gleaming breast; she is in the arms of a sweet woman and being borne away, far away, followed by those other bright beings who came in the shining mist. As she is thus traveling outward into the clearer and still clearer light and sweetness, still tenderly held in that motherly embrace, the child becomes insensible to her surroundings and in this magnetic slumber is borne to a beautiful pavilion in a garden of delight and placed upon a bed of snowy, fragrant flowers. Time passes, the tiny earth form is carried from sight; the mother for a day bemoans the death of her child, then becomes buried in her own sordid affairs, and soon the thought of the little life passes from her mind, for Maggie had been an unwelcome babe, and the woman had done her utmost to prevent its birth, and now that the burden has been removed, she has but little grief and no regret.

But What is Death? Where is the child of squalor and of ignorance? Not in the low vibrations and murky atmosphere of the parental quarters; not amid the crime and sin of a polluted city; not in dust and tears. A higher and grander force than that of mortality has swept in and has borne the child to other scenes and rates of vibration, where she will be quickened with finer activities, purer consciousness and environed by more beautiful conditions. During that magnetic sleep in the bower of roses, Maggie has changed vibrations and lost her childish connection between the old home life and her spiritual being. The mother, who had no welcome for her, was mother of the physical body only; she has no claim upon the spirit of this ascended one; yet in later years, when Maggie has acquired power and knowledge she will be attracted to the presence of this woman whom she once called mother, and by her soul intelligence and magnetism she will be instrumental in drawing that latent soul force to a spiritual and progressive consciousness and expression.

In time, Maggie awakens amid the flowers. She is happy and free from suffering. Everything around her is beautiful. A sweet lady bends over her, prettily dressed children with joyous faces are by her side; she is strong and feels perfectly well. She has no thought of the old life. Now she arises, and as the sweet lady makes passes over her form, the misty substance that enveloped her becomes shapened into a fleecy, beautiful gown. She is thus arrayed in light, and her own features are shining with beauty; her attendant holds a crystal bowl containing a foamy substance surrounded by an amber liquid; this sweetness she feeds to the child, and all sense of hunger is allayed. Now, the children beckon to this new comer and she is at happy play with them.

After awhile school lessons are in order, and Maggie takes her place with the others. The good lady is teacher as well as matron and caretaker, and the lessons are simple and full of interest, much like play. A home of peace and harmony, well appointed and of fine conditions is there; the children inhabit it, and the good lady cares for them. She was a tender, motherly, sensitive soul when on earth, one who was passionately fond of children, but to whom the joys of maternity were denied. She faded from earth, and the many sorrows that she knew, and had gravitated to this sweet home among kindred souls, where she had found her vocation in caring for the waifs that she could reach and bear from poverty and gloom to her home of love, light and peace.

Another Scene.

A ward in a children's hospital; the free ward where poor little sufferers receive care and treatment at the public expense. Maimed and crippled children are here, a score of incurables whose tiny forms are often racked with pain, yet they are cheerful, too, and bear their misery with fortitude and courage that many an older person might well imitate. The nurses, passing to and fro between the cots, are of kindly touch and gentle word. They are pleasant to look upon in their simple uniform of striped gingham gown and snowy cuffs, collar and apron; all is neat and tidy here, but suffering abounds and many a little heart herein is also lonely and forlorn. The hours come when the screen is placed first around one tiny bed and then another. The Angel of Death has come, little spirits are set free from their pain-racked bodies. Ministering spirits are there to take those little ones in charge and conduct them to happy homes above. There is no gloom in the rosy light that surrounds them, no chill of disease in the soft, sweet air of heaven, no crying with pain, no sobbing to sleep—all is beauty and comfort and joy. All who pass from this and similar places do not go to the same spot. Sanitariums, home schools, abiding places where love and protection abound, are in the great universe of spirit in plenty for all who come, and each is taken care of according to his needs and temperament. The law of life is the law of Nature, and the going out of the mortal is under the operation of this vast beneficent law and purely natural.

But we will turn our attention to the closing of the mortal life of one of these little sufferers; a newsboy but ten years old, and yet a buffeter with the world for his daily bread. Jimmie was brave, and he was cheerful even after they had amputated his feet, and he knew he would have to go through life with only stumps to walk upon. The accident that had mutilated him had injured others, too, and in his boyish sympathy he had frequently asked concerning their fate. A bright boy and full of fun. Jimmie had not lost it all when he emerged from the wreck and misery, but even now the brightness shone in his face and his words were those of cheer; but he was dying; vitality had not been sufficient to bear him through the ordeal, and he knew it as he said to his nurse, "I'm going somewhere, I guess, I don't know where, but if I have feet and hands there I know I'll get along." In the silence of the midnight hour he floated out, conscious only of a restful feeling in all his little frame, and above all that he had feet, and as the nurse bent over to catch his whisper, the words in feeble but glad tones, "I've got my feet," fell upon her ear. In that moment, Jimmie had gone. Let us watch him as he glides from sight; watch him with spiritual vision and not with eyes of earth; yes, he is there, and not alone. Happy beings are with him; they are taking him home; but he has feet and is gladly using them as he moves through space as naturally as a boy swims in the lake. Everything is bright and pleasant in his path; at once he feels at home with the physician who is by his side—one of the many benevolent souls in the higher life, who spend their time in doing good, and of the class that is naturally attracted to the hospitals and other institutions of earth where sickness and sorrow reign.

Jimmie, feeling fully at ease with this man, sensed rather than heard the question, "How are you now?" and responded in the old-time boyish spirit and vernacular, "Bully."

"Are you hungry?"

"No."

"What would you like most of anything?"

"A good swim."

"You shall have it," and in a moment the boy was in the centre of a beautiful, shining lake; the water was warm and soft; it gave him a delicious thrill, and as he moved about in its limpid waves it seemed to him as if it went through and through his frame; he scooped some of it in his hands; it was sweet as if mixed with some saccharine substance. It was all so strange to him, yet so pleasant and enticing. His conductor had not entered the water with him, but seemed to be floating just above its banks, and finally he floated down, caught the boy in his arms and placed him on the sward. Obeying an instinct, Jimmie shook himself as a spaniel would on emerging from a pond, and was surprised to find all moisture had vanished from his limbs and clothing, and now he oberved that his garments were fine and well shaped, handsomer than any he had ever possessed before, and that his hands were different from the little roughened members that he had possessed. Looking up at his guide, he said in an easy, off-hand tone, "Reckon I'm dead?"

"Yes, my boy, the earth people call you so, but you are all right; a new life is before you, and you are now going to your new home; we are already there. How do you like it?

At the entrance to what appeared to be a small temple of purest white substance that gleamed in the mellow light, they paused, and from its portals came trooping perhaps about a dozen children with happy faces and springing steps. Behind them stood a woman whose sweet face and loving expression gave Jimmie a modest, shy, yet sensitive longing, such as had been very foreign to his independent little heart. As the children gathered around him, his guide introduced him to each one as a brother who had come to live with them and share their studies and sports, and then the beautiful lady came forward and clasped him in her arms, calling him her own boy, and making him feel at home by her tender and loving welcome. We shall leave him here, at the Home Temple. No longer is he a street urchin, no longer a stray child without compass or guide, but at home amid conditions of love, harmony and peace, where the richest attributes of his being are fostered into strength and unfoldment, and the cruder conditions of human nature, belonging to the animal plane, are suppressed for want of nourishment and support. To him, Death has been a deliverer, the blessing and the benefactor, the opening of an endless round of progress, infinitely beautiful.

What is Death?

To the human spirit it is nothing to be feared. To the carthworn soul it is infinite gain. Not that all who have to meet it are at once ushered into gardens of delight or temples of beauty and homes of light. Many there are, who, because of their willingness to live amid the vibrations of sin or selfishness, find themselves engulfed in waves of darkness which have emanated from their own unholy lives.

Another Scene.

A beautiful apartment in a home of refinement and plenty; a dying child upon a bed draped in snowy linen and lace; a pretty little girl, perhaps eight years of age. Everything is in this home that heart could wish; cultivated minds, refined natures, gentle hearts, loving parents, harmony, peace and prosperity. An only and idolized child is dying and the parental hearts are rent with grief. A quiet hush pervades the room till the child arousing from her seeming slumber speaks.

"Mamma, dear, I was not asleep. I knew you and papa were here, but I saw such a beautiful place; lovelier than any you ever read to me about, or said we should visit when I grew up. I can't tell it mamma, but it isn't like heaven that you read of, it's more lovely for it has trees and flowers, and, oh! such grand buildings. I'm going there mamma. Don't cry. I'll never be sick there; no one ever is. I saw grandma, and she said I am to live with her. It's all right, mamma, dear."

We shall not linger over the dying scene, nor dwell upon the grief of the stricken parents, especially of that of the mother whose sensitive nature had been wrapped up in the life of her child. We are gazing behind the veil and watching how life fares with the ascended one. Again we behold beauty indescribable, light ineffable; homes of peace where all is sweetness and love. The little girl is there in one of these homes. During the day of earth she is drawn back to the parental home, is in the mother atmosphere, her innocent spirit bathing the stricken mother in rays of love. The child is there because her sensitive nature is attracted by the powerful force of the mother spirit, and it is the magnet that draws her earthward. By and by, when the mother life is adjusted to the spiritual conditions that the change has brought and thus becomes more reconciled, the child will not spend so much time in the earth home, but now it is her beneficent mission to be ministering angel there, and she is happy.

But at night, when the mother is asleep, she floats out from contact with the body, held to it only by a light, elastic magnetic cord, and comes into the realms of spirit. In her slumbers she beholds her child, clasps her to her heart, goes with her to the spirit country, visits the home of beauty there, enters the schools and halls of music where her darling is to be trained and developed, realizes that she is safe and happy and pure, and then at last returns to the pallid body, refreshed, peaceful and happy till she opens her eyes upon the empty chair and beholds the tokens of absence of the cherished form.

But this mother is growing spiritually. She knows that in her dreams she is with her loved one, and gradually a sense of peace is permeating her being. After awhile she will become clairvoyant and behold her child and others of the spirit with the inner sight; then she will use her talents and powers in good works; in one way and another she will accomplish much for humanity; she will be good to the poor and needy children that she meets, and at length will adopt a little waif and rear it to a useful and intelligent womanhood, because of the precious child that early went to the heavenly life.

Such is Death; a beneficent power, even in the grief which it creates, a power to beautify human hearts, stir them to nobler deeds and make them of blessing to the world, in memory and tribute to the dear ones that it bore away.

DOWN THE DEVIL.

The foundation of Altruistic Philosophy and Life.

Men say to me: "Mr. Strong, you write pointedly. Why do you not formulate principles and then construct your altruistic philosophy." I answer: "The principles on which I build were laid down by Buddha and Jesus, two and three thousand years ago." It is not a better basis men require, but the strength and courage to stand by the Golden Rule, first conveyed to the people by these ancient philosophers. "Whatsoever ye would have men do to you, do ye even so to them." For want of the knowledge of sound philosophy, based upon the wisdom manifest in eternal law, men and women are afraid to abandon selfishness and take their stand upon this old principle of justice and love.

A friend of mine wants to build a house to live in, he is afraid to venture, for the reason that he has not sufficient material. More of the material of which houses are constructed would give the man confidence to begin the work. More knowledge of nature (divine law) would remove the fear and doubt which keep men weak. Our selfish natures demand too much, while our crude and uncouth churlishness refuses to bestow. This condition of things keeps the race poor. Some are poor in pocket, very many are poor in the grace of generosity which is the greatest wealth. Very few are in possession of true liberality or the divine principle which operates in the Golden Rule. Do not misunderstand me. This principle is infinitely broader than the bestowment of material good.

When we begin to devise means for helping others, we are truly on the best line for self-improvement. Then it is that the material to build up character begins to accumulate. We then gradually lose fear and venture out upon the principle of eternal justice and love. This we may do with increasing courage. There is no shipwreck on this sea. This is not fancy. This is fact.

Those who hoard up for a happy old ago, shutting the fist tightly, will never see the happy old age. Happiness never comes that way. That is the path to the other condition, namely, disappointment and sorrow. Men and women are very anxiously longing for true happiness. Longing for it will never in itself bring true happiness nor any other desirable condition. This world is governed by law. Scientifically correct principles regulate all life. Cause and effect are inseparable and govern everywhere.

Get to the point in your own unfoldment, where you can plan in some humble way to make another happy. Secure the position where your soul delights in doing good and happiness begins to dawn, just as naturally as the faint sunlight appears in the early morning above the hilltop. This law operates in all grades of society, wholly apart from the weight of your purse or dimensions of your estate, or bank account. Begin with the kind word. Be slow to accuse. Be ready to forgive. Put forth the helping hand, but do not expect to get returns very quickly. Have the husbandman's confidence in the laws of nature. If you sow wheat, expect to reap wheat. If you sow thistles, don't expect roses. If love is the motive power, you will not weary in the good work. The harvest is certain to come. Begin to-day to sow good seed. Life is made up of little things. Speak kindly to that child in your path and catch its love vibration in return.

Help that cripple or aged person trying to make an honest living, selling some small wares. Let suffering humanity know that you have a heart of love and catch the "Thank you" by wireless phone. Thus the law operates in its simplest forms. The man who is kind and helpful at home and on the street, who is honest and truthful in business, who is performing his duty as a citizen, need not trouble about death and the grave, or the terrors of the judgment day. These find no place in sound philosophy.

A kindly disposed old man said to me not long ago, "Mr. Strong, the devil is after you. You are on the wrong track." Personally I have no fear of the devil from without, and I do love to down the devil within.

SUNSET.

(From the Spanish of the Mexican poet, Vicente Manuel Florente.)

It is the hour of love. Now silently
The day, departing, throws its last sad sheen
Upon the lemon grove, umbrageous, green—
A kiss divine from yonder sunset sky.
The fields with perfume breathe, with music sigh,
And woo the mind to reverie serene;
The meadow-lark's sweet lute now quivers keen;
The heart is lulled by evening's harmony.

The orange groves their odors sweet and strong
Yield lavishly; the dewy blossoms white
Unfold their petals to the subtle breeze,
Meanwhile the sun, inspirer of my song,
A monarch vanquished by the coming night,
His greatness hides behind the western seas.

—Alice Stone Blackwell, in Woman's Tribune.

There is not the least necessity in trying to prevent people from thinking. They are quite ready enough to be stupid or indifferent without any external inducements. The huge dead weight of established prejudices is amply sufficient. We may say that free thinking is not only right, but a duty. A man, that is, is bound to be as reasonable as he can.—Sir Leslie Stephens.

It costs more to revenge injuries than to bear them.—Latin.

THE ACT OF DYING.

"If One in Truth, Should Evade the Body in Such a Moment, Death Would Stand Chosen, as the Supreme Delight of Living."

The mere ultimate process of dying may be a relatively easy matter. Any person who has been long ill probably suffers more on any given day of his life than he will suffer in the act of departing from his body. It is probable that a broken bone, a delirious fever, a disordered vital organ may cause more anguish than the final struggle. I have my doubts whether the last pang is as bad as it seems. We are told by surgeons that chloroformed patients may give apparent evidence of acute agonies which they do not feel: death itself is often an anesthetic so merciful that what people call "living trouble" is obviously a worse matter.

I, for instance, who have never fainted and never been anesthetized in my life, have twice become from serious causes, unconscious for a short time, and I have often wished that I could make over to some recoiling soul whose name has been heard ringing upon the last roll-call, the unspeakable comfort which that brief experience has given me. There was no pang—no terror—no time, no chance for either. One seemed to slide gently and swiftly down a warm abyss, flower-scented, grass-grown, safe and beneficent, into unutterable content. One melted into peace. One drifted into ecstasy beside which the deepest joys of consciousness are poor, pale things. If one in truth should evade the body in such a moment, death would stand chosen as the supreme delight of living.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in Harper's Bazar.

SPIRIT VIBRATIONS.

Not seen are they in brightest light,
Not strong enough the power can be—
Seen only by clairvoyant sight,
And only heard by those who see.
Rejoicing now they are, to know,
How many are truth-seeking here,
Attracting to this plane below,
The stellar-lights of higher sphere.

A knowledge far beyond our ken,
Is waiting for development
By inspiration, word and pen,
And spirit-message, 'twill be sent—
What we call "wireless" here and now,
Vibrations are upon their plane,—
More of their laws we soon shall know,
True psychics will these truths obtain.

Those bright ones who for long time past
Began the highest heights to climb,
Are ready to send back, at last,
Vibrations on the waves of time,
Enabling those who can, to teach
Step after step, to those who seek Instruction—which will help them reach
The higher plane, by words they speak.

How far above our mortal thought,
The knowledge which they now have gained.
All earth-clogs left—a freedom brought,
All power to understand attained.
Now, gladly they would give us light,
Showing us how to comprehend
So many things beyond our sight,
So far removed from earthly trend.

In this way only shall we see
The light that o'er that pathway shines;
By this way only can we be Prepared to reach those happy climes.
Sometimes on earth we strike the chords,
Vibrations reach to where they live,
Reflected back we hear the words,
In messages true psychics give,

Which comfort, and give strength to bear
The burdens of this earthly lot,
Which help to lift the weight of care
And drive away the saddening thought,
Alternate lights and shadows form,
Thus rounding out our human life,
Not sunshine all—but sometimes storm;
Not peace alone—but sometimes strife.

DR. L. M. ENTWISTLE.

The Excommunication of Count Leo Tolstoy.

Count Leo Tolstoy, the famous author and advocate of peace, occupies a unique position in Russia because of his absolute freedom of utterance. He has not failed to denounce the shortcomings of the government, and he has not spared persons in authority from his stinging criticisms. The reactionaries in Russia would be glad to suppress him, and they would summarily do so were he not the world figure which he is. They are well aware that any move against him would bring down upon them the denunciation of the entire civilized world. The count was indeed punished to the extent of excommunication by the holy synod of the Russian Greek church, but this did not cause him much anxiety. Attempts were made to persuade the czar to effect a reconciliation between Tolstoy and the church. The czar askedone of his nephews to write a letter to Tolstoy with that end in view. The count, however, sent a vigorous reply to the czar in person, in which he called upon his majesty to mend his ways and to follow and realize the words and example of Christ. In order to enable the emperor to do this he submitted a set of rules for his guidance. These rules appear to have considerable merit, and it is to be hoped that the emperor will give them due consideration.

In wonder all philosophy [say religion] began, in wonder it ends, and admiration fills up the interspace; but the first wonder is the offspring of ignorance, the last is the parent of adoration.—Coleridge.

Religion of the Aztecs, Its Parallels in Roman Catholicism

"Judge Ladd of California turned the light of legal evidence on Christian Origins, and found no reliable proof that such a person as the ecclesiastical Jesus ever lived."—Progressive Thinker, March 21, 1908.

When Bishop Las Casas took possession of this bishopric in Yucatan in 1545 he sent a friar named Francisco Hernandez on a missionary tour Some time after, so the bishop relates, the friar reported a conversation he had held with one of the nobles who exhibited paintings showing that the Aztecs believed in a Trinity, one in three, three in one; that the Father had created man; that the Son was born of a virgin, was scourged, crowned with thorns and crucified with his arms extended, on a beam of wood, to which he was tied, and where he died for the sins of mankind. He remained three days and then came to life and ascended into heaven where he is with his Father. The Holy Ghost then came and filled the earth with everything it needed. The holy bishop adds: "I remember that, being in Chiquisaca, an honorable priest showed me an information, which I had long in my hands, when it was proved that there was a certain Oratory whereat the Mexicans did worship an idol which they said was one in three, three in one." And as this priest stood amazed thereat, I said that the devil by his infernal and obstinate pride (whereby he always pretends to make himself God), did steal all that he could from the truth to employ it in his lyings and deceits."

Prescott says: "The Spaniards met with the cross in various places, and the image of a cross may be seen at this day, sculptured in bas-relief on the walls of one of the buildings of Palenque, while a figure, bearing some resemblanve to that of a child, is held up to it as if in adoration."

The Spaniards found the cross in every country south of Florida. Jesuit Acosta says that Quetzalcoatl was born "in their first month, answering to our December; they then celebrated a solemn feast called Capacrayme, wherein they made sacrifices and ceremonies which continued many days." Humboldt thinks he was born during their third cycle, as he saw a painting representing him "appeasing the wrath of the gods, when, 13,060 years after the creation of the world, a great famine prevailed in Culau."

Of his life, few records remain though all historians agree that there had been a complete history, but there are some incidents during his manhood that may appear familiar to readers of the New Testament. Speaking of some of these, Kingsborough says: "The TEMPTATION of Quetzalcoatl, the FAST OF FORTY DAYS, the CUP with which he was presented to drink, with many others relating to him, WHICH ARE HERE OMITTED, are very curious and mysterious."

Torquemada, in his history, speaks as follows of one of his journeys: "Coming to a place called Quanhtitlan, where was a large, thick and lofty tree, he leaned against its trunk and desired one of his pages to hand him a mirror, which, looking into, and perceiving himself older than he was before, he exclaimed, 'I have become old,' and gathering up stones from the ground, flung them at the tree. From this place he passed on and was accompanied the whole of the way by a great multitude of people playing flutes and other instruments. He arrived at another place, which was a hill adjoining the city where he sat down on a stone and laid his hands upon it and left their impressions there, the marks of which are at present day quite visible." Torquemada wrote his history about 1600.

On this journey Quetzalcoatl is credited with having cured the blind and lame.

Now, Father Schagun—about 1560—says that the tree referred to was called "Pochult," which means "barren," and orthodox Kingsborough commenting on it, remarks: "How many incidents analogous to those which are related in the Gospels of Christ, occur in this short passage. The withered fig-tree; the crowd which followed him strewing branches in his way, singing hosannas; his custom of sitting on the ground and discoursing with the people and the disciples by whom he was attended. * * * If more of his history and the action of his life had been preserved, we cannot tell where these analogies would have ceased."

In his remarkable work, Kingsborough gives us many copies of paintings taken from the vatican and Borgian MSS. showing the crucifixion. In one "he is represented as being crucified between two persons who are in the act of reviling him, and who hold as it would appear, halters in their hands, the symbols, perhaps, of some crime for which they themselves were going to suffer." On page 73 of the same MSS. (Borgian) he is crucified on a cross of the Greek form, with impressions of nails in his hands and feet and also his burial and decent into hell. On the 4th and 72nd pages he is nailed to the cross as "atonement for the sins of mankind." The 75th shows him crucified within a circle of 19 stars, while a serpent is emasculating him. This is positive evidence of phallic worship. The 61st and the 9th in the collection at Bologna show him with his side pierced by a spear and water flowing from the wound.

Commenting on these Kingsborough says: "It is remarkable that in these Mexican paintings the faces of many of the figures are black; and that the visage of Quetzalcoatl is frequently painted in a very deformed manner." This is strong evidence of their Eastern origin. The Aztecs were not black, but Chrishna is frequently represented as a negro; black images of crucified men, admittedly of Eastern origin were found in Italy; the Idol, representing Jesus, now in Rome, and reverenced as a miracle worker, is black. The white of the eyes disproves the claim that the figure was discolored by incense. K. R. H. Mackenzie, no mean observer, says: "From the woolly texture of the hair I am inclined to assign to the Buddha of India, the Fuhi of China, the Sommonacom of the Siamese, the Xaha of the Japanese, and the Quetzalcoatl of the Mexicans, the same, and indeed an African, or rather Nubian origin." He might have added, "and the Jesus Christ of the Christians."

Various paintings, too numerous to mention here, show that the earth was rent and the sun darkened at the crucifixion. His resurrection and ascension are also to be found in the Borgian MS.

Both Humboldt and Prescott, as well as the Spanish writers, agree that the Aztecs were Second Adventists, and to this may be attributed the easy conquest of their country, as they fully expected his return, not like the Christians "on a white horse," but from the East; he departed for the East; he was to return from the East. Jesuit Acosta says: "In the beginning of the year 1518, they (the Mexicans) discovered a fleet at sea in which was the Marquis Del Valla, Don Fernando Cortez, with his companions; a news that much troubled Montezuma; and conferring with his council they all said that without doubt this great and ancient Lord Quetzalcoatl was come, who had said that he would return from the East, whither he had gone." And Kingsborough says: "But his second coming, after the lapse of a long period of time (over 5,000 years) is an enigmatical piece of history which it is not probable will speedily be explained."

Page 76 of the Borgian MS. represents the scene of the "Last day and the dead awakened by the sound of a trumpet." Diaz, one of the conquerors, tells us that when the Spaniards opened the graves, searching for treasures, and scattered the bones, the Aztecs entreated them to desist, because "on the last day the bones would be re-united in the resurrection," prior to the total destruction of the world.

Kingsborough is surprised to find such similarity in the titles of the Aztec and the Christian God. He says: "With respect to the appellation Mesi or Mestli, the name by which he was known among the Mexicans, it is remarkable that it is precisely the same as "anointed," which is applied by Christians to Christ." He was also called "Our Dearly Beloved Son," and the Inquisition boldly changed another of his names from Teopilitzin (the Son of God) to Topilitzin (our Son). As it is claimed that Jesus is depicted in the Bible under many types, Kingsborough thinks "it very strange" that the Aztec God should have similar ones: 'The Morning Star,' 'Light,' 'The Vine,' 'Our Bread,' and others."

As the earth experiences, as far as the Inquisition have allowed them to reach us, of the Aztec God, are so similar to those of the Judean Savior, it is reasonable to suppose that the rites and ceremonies of their respective religions should correspond.

Jesuit Acosta says: "The Mexicans had an infinite number of ceremonies and customs which resembled the ancient law of Moses, and some approached near to the law of the Gospel; as the baths, or opacuna, as they call them; they did wash themselves in water to cleanse them from their sins." It was called "the water of regeneration," and Martyr says: "The priests seem to baptize children with holy ceremonies, pouring water crosswise out of a cruet upon their heads, saying: 'May this bath wash away and remove the stain of defilement which thou derivest from thy parents'." This ceremony was also called "to be born again," and during it, the child was named, several sponsors vouching for its good conduct. Priest Sahagun gives a detailed account of this ceremony, as an eyewitness to it.

They also had auricular confession. Jesuit Acosta remarks: "The father of lies would likewise counterfeit the sacrament of confession, and in his idolatries seek to be honored by ceremonies very like to the manner of Christians." The priest becomes exceedingly wroth when he discovers how "very like" this is to the sacrament of the "Holy church" and he calls their confessors, and penitents dupes; scouts their claim that "the confession was held a secret," wonders how his satanic majesty managed to impress on "these poor and deluded people" that the most grievous sins were "to be forgetful in reverence to their priests, and not to obey them, and not to observe the fasts and feasts of their church." He concludes by saying, as if astounded at the information: "They (the penitents) received penance; yea, sometimes very sharply, especially especially when the offender was a poor man and had nothing to give his confessor."

This confession carried with it an absolution and forgiveness for all sins. It was in reality an "Indulgence" and was received in place of the legal punishment for offenses, and authorized an acquittal in case of arrest. But it was granted only once during a lifetime, which seems to be an improvement on "Holy Mother Church" who is always lavish in these favors, for a small consideration. Prescott informs us that "long after the conquest the simple natives, when they came under the arm of the law, sought to escape by producing a certificate of their confession."

There was money to be made in indulgences; the Aztecs were accustomed to the scheme, as the church, in the plenitude of its mercy, flooded the country with them. But Philip II. kicked in the traces and demanded a share of the booty. So an arrangement was made whereby he bought them at wholesale, from the pope, shipped them to America, where his agents peddled them out to the natives. During the reign of Elizabeth, Captain Thomas White, a Londoner, captured two Spanish ships having on board two millions of papal indulgences. They were invoiced as having cost Philip 300,000 florins and were marked to sell at various prices, showing a net profit of five millions (5,000,000) of florins. The florin of that time was worth about fifty cents of our money, but as money then had at least ten times the purchasing power of to-day, it was not a bad speculation for either pope or king.

The Aztecs also celebrated the "Lord's Supper." Jesuit Acosta almost had a fit when he discovered it. And he does pitch into the devil: Poor devil! Of how many crimes you are accused? Acosta says: "That which is most admirable in the hatred and presumption of Satan is, that he has not only counterfeited in idolatry and sacrifice, but also in certain ceremonies, our sacraments, which Jesus Christ our Lord has instituted and the Holy church does use, having especially pretended to imitate in some sort the sacrament of the communion, which is the most high and divine of all others."

Let us see how far the Aztecs imitated the papists in this "most high and divine" cannibal feast.

In the Codex Vaticanus there is a copy of an ancient Mexican picture showing the celebration. "The virgins came out of their convent, bringing pieces of paste (made of corn meal). Placing themselves in order about these morsels, they performed certain ceremonies with singing and dancing, by means whereof the pieces were blessed and consecrated for the flesh and bones of this idol." The people then gathered together, the priest blessed the morsels and taking a thorn, for the pieces were too holy to be touched by human, he placed a small piece on the extended tongue of the communicant. The Aztecs insisted that in this communion "they did eat the flesh and bones of God."

So similar to the mass is this picture, that the commentator of it, after vainly attempting to explain away the similarity, adds: "I am disposed to believe that these poor people have had the knowledge of our mode of communion or the annunciation of the gospel; or perhaps the devil, most envious of the honor of God, may have led them into this superstition, in order that by this ceremony he might be adored and served as Christ our Lord" The 4th and 74th pages of the Borgian MS. also represent the ceremony of "eating the body and drinking the blood of their god."

The similarity of the two systems is apparent, and as the Aztecs had been practising theirs for several thousands of years before the Christian era, it is not difficult to discover who is the infringer. Even up to today, the "host" is manufactured by nuns in certain convents. In the earlier days, any old loaf of bread was utilized. This is testified to by Pope St. Gregory I—the Great—590-604) who speaks of the doubts of a woman of his congregation about a loaf that she had made having been turned into a god. For several centuries thereafter the "mass" was always celebrated by singing and dancing. Innovations crept in; this pope and that pope added new ceremonies, but its sacro-sanct character was not fully established till the pontificate of Leo X. (1513-21), who, according to the testimony of his secretary, Cardinal Bembo, once remarked: "This fable of Jesus Christ has done us good service."

In speaking to-day with any papal theologian, you will be assured that the "host" is a symbol; that the communicant partakes of the substance of Jesus. This substance is the spiritual part, the life essence of their god, and not his actual human body. But this explanation is a manifest lie.

Prior to the Council of Trent in the sixteenth century, the papal faith was a jumble. Popes, councils and theologians differed. The various religious orders were in heated debate, each advocating some theory of their own. Every pope had his own ideas, and as he had formerly been a member of some order, he advocated the side of his order. Hence it is that there is no decree or "bull" of any one pope to which a counter decree or "bull" of some other pope may not be quoted.

This Council of Trent attempted to regulate these various differences, and when they reached the subject of the Eucharist, it was decided, by a small majority, that after the priest had pronounced the mystic words the host was changed into the body of Jesus—the veritable human body. Their words were "Into the veritable body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; Christ in his entirety; Christ as he suffered on Mount Calvary for our sins."

When mankind became more enlightened, the absurdity of this cannibalistic feast became apparent, and papists were called "Christ eaters." Then theologians discovered that the "host" was not the "veritable body of Christ" but simply his spiritual nature. But turn to the mass in any papal prayer-book and it will be found that in administering this sacrament, the priest, as he places the wafer on the outstretched tongue of the communicant, says: "Corpus Domini nosti Jesu Christi custodiat animam tuam in vitam eternam, amen." "May the BODY of our Lord Jesus Christ preserve your soul in eternal life." "Corpus" means "a body," "a human body." Yes, the Aztecs ate the flesh of their God, Quetzalcoatl, and the papists eat the flesh of their God, Jesus Christ.

"The rites of marriage," says Prescott, of the Aztecs, "were celebrated with as much formality as in any Christian church, and the institution was held in such reverence that a tribunal was instituted for the sole purpose of determining questions relating to it. Divorces could not be obtained until authorized by a sentence of this court, after a patient hearing of the parties." As in their political economy marriages were considered to be not only for the convenience of the interested parties, but for the ultimate benefit of the state, no fee was charged for the ceremony, and Jesuit Acosta ruminates: "Although it seems that many of their ceremonies agree with ours, yet differ they much."

Let us compare the papal system with the Aztec. When the papal church became consolidated as a political and a spiritual power, the leaders recognized the great hold they would have on the laity by turning a civil contract into a spiritual one, and making it a sacrament that could be administered only by a priest. And to still further strengthen themselves they decided that the validity of all sacraments depended entirely on the "intention" of the officiating priest, who could secretly, and of his own volition render it null and void by simply not concentrating his mind on the sacrament he was administering. There is absolutely no doubt of the truth of this statement; consequently no papist knows, for a positive certainty, if he has been canonically married.

The only authority—if it may be thus dignified—that they had for this change of sacrament, was the marriage feast at Cana, when Jesus is supposed to have gone into the distilling business and made enough strong wine to intoxicate all the guests. The declaration of the indissolubility of the tie is a manifest fraud. Jesus, if he ever lived, never made such a statement. It is a monkish forgery of the eleventh, possibly even the thirteenth, century.

History teems with instances of papal decrees for divorces, given on the most frivolous pretexts, in which the woman always suffered, and sometimes there was no pretext except the desire to change a bed-fellow. And these decrees always cost money. For political reasons and even in order to keep property in a family, men have been allowed to marry their sisters. If any papist in authority chooses to deny this, I am prepared to quote my authorities.

Rome has no regard for the sanctity of marriage. She looks on woman as simply a plaything for man. Motherhood, looked upon by all decent men as the culmination of a great mystery, is viewed by Rome as a crime. The mother has become an unclean thing, who needs purification before she may be admitted into the presence of even an adulterous priest. And from this infamous charge the priests have not spared even the mother of their God.

Priests are debarred from marriage, but they may keep concubines provided they pay their bishop for the privilege. This monetary tax is called "Cullaglum." I call as my witness to this St. Alfonso Maria de Liguori.

This gentleman—I mean saint—founded the Order of Redemptionist out of which the Paulists sprang. He wrote a moral theology and several books advocating Mary to be superior to God, and then went on a protracted visit to that lady in 1787. Gregory XVI. canonized him in 1839; Pius IX. created him a doctor of the church in 1871. So he is a modern saint and is supposed to be "up" in papal theology. In reviewing his works, the Holy Penitentiary, the highest authority in the church, whose decisions are always reviewed and approved by the pope, in order to make them valid and binding, decreed that "An opinion being in St. Liguori's writing is amble warrant for its adoption, without any need to weigh the reasons."

GRADUATING FROM CHILDHOOD.

And Rising to a Higher Plane of Thought and Action.

The time has come when Spiritualism will have to take higher ground. We have spent much time in criticising the old school. There has been good cause for all that has been said. Part of the trouble has been in ourselves and part in the creeds. Having cut free from the bondage and restraints of a crude system, men and women have promptly set to work to abuse the forces which hold them, forgetting that they themselves were most to blame. Having now received the light, "let us walk as children of the light." We are not yet full grown men and women. Are we not still fretful and restless, like children troubled with the prickly heat? Have we got over the whooping cough and measles and the constant whining associated with cutting teeth? It is common for children who are improperly trained to foster strife, jealousy and envy, to pout and grin.

A man who was a power according to ancient history, has said, "When I became a man I put away childish things." We greatly prize the fact that we are on speaking terms with the great of the ages. Then, shall we not do honor to our co-workers from the higher vibration? How can the world accept our high philosophy, unless it is manifest in our every-day conduct toward each other and toward our enemies? "By their fruits ye shall know them," must still be the great test.

Do we desire to win souls to truth and righteousness wherever we go? Then let us be wise and patient, kind and gentle, strong and loving. Let our everyday life be filled with helpfulness. Let us not impress our friends in the churches with the great distance there is between them and us, but let us first find the common ground of agreement in a common humanity.

The beautiful teaching of our common Master, the Man of Galilee, will furnish the material for bridge building. "He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, yet he opened not his mouth." "When he was reviled, he reviled not again." His love for his enemies has made the world adore him. The vibration of that love has been a power through ages.

Let us build the bridge low and easy of access, so that the people may find it easy to cross the gulf between the old and the new. Let us be students of human nature, offending none. This does not mean that we need to compromise principle. The strong can best minister to the weak, without fouling their garments.

Every time we pander to lust, selfishness and low pleasure we lose strength for service and suffer a setback in the great work.

Arise, shine! Let the Lamp of Truth burn brightly in us, that the storm-tossed soul, seeking the harbor, may catch our light and "pull for the shore."

Let us give a full share of credit to the lights of the ages, Joseph and Daniel, Buddha and Jesus, Paul and John Wesley. At the same time, let us rise so that we may prove that all good is in the humanity of to-day, that life is progressive, and that the angels have come with the key to open the door to the great brotherhood of the race.

MYSTERIOUS WOMAN FACES THE CAMERA.

Strange and Perplexing Case of Possible Spiritism.—South Water St. People Agitated Over the Revelation of a Photograph—Prof. Hyslop To Be Consulted—Interesting Case.

Where did the mysterious woman come from? Is she of the earth or of the spirit land?

If anyone can solve the appearance of a third woman in a photograph made of two women they will find a hearty welcome at 311 South Water Street.

Professor Jesse Todd, the photographer, lives in this house. He is the same man who innocently offended some parties in Riverside park last year by making a photograph of a mermaid for a magazine contest.

This spring Mr. Todd was married to Mrs. Clara Butterfield. They have a handsome home with a colonial porch having large and beautiful white columns.

The home had never been photographed and it was natural enough that Mrs. Todd asked her husband to bring down his camera and make a picture of it. He did so very willingly.

Mrs. Todd has a neighbor—a woman. Ladies are naturally not disinclined to have their pictures taken and so when Mrs. Todd called her neighbor out to be in the picture, she came very willingly and tried her best smile.

When the negative was developed Professor Todd opened his eyes until they showed as white as goose eggs. He wondered who the third woman was. She looked almost exactly like his wife, but there was Mrs. Todd as distinctly as any picture that was ever hade. He quietly called Hubert Child into conference with him, and Hubert's eyes opened wide and big, too, for he had seen the photograph taken and knew that only two women posed for it. Mrs. Child and other parties were witnesses also. All of them are willing to go before a notary and swear that there were only two women in sight when James Todd took that picture. Mr. Child called in a reporter for the Eagle, and both of them took a magnifying glass to see whether they could explain the mystery of the camera. The third and mysterious woman is so near like Mrs. Todd that they thought at first that it was her reflection that was photographed. They then noticed other things that knocked their first theory out of joint. The figure of the third woman was really nearer to the camera than Mrs. Todd and she was leaning up against one of the white columns. Then it was figured out that it might have been that Mrs. Todd's figure was mirrored on the white column, but two proofs were developed against that theory of the case. The first one was that the gauzy skirt of the magic woman was in front of the patent foundation of the porch and the square cement stones could be easily distinguished through it with a magnifying glass. Besides that her elbow was seen on the other side of the column.

Mr. Child is sending one of the photographs to Professor Hyslop, a great authority on such subjects, and one of the best modern physicists in the United States.

Mr. Child has been converted to the theory that the third woman is the spirit picture of Mrs. Todd's sister, Bertha, who died several years ago. She looked very much like Mrs. Todd. It is known that through mediumistic control Bertha has often called for her sister Clara, who is Mrs. Todd. That, at least, is the story told now by well known Spiritualists—people who are intelligent and honest in that belief.

Late last evening it was again discovered that while Mrs. Todd wore a black belt in the picture the mystic woman had no belt on and was dressed in pure white.

The Eagle reporter who looked into the case with Mr. Child believes there is an explanation of all these things. but for the present everybody is stumped over it.—Wichita Eagle, Kansas, June 27, 1908.

SOMETIME.

Dedicated to the Spiritualist Society, San Diego, Cal.

Sometime,—ah, mystic realm that holds
So much, to run into Life's molds,—
The essence sweet, the toils we meet,
And more, is hidden in its folds.

Sometime, we'll speak the kindly word,
To stay the wrath that malice stirr'd;—
Sometime,—but when? We wait, and then
We speak, but oh, it is not heard.

Sometime, we'll learn that each is best,
That none is better than the rest;
That Nature's grace, to each in place,
Fulfills the Soul's desirous quest.

Sometime, we'll see the blinding "beam"
In self, that takes the mote, to seem
A great mistake that "others" make,
And we will look with Pity's gleam.

Sometime,—perchance,—we'll understand
That clouds are God's outstretched hand;
We'll do our best, and trust the rest,
For Law doth move, with firm command.

Sometime, within the blinding tear
We'll see the face we hold so dear;
The mirrored smile, a little while,
Will soothe our pent, rebellious fear.

Sometime,—ah, would that it were NOW,
When kept would be each goodly vow;
The heart's great need, well filled indeed
Would be, if just,—sometime, were NOW.

PARAGRAPHETIC.

The greatest awakening the world ever knew is before us. Ignorant and creedbound spirits beyond the veil are clamoring for light, and, like a drowning man, will grasp at a straw; and mortals must, with their thoughts and examples, start them on the right road.

The changes, experiences and vicissitudes in life bring out its possibilities; if it were otherwise man would die of dry rot; their languages would be localisms, and aspiration would be non est.

Soul-prayers may raise men's souls above the groveling and plodding every-day existence, on to happier spheres, for the time being, and possibly leave its blessing; but like our solar orb, a central power of the universe keeps its distance.

Religion is the same throughout the world, but creeds, beliefs, ceremonies and orgies differ.

The selfish man who overestimates his own identity, will leave in to-day's boat, together with the anti-reincarnationist who stoically denies the possibilities of things unknown to him, and abuses others for believing. The battle-ax and hell-sermons left on yesterday's boat. The "saving grace" and unwarranted notions about warring, jealous and loving gods will sail in tomorrow's boat, while none carry return tickets.

Great thoughts are at times greater than the mortal who utters them. Accept the thoughts and be benefited, and thank the instrument for its utterances.

The majority of spirits passed from our mortal sight during the last century, do not need to "come back" to communicate, as time and space is of non-existence in the land of souls.

Do not unfeelingly condemn a fellow-mortal, for there are young, inexperienced souls who cannot stand the temptations the older souls can withstand; for there are aged souls, mature, and also untutored souls clothed in physical forms in the same age, just like there are sturdy old oaks in the forest, and saplings growing at their sides.

The Sumatra uran-utang can build his own shelter, although but an animal; the Southern Bornean, though a biped, cannot.

Here we find an animal with intellect, and a man with but a feeble instinct.

No avocation is lowly if it is honest; no elevated station honors its possessor unless it is honestly conducted; for as Pope has written, "Honor and shame from no condition rise; act well your part, therein all the honor lies."

Geology is the a b c of our education; its strata the foundation of our vast planet, and the birth-place of all that we are to-day. All of our opportunities are derived therefrom, until we have occasional glimpses of a new state of life beyond.

A greedy, jealous and envious mortal can never be beautiful; but as beauty is considered only skin deep, he ought to be skinned to see if the saying holds good.

Wireless telegraphy, with its vibration through space, may in time be utilized so that similar vibrations may be transmitted from the spirit spheres to mortals.

Modern vanity of countless titles does not changeblood, while titled ancestry encourages conceit, about which Pope wrote: "And then you prate about your noble blood, which has run through scoundrels ever since the flood."

In dealings between men, where one is a great gainer, the other party is generally a great loser—hence, in such a case, it becomes a dishonest deal.

Everyone's experience proves that among our fellow-mortals are many cruel and selfish beings, therefore let us try not to be cruel or selfish ourselves, for even the courts do not punish in revenge, but for safety to others. The essayist writes; "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." Let us not be one of him.

When the age arrives that ostentation and display, which causes jealousy and bitterness, is outgrown, and when man works for the upbuilding of self and his brother man, then the harmonial age, or millennium, is not far off.

WHEN I GET INTO BED.

I'm never frightened in the dark,
Though I am very small;
I never sit all scared, and bark
For ogres in the hall;
But when my prayers are said
I have one awful dread,
That something waits to grab my toes
When I get into bed!

I try to think of pleasant things
Each time I get undressed;
And how each day no evil brings
If children do their best;
But the thought comes in my head,
As I'm turning down the spread,
That something's going to grab my toes
When I climb into bed!

And when there's nothing more to do
With bed-clothes open wide,
It makes me shiver through and through
A-trying to decide
Which foot shall go ahead,
Cause I'm sure I'd tumble dead
If something ever grabbed my toes
As I got into bed.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Haro in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Charles Bailey.

Another Account of the Remarkable Manifestations Occurring in His Presence, Followed by a Lecture on "Atoms and Ether."

Mr. T. W. Stanford's Seances With the Medium, Charles Bailey

(By Mrs. Charles Bright.)

It is beginning to be seen by investigators all over the world that there is nothing that so effectually opens the mind of the unbeliever to psychic realities as the demonstration of the imponderability of matter. For myself it has been a settled conviction for years that a new and scientific basis for the spiritual philosophy was necessary if it is to fulfil its mission to the world. After a while, as many Spiritualists affirm, the limit of so-called "message-giving" is reached, and the earnest inquirer wants something more than the restricted ground to which he is chained thereby. So it is a source of satisfaction to everyone concerned to find that the supplements of "apports" brought to Mr. Stanford's circles are compelling world-wide attention. Letters by the latest mails from America and South Africa contain requests for photos of the "apports" to be reproduced in lantern slides for courses of lectures by distinguished speakers. Others say how the supplements are cherished and framed for illustrating to unbelievers some of the potent forces at work behind the scenes.

Since our last issue the chief events have been the bringing of "apports," two of which are reproduced in the supplement, from Borneo. It was on the evening of March 20, after an interregnum of four weeks in the sittings, that the first one—a native dress worn by the Dyaks of Borneo and neighboring islands—was brought. It was said to belong to a native chief, and made of finely woven grass, followed on the succeeding evening by a dress worn by one of the native women of similar construction. Special conditions were asked for, such as the uniting of the hands of the sitters and much singing. But, as usual, the addresses, of which one by Professor W. K. Clifford on "Atoms and Ether," is given below, proved the most remarkable test of the medium's psychic's powers. From far and near has come such keen appreciation of Professor Clifford's address in the April issue on "Atoms" that the concluding one on this subject has been selected as of prime importance.

The following is a brief account of addresses and phenomena continued from April issue:

80th Seance.—Feb. 21. Address by Professor W. K. Clifford on "Atoms and Ether," as printed below, a sequel to "Atoms" in the April issue. Phenomena. Lump of clay with mosaics. Nest, which was said to be luminous in the dark from phosphorence in the mud and twigs composing it. Seed for tree grown sixteen inches high in less than half an hour; photographed in April issue.

81st Seance.—March 20. After an interval of four weeks. Address, Signor Valetti, "The Shadow of the Unseen." Phenomena. Lump of clay with mosaics. Native chief's dress from Borneo.

83rd Seance.—April 3. In memoriam, address by Signor Valetti. Phenomena. Lump of clay with mosaics. Belt made from skin of Rock Python, ornamented with the foot of a Cassowary. It is one of the illustrations in the supplement of this issue. Manuscript from the Himalayas about Alexander the Great in Greek.

ATOMS AND ETHER.

An Address Delivered by Professor W. K. Clifford, on Friday Evening, Feb. 21. 1908.

[Specially reported by Miss M. Wilson, shorthand writer and typist, premier buildings, Collins street, Melbourne.]

I will continue my last address to you and will call it "Atoms and Ether." I presume that all present tonight were here on the last occasion. If so, you will remember that scientists tell us that matter is composed of molecules, atoms and electrons. The electrons, you will remember. I said were electrified points carried in the atoms. To-night I am going to let you into a secret not known to scientific men on the earth plane, but will assuredly be known sooner or later. It is believed by scientific men that atoms are the smallest particles of matter that exist. Latterly they suspected that there might be minuter particles, to which they give the name of electrons; but one thing they have not suspected, and that is that the polarized points, or electrified points, composing the atoms, are in reality the ether of which I have been speaking. It is thought that an atom of, say iron or oxygen, is the smallest particle of matter that can exist as such, but that particle of iron may be made up of smaller corpuscles. I give you that word because it is a better one than any I know in current use. This house represents the atoms, but it is made up of bricks. I told you that the atoms floated in the etheric waves, and that their numbers are countless. Their motion is so quick that it eludes the eye of man, and it is owing to this rapidity of motion that they do not disturb the rays of light which come from the sun and planets in an undulatory, wave-like motion. The Roentgen rays—the X-rays—are due to the wondrous influence thrown off the electric poles, and which is composed of etheric atoms. For this reason the eye of man cannot see the light which penetrates. Will you make a note of that? The etheric atoms composing the X-rays are so rapid in the movements that you cannot see the ray which is thrown off from the apparatus.

About Auras.

For a short time I desire to say something to you about auras. Credit is due, I think, to the Spiritualists for having introduced that term, and for having a great deal of information about it, which is, of course, derived from the spiritual world. The atoms that we have been speaking about are constantly changing, but very slowly. Take, for instance, a grain of musk; it will scent a room for many months, and there will be hardly perceptible diminution of its The dog will follow a man's track for a long distance because fine particles have been given off from the matter of his feet through his boots or flesh. The perfume of the rose is another instance. Small particles of the atoms of a rose pass off and combine with a chemical production which gives the delicate odor of the flower. Every man, every animal, everything possesses an aura. It is an emanation. Supposing that I could give you spiritual eyes to-night, you would see round the person sitting next to you a peculiar halo very much like the aura or halo usually painted round the heads of saints. Looking closer you would perceive that the color nearer to the body would be perhaps a pale pink or cream, and then further from the body it would shade off into another hue. What is this emanation or aura? It is simply an electrical combination which comes in the first place from the sun, and floats in the atmosphere. We have called it ether. Man absorbs this ether through his physical organism, and gives it off again. Sometimes the color of the aura changes, and this is due to a certain state or condition of the body. Now, this aura is simply animal magnetism, which may be used for giving health, and curing diseases. It will not cure all diseases, but it has cured a great many, and all of you possess it in a greater or lessor degree. Some are heavily charged with it. When you are told to renew your magnetism by going out into the woods and communing with nature, you are simply absorbing directly from its source the magnetic power that is all around you.

Ether, the Wondrous Force of the Universe.

Regarding this wondrous ether of which the more minute corpuscles are composed, it is a subtle force pervading every part of the universe, existing in the rocks, in the water, in the air. It plays a most important part in the germination of plants, the ripening of fruits, and in the various functions of the organs of the body, including the reproduction of the species. By its subtle power the rays of light come from the sun to the earth and to other planets. You will have gathered from what I have said concerning its composition that it is charged with electricity, and in my last lecture I said reverentially that it might be called the Spirit of God. It permeates everything, and there is nothing that it cannot pass through. In my argument last week I endeavored to show that if anyone possessed a knowledge and power on the other side to reduce the atoms to ether, there would be no difficulty whatever in passing matter through matter—none whatever. I might go on for a considerable time telling you of its wondrous power but I wish to speak about the spiritual body and what connection it hath with matter.

Ether and the Spiritual Body.

When I speak of the spiritual body, I mean the spiritual man. Man, the true man, is a spirit, or perhaps to speak correctly, man is spirit. God is not a spirit, but God is spirit, invisible. Note that the etheric corpuscles are invisible. They may be sensed by the spiritual man, but cannot be seen by the physical eyes. Now, we find that the atoms, these minute particles of which I have been speaking, are made up of the etheric corpuscles, and not any man in the flesh or in the spirit has been able to yet grasp what is the vital force inherent in these corpuscles. They are called by scientists primordial atoms which exist from the beginning, and if you can lay hold of my meaning you will see that I am striving to impress upon you that the spirit of man is part of the Divine spirit which permeates everything right throughout the universe. I have said also that no one can give a definition of it. You may define matter, but not that vital power or influence which is active in primordial atoms. That is spirit. Have you ever heard theologians give you such a definition as I have given you to-night No, they cannot do so, because they are on the earth plane. They are not acquainted with certain facts with which we are acquainted, and never will be until they have entered the realm of spirit. This wondrous power is manifested throughout all matter. Of what then does the spiritual body consist—because it is recognized that man hath a spiritual body in the spirit realm. Is it composed of the atoms of which we have been speaking? No, because then it would be matter, but it is composed of something more subtle than that which composes the atoms, and we call it "spiritual substance" in speaking to you, for want of a better name. It may, however, be manifested through matter. The materialized form, of which we have instances recorded in the Bible and our own experience, is an actual fact. The spirit appeared and was handled. It drew from the medium, from the sitters, or the persons to whom it appeared, certain atoms which went to form a spiritual body materialized and made ponderable so that the fleshly eye could see and discern it. The Eternal Spirit is present everywhere, and, in that sense, you will understand God to be omnipotent and omnipresent. The wondrous manifestations taking place throughout Nature are all perfected through this wonderful medium, the Spirit of God. It is omnipresent, and, in a sense which you cannot realize at present, it is omniscient also. Do you remember me telling you in my last lecture how each atom composing matter has its affinity? This atom finds its affinity and they come together. Supposing this to be removed, then it would find the next best and cohere with that, and if that were removed it would find the next. How is this? It is through the Spirit of God. Perhaps I am going rather too deep into spiritual problems. You are intelligent people, I know, but these matters are perhaps a little beyond some of you while yet in the flesh. But I have given you a few thoughts you can turn over in your quiet hours.

Spiritual Forces Everywhere.

As the Spirit of God is immortal, eternal, existing to all eternity, so then is the spirit of man if it is part of the Divine. Let me say matter and force are eternal. You will remember that I spoke of force in connection with the atoms. You must think also of the changes constantly going on. You know that it is possible to change certain chemical substances. Magnesium, for instance, is changed when you ignite it, being combustible. There are thousands of such substances that change their form if a certain chemical process is set up. And matter has always existed in some form or other. Have you not heard the expression, my friends, from theologians and others, "when time shall be no more." It is an utter impossibility! You might just as well try to find the beginning of time as to find its end, and when you can find the beginning of time, then you will find the beginning of the universe. Oh, how wondrously vast, how all absorbing is this subject! To what far distance is the mind of man carried? Well might the Nazarene, the Great Teacher, who understood the mysteries, declare unto his immediate followers, "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but unto them that are without all these things are done in parables." And so it is to-day, my friends. To you, who with minds spiritually attuned, seek for light and knowledge on these important subjects, to you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, and to those it is foolishness. The world has made a discovery, a very important one—how to send messages through the atmosphere without wires, by an electric shock or spark, powerful enough to cause a disturbance of the etheric waves, and a receiver able to receive that which is transmitted through the etheric waves. This is wireless telegraphy. There is something I would like to tell you to-night which might in the future be of great benefit to the world. Existing in the atmosphere around you are various gases, composed of atoms in a gaseous state. It will be possible by and bye to take out of the atmosphere nitrate salts, atmospheric substances which will be healing, life-giving and sustaining. Do you know that Nature goes through an elaborate process to produce your food? And why should not a man be able to take out of the atmosphere that which will keep him alive, heal his diseases, and a hundred other things? Some years ago an attempt was made to get a fertilizer for the soil—nitrate—from the atmosphere, but it failed, and no progress has been made since. Some day it will be an accomplished fact. Knowledge is the source of happiness. When you get to the spirit side of life you will have the power to investigate, and as men in the flesh are able to receive this knowledge you perhaps will be commissioned to impart. How slow is man's progress! The first man who suggested the earth was spheroid was voted to be a fraud, a liar, and opposed to the truth, and was put in the prison house. To have told our forefathers coaches would one day run without horses would have been to bring the smile of incredulity to their lips. To send messages without wires, to throw off from an electric apparatus a ray of light so powerful and subtle as to pass through a man's skull and flesh to his bones would have been voted impossible. Were I to tell you what would be actual in the future you would say that I was but romancing. All things are possible to him that believeth." Do not imagine the wonders performed by the Nazarene were miracles. His was a master mind, and he had a knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Why should not a man walk upon the water if he knows how to do it? There was a time when man could not ascend into the upper atmosphere. Now he can do so because of the advancement of knowledge. Do not be deterred from seeking knowledge from spiritual sources. Man will never make great progress until he casts aside once and for ever old preconceived notions and ideas, received in the days of ignorance from their forefathers. Get rid first of the idea of an anthropomorphic God. Man cannot do any good for himself or his fellows while he continues to believe there is some giant in the form of man, all powerful and revengeful. But when you can conceive of Deity as an all-pervading power, having the attributes of omnipotence and omnipresence, without passions, not wayward like a man—then you will have a sublime and grand conception. There will not be any need then for cathedrals, and rituals, and sprinklings, because they will be useless. Man's prayers will be his thoughts and aspirations for good, for the uplifting of himself and his fellows.

In Conclusion.

Have I made it clear to you concerning the composition of matter? Change is constantly taking place. If so you will realize that death is but a dissolution of the atoms composing your body, liberating or setting free the spirit, which shall return to the Eternal, Universal Spirit. Man will then have no fear of death, and there will be no need of prayers over the decaying body—the disintegrating corpse. Until men discard these old ideas received from teachers in the childhood of the world and in the days of ignorance, they must be practically at a standstill. Who are the greatest scientists of the age? They are either skeptics or men who have freed their minds from the teachings of the church and its theology. The world has denounced them, as it always will denounce those who leave the beaten track, but the heterodox and the unorthodox are those who are the pioneers of freedom and free-thought. Priests have invented a crime which they call blasphemy, but there is no blasphemy, as one great writer has said, save the crime of injustice. Realizing this, every man will be free to investigate the phenomena of Nature and of Spiritualism, and no man shall say him nay. When I hear of a person laughing and sneering at others for investigating these things, I say, What colossal, what superb insolence, arrogance and impertinence. Man should be free to investigate the phenomena of Nature, and not only should be free, but he should be applauded for so doing. Some are ashamed to own that they are investigating these wondrous facts, but what does it matter that some have not grasped them, that some have passed them by? Be you, yourselves, sincere, and an example unto those who are round about you. Teach men that they have nothing to fear, as the atoms composing the universe are constantly changing. In the process of nature, man's mortal body must undergo a change with all the other elements surrounding him. The disobedience of one man did not bring death. It is a childish story, and no one but a child could believe it. You are children if you believe it, but when grown to man's estate you will discard it, you will laugh and say it is a fable of childhood. Matter is changing everywhere, and my body of clay also had to undergo the same change; but my spirit, the true man, which is part of the Divine, cannot change. Therefore the proposition that I put forth at the opening of my first lecture stands good. Your reason attests the fact that spirit is superior to and dominates matter, because all matter is changing and spirit does not change. And for this reason man lives forever—is immortal!—Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

The Great Agnostic.

DID INGERSOLL RECANT?

Some Orthodox Are Already Claiming That He Confessed He Was Wrong in His Attitude Toward Christianity.

In a recent epistolary controversy with an orthodox friend in Wichita, Kansas, on theological questions, my respected correspondent deliberately in black and white, informed me that Col. Ingersoll had confessed before his death that he was all wrong in his attitude toward the churches and Christianity. My first thought upon reading this assertion was one of very great surprise, but it was immediately succeeded by the reflection that it was but orthodox history merely repeating itself, being reminded that I had heard many pulpit utterances describing in detail the confessions, regrets and horrible deaths of our noted "infidels," which were all proven to be without foundation in fact, unauthentic, mere pulpit stories related for effect in accordance with the seventh verse of the third chapter of Romans.

I remembered, too, of Col. Ingersoll himself having spent no little time, work and money in running down and nailing a similar story about Thomas Paine, and I embrace the present opportunity of defending in my humble way the memory of the lamented Ingersoll. I do not know how extensively this story about Mr. Ingersoll has been circulated. I had never seen or heard any intimations of it before reading it in this letter.

Of course, it would be the most powerful and conclusive argument the church could use against the teachings of Ingersoll, far more effective and successful than any orthodox argument hitherto advanced against those teachings while he lived, if this assertion of my correspondent could be authentically established. But Mr. Ingersoll's death was too sudden to give rise to even a remote suspicion that he had made any confession, statement or any change whatever in his theological views. He died of apoplexy, a disease peculiar to men of physical and intellectual vigor. Paradoxical as it may appear, it is a disease of robust health. He died while actively engaged in his magnificent attacks upon theological ignorance and superstition. Being suddenly seized and entering immediately into the condition of coma characteristic of that malady and which precedes the final dissolution a few hours or days, he could not have made any ante-mortem statement of any character. I hope this will be sufficient to prevent any further circulation of this story.

I cannot better close this communication than with a quotation from Ingersoll's "Shorter Catechism," based upon his replies to Six Sermons delivered against him and his attacks on old orthodox Christianity, by Rev. Dr. DeWitt Talmage.

Question.—So you think that, after all, it was not God's intention that the Jews should become civilized?

Answer.—We do not know. We can only say that "God's ways are not our ways." It may be that God took them in his special charge, for the purpose of keeping them bad enough to make the necessary sacrifice. That may have been the "divine plan." In any event, it is safer to believe the explanation that is the most unreasonable.

Question.—Do you think that Christ knew the Jews would crucify him?

Answer.—Certainly.

Question.—Do you think that when he chose Judas he knew that he would betray him?

Answer.—Certainly.

Question.—Did he know when Judas went to the chief priest and made the bargain for the delivery of Christ?

Answer.—Certainly.

Question.—Why did he allow himself to be betrayed if he knew the plot?

Answer.—Infidelity is a very good doctrine to live by, but you should read the last words of Paine and Voltaire. (Now it seems they are adding to the list the name of Ingersoll himself.)

Question.—If Christ knew that Judas would betray him, why did he choose him?

Answer.—Nothing can exceed the atrocities of the French Revolution—when they carried a woman through the streets and worshiped her as the Goddess of Reason.

Question.—Would not the mission of Christ have been a failure had no one betrayed him?

Answer.—Thomas Paine was a drunkard and recanted on his deathbed, and died a blaspheming infidel besides.

Question.—Is it not clear that an atonement was necessary; and is it not equally clear that the atonement could not have been made, unless somebody had betrayed Christ; and unless the Jews had been wicked and orthodox enough to crucify him?

Answer.—Of course the atonement had to be made. It was a part of the "divine plan" that Christ should be betrayed, and that the Jews should be wicked enough to kill him. Otherwise, the world would have been lost.

Question.—Suppose Judas had understood the "divine plan," what ought he to have done? Should he have betrayed Christ, or let somebody else do it; or should he have allowed the world to perish, including his own soul?

Answer.—If you take the Bible away from the world "how would it be possible to have witnesses sworn in courts?" How would it be possible to administer Justice?

Question.—If Christ had not been betrayed and crucified, is it true that his own mother would be in hell today?

Answer.—Most assuredly. There was but one way by which she could have been saved, and that was by the death of her son—through the blood of the atonement. She was totally depraved through the sin of Adam, and deserved eternal death. Even her love for the infant Christ was, in the sight of God—that is to say, of her babe—wickedness. It cannot be repeated too often that there is only one way to be saved, and that is, to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Question.—Could Christ have prevented the Jews from crucifying him?

Answer.—He could.

Question.—If he could have saved his life and did not, was he not guilty of suicide?

Answer.—No one can understand these questions who has not read the prophecies of Daniel, and has not a clear conception of what is meant by "the fullness of time."

Question.—When God created each human being, did he know exactly what would be his eternal fate?

Answer.—Most assuredly he did.

Question.—Did he know that hundreds and millions and billions would suffer eternal pain?

Answer.—Certainly. But he gave them freedom of choice between good and evil.

Question.—Did he know exactly how they would use that freedom?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Did he know that billions would use it wrong?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Was it optional with him whether he should make such people or not?

Answer.—Certainly.

Question.—Had these people any option as to whether they would be made or not?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Would it not have been for the better to leave them unconscious dust?

Answer.—These questions show how foolish it is to judge God according to a human standpoint.

What to us seems just and merciful God may regard in an exactly opposite light; and we may hereafter be developed to such a degree that we will regard the agonies of the damned as the highest possible evidence of the goodness and mercy of God.

But I have quoted sufficiently from this catechism, which covers 75 or 80 pages, to give the reader some idea of its character, which is certainly not very suggestive of any probability of its author's change of mind in relation thereto on his death-bed, even had his illness been a lingering one and his mind normal to the last. There are in my opinion, no more interesting and valuable volumes bequeathed to the world than those left by Col. Ingersoll, on the subject of which they treat, and the time is rapidly approaching when they will be much more appreciated than they now are. He had, however, while living, made a most profound impression upon the theological thought of the world and has radically changed it.

The late lamented President Harper of the University of Chicago, a few years before his death, uttered expressions of regret that for the last fifty years there had not been a single change made in the Catechism and general teachings of the various churches, nothing to imply that theology and religion had in the least kept abreast with the progress of science and education. Mark the contrast between President Harper and Pope Pius X. The latter has just issued an encyclical against scientific progress under the head of "Modernisms," while the former lamented deeply the tardiness of the orthodox church in accepting those "Modernisms."

But theology is not nor has it ever been noted for the adoption of any scientific fact, however well established, which contradicts its own preconceived theories.

JUSTICE.

As Set Forth in Poetry and Prose.

A star of priceless value
Gleams along our way,
And the torch is held by Justice,
Fair Goddess of the day.

Lo! she beckons with her finger
To the Lords of earth who reign,
And a tear is dropped in pity
For the men in conflict slain.

But those who died on fields of battle
Died 'mid agony and strife,
Were the champions of Justice
Striking chains from fettered Life.

Yes, Justice slowly gains in power, yet at times her face is veiled from mortal view but as the sun is obscured thus causing dullness to overshadow the beauties of Nature, still behind the clouds she shines resplendent in all her glory; yet we know the day will come when the clouds shall disappear and once more all hearts rejoice. So it is with Justice, only for a time is she hidden as in a shroud, though long may it seem to mortal vision. Ever waiting she stands with her watchful eye centered upon the menacing evils that like the lion's snare, are cunningly woven to entrap the good and bad alike. The time must come when Justice with her arm uplifted, guided by a power higher than herself, will strike the blow and break the chains of ignorance and superstition that generations to come may never know the fetters that once encircled mankind. Never in the history of worlds has Justice allowed her arm to fall upon a people in haste, for when war and bloodshed have to pay the price of Liberty, Infinite Intelligence makes no mistakes, and what is a seeming cruelty is in the ultimatum only spiritualizing the planet and its inhabitaits. Have patience, oh ye children of earth, and when faint of heart know that Justice conquers in the end.

THE KNOW-ALL CHURCH.

A New Religion Throughout, Gotten Up on a Unique Plan.—Thus Adding One More Discordant Note to the Scale of Human Thought.

As if humanity did not have churches enough a new one has been launched, called the "Church of Humanity." And such a church! It has now about 250 members—oh, no, not in one compact congregation; but scattered, like lost sheep, over the United States. Its founder and a few of its members are to meet in convention this day, Sunday, June 7, at Great Bend, Kansas, to organize the "church." It is unique; it has no God, a godless church. Every person joining it must say: "Having learned that all gods are fabulous beings and death the end of conscious life."

The founder has set about the impossible task of having all the members agree in their views, especially in what he calls fundamentals. One view is that God is a myth, like Santa Claus.

Each member of the "church" must declare, "I know there is no God." To say that he believes there is no God will not do; or that he does not know whether there is or not. Thomas Paine and Col. Ingersoll would not be eligible to membership in the "Church of Humanity." No Spiritualist, however liberal, or however much he loved humanity, can be permitted to join this latest church. The "founder" must be conscious of the fact that such a church is a "narrow-gauge" affair, for he says: "This course seems narrow to some who cannot understand its necessity."

This is what all sectarians say:

He adds: "I limit membership in the Church of Humanity to those who have learned the discoveries that all Gods, devils, and holy ghosts are fabulous beings, heaven and hell myths and death the end of conscious life forever."

He proceeds: "Since Gods and spirits are creations of fiction and cannot reveal themselves."

"Our society must be limited to those who know the discoveries it is based on."

Mr. Loper, of Oregon, wrote to the "founder," saying, "The rationalists should have an organization of millions, and very likely would if someone went about it right. I think there is something too narrow and limited when you cannot let one of the Paine or Ingersoll type into your church."

The "founder" replied: "All such people must be kept out of the society for its own preservation until they learn the truths it teaches." "If they attempt it they would have to be promptly expelled. Any other course would bring internal strife, contention inharmony and final disruption and disorganization of the society."

Free speech and free press would be the death of it.

He knows that there is no God, knows that there are no spirits, no future conscious life. It has been discovered, he says, that death is the "termination of conscious life."

When, where, by whom was that discovery made? I have been seeking for evidence on that question for many years. In my opinion no man "knows" that "death ends all," or that there are no spirits; no man "knows" that there is "no future conscious life." Indeed, I have always said "I hope there is."

Is it not strange that, on the one hand, I am not eligible to membership in the "Church of Humanity," and, on the other hand, am not eligible to membership in the Spiritualist Society!

The members of the "Church of Humanity" saying, "We know that death is the end of conscious life forever," does not make it a fact.

Permit me to put the question to them: Because a million of people, or more, say that they KNOW spirits exist and communicate, does that prove it?

Their answer is, "No!" A loud No.

C. Kallum, 7504 Normal avenue, Chicago, says: "Spirit return, by which is demonstrated life after death. We all believe this, or rather we KNOW it!" "It is a science [Spiritualism] because it proves, without shade of doubt, that life does exist after so-called death." This is the attitude of the Spiritualists.

The "founder" says he knows; 250 others say they know. On what evidence I cannot say. It must, in the nature of things, be negative evidence.

The evidences presented by the Spiritualists, whether acceptable to the world at large or not, is better, clearer, more convincing than Christians offer of the immortality of the soul.

Among astronomers there is discussion on, "Are there inhabitants in other worlds than ours?" Some are almost confident that Mars is inhabited. Reasons are given why Venus, Mercury, Vulcan (if there is such a planet) cannot be; and the giant Jupiter, wonderful ring-girdled Saturn, wide-sweeping Uranus, and the lone Neptune—not an inhabitant upon their vast surfaces. What a waste of worlds if this is true! How little we know!

Then outside of this solar speck of the universe there are millions of suns, centers of other systems, which are probably surrounded by myriads of planets. Are they inhabited? Who knows? Perhaps, if we are not to be snuffed out, like candles, we may live and prosper on some of those planets.

Where shall we be when that mighty sun, Vega Lyra, 12,000 years from now, becomes our polar star? Shall we witness its inauguration? What a resplendent spectacle! Some suns are dying, supposed to be, others are young. The red suns, like Antares Scorpio, may be in the last stages of consumption. Take a good opera glass some clear night, when the "Seven Sisters," the plelades, are favorable for observation, and behold the magnificent burst of starry gems, scores, and then say with me, "How little we know!"

True, we are learning. But what dull scholars in this school of life; and what mite of a man, a mote in a sunbeam, has successfully peered into every nook of all the galaxies, and swears by himself that he has discovered to a certainty, that there is no god and no spirit in the whole wide universe!

The surprising thing about this church of to-day, June 7, is that nearly all who have joined it are lovers of truth and liberal-minded. But the "foundor" is a sectarian.

Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Remarkable Parallels.

A howling dervish is a Mohammedan monk and religious fanatic, whose name betrays his leading characteristics. There is another variety known as dancing dervishes. Singular how these lunatics are duplicated among Christians. The dancing dervishes find their parallel in the Holy Jumpers, and the Shakers have some features in common with them. They all leap and dance, and work themselves into a frenzy, when they believe themselves inspired of heaven. David, minus the fig leaf, "danced before the Lord with all his might," as related 2 Samuel 6:14, was possibly the pioneer in this sort of exhilaration; but the howling dervish finds his best duplication in modern times in the person of Rev. Billy Sunday. The New York Evening Post, in a late issue, told us of this religious mountebank thusly:

"Throughout Sunday's preaching, and, indeed, his praying, he uses every vulgarity of irreverence of language, addressing his hearers, and the Almighty, in the idiom of the saloon, the gutter, and the yellow newspaper. One Western audience he recently carried by storm with the assertion, 'I'm going to stay in this city and preach till hell freezes over, then I'm going to get a pair of skates and keep socking it into Satan.'"

The Presbyterian Banner, of Pittsburg, a church organ, thus compliments its hero, for Sunday was a mouth-piece of the Presbyterian church while ministering in the Smoky City:

"Sunday's audience is never surprised at anything he does or says. He is just as likely to sit on top of the pulpit as to stand behind it, and to take off his coat as button it up. It is nothing unusual for him to give directions to his assistants while he is praying, or stop in the middle of a petition to command some enthusiastic brother who has waxed too loud with his 'amens,' to 'shut up.' And if he doesn't 'shut up' and stay 'shut' he can look for a worse thing to befall him before the prayer is through. From the time Sunday announces his text until the sermon closes he storms and rages up and down the platform, whacking the pulpit and twisting and working his body until we are as much amazed at the physical endurance of the man as at the resources of his tongue. He outrages every rule of church decorum we have been taught, and slaps in the face all our traditions of dignity and reverence in worship."

It is hoped no Spiritual platform speaker will ever borrow the mountebank's methods. It is regrettable there are persons who steal his title, Reverend, which neither adds dignity, grace or reputation to a name, but makes the wearer appear as cribbing priestly livery to imitate his false teaching.

Brothers, sisters, copy our oldest, ablest, best speakers in this regard, and let ecclesiastic pulpit pounders monopolize church titles, which had their origin when they who used them had little else to recommend them to popular favor.

Worthy of Emulation.

That was a noble tribute an old Roman bestowed in an epitaph on his wife:

"Never have I experienced a pain from thee save in thy death."

If the wife had survived, and could truthfully have expressed herself in similar language, they set a glorious example for a whole world to imitate. Immortality should be theirs, and it is.

He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves, and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.—Burke.

The Septuagint.
(No. 2.)

The student of history, in pursuit of Christian origins meets with the so-called Septuagint in his earliest researches, and, directed by his minister, opens to chapter 2, book 12, of "Josephus' Antiquities of the Jews," and wades through the long chapter, with many sections, laboring under the impression he is gaining the truth in regard to the rendering of the pretended Jewish Scriptures into Greek, about 280 years before our era. He finds it stated in notes to Josephus that the Jews used that Greek version in their synagogues; that Jesus, wherever he quoted the Jewish Scriptures, always used the language of the Septuagint; and that all of the quotations from the Old Testament used in the New Testament drafts were made on the Septuagint. Continuing his researches our student finds the Latin vulgate of fthe Old Testament is only a Latinized Septuagint. And then he finds that the Greek author of Josephus had a full knowledge of the Septuagint, and it alone was used in all the renderings of the Old Testament into the modern languages of Europe, as it was the principal guide of the King James translation of the "original Greek" into English.

By this time our student sees the value of that translation by the six selected members of good character, elders in age, skillful in the laws, from each tribe, making a grand total of seventy-two Hebrew scholars, learned in Greek, who assembled at Alexandria, in Egypt, to translate the Jewish Scriptures into Greek, at the instance of Ptolemy Philadelphus, to fill a niche in the history of all nations which was being compiled for the great Alexandrian library, with its 700,000 tomes.

Our student learns from Josephus that it was one Aristeus who was the projector of this translation; that he influenced the reigning Egyptian king, and that the scholarly Josephus was guided in his story of the translation by a letter from that Aristeus.

Wishing corroborating evidence of such important work he opens the Encyclopedia Britannica, article "Septuagint," Vol. XXI., page 667, first column, and reads. "There is no question that THIS LETTER [of Aristeus] IS SPURIOUS." And a little further on: "A genuine, honest witness could not have fallen into the absurd mistake of making delegates from Jerusalem the authors of the Alexandrian version. The FORGERY, however, is a very early one."

Now, good reader, open to the article Septuagint, in "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s edition, Vol. IV., page 2912, second column, and read:

"SEPTUAGINT. The Greek version of the Old Testament known by this name, is like the Nile, fontium qui celat origines. [A fountain whose source is concealed.] The causes which produced it, the number and names of the translators, the times at which different portions were translated, are all uncertain."

The author then goes on to show that not until 1514-1517, did the Biblia Polyglotta Complutensis appear, and that this was not authorized until 1520. Passing to page 2919, second column, of Smith, and we read:

"The general belief of scholars now is, that it [the Septuagint] was the work of some Alexandrian Jew, whether with the object of enhancing the dignity of his Law, or the credit of the Greek version, or for the meaner purpose of gain. The age in which the letter of Aristeus makes its appearance was fertile in such fictitious writings."

Then, quoting from another, Smith says:

"When the Attali and the Ptolemies were in emulation about their libraries, THE KNAVERY OF FORGING BOOKS AND TITLES BEGAN."

Now we want to say right here in brief, what it will be our pleasure to elaborate further on; that Josephus, its very original, was a clumsy forgery, brought out during the fourteenth, or the beginning of the fifteenth century. It sole purpose was to corroborate Old Testament literature, which, until Josephus appeared, had nothing to sustain it. We intimated in article No. 1 of this series, headed "Still Searching for Truth," that what is now passing as the Jewish Scriptures, was unknown to that people until comparatively modern times; that the whole Christian world has been misled and deceived by the rascality of the Catholic priesthood; and that bribes of a seat in heaven, threats of purgatorial fires, and Inquisitorial tortures, with confiscation of estates, were all necessary to make Popery the great ruling power it became and was when Luther and his coadjutors came upon the stage a little more than three and a half hundred years ago.

It is claimed by some writers that the rendering of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek was for the accommodation of the 120,000 Jews who were held as slaves in Alexandria, and were engaged in building that city. That story is also one of the fabrications of this fictitious Josephus, though it has been thoughtlessly accepted as truthful by most historians. They who wish to know the truth in regard to Christian origins and frauds should read with care, and preserve this series of articles, each complete in itself, for future use. With the series commenced Dec. 7, the conclusion of which is not yet written, it is believed new light will be thrown on the beginnings of the dominant religion which will astonish its ablest advocates.

The Race Suicide Question.

Domestic animals, with no knowledge that their young are cultured for the shambles, following natural instincts, may go on forever generating their species for human slaughter and consumption, but educated women, equal in ability with her brother, seeing the uses governments make of the bravest and best of her sons, should have a direct voice in administrative affairs, and should be allowed to determine whether war, otherwise wholesale butchery of humanity, shall go on.

If women in all civilized countries were allowed to declare war and establish peace, national discord would end, and fond mothers would be saved the grief of seeing their dear ones marching to the battle field to shoot down others, perchance to serve as targets for the bullets of those they hoped to slaughter.

Establish a congress of nations, make peace universal, culture the arts and the sciences, and

"Let the dogs that delight to bark and bite"

Do all the killing. The home should be a heaven, and "race suicide" should not be thought of.

Again, if nine-tenths of all births are to suffer the tortures of hell forever, as revivalists teach, then race suicide should be universal. Think of a child nurtured by a fond mother, watched over, sleeping or waking, during all the years of infancy and youth, so organized he cannot believe the universal Father, the Creator of the mighty universe, with its countless suns and solar systems, forgetting his dignity as a God, descended to rise as a son by mortal maiden; and that son, endowed with all the characteristics of humanity, and no more, dying on a cross as a common malefactor, and the unbeliever damned to all eternity for rejecting such a damnable faith!

Don't be astonished when you read your morning paper, to almost invariably find an account of a loving mother who killed a half dozen children, of whom "such is the kingdom of heaven," accepting hell for herself, to save the dear babes from endless perdition!

Let Him Live and Suffer.

The sentence of the multi-murderer, Harry Orchard, to hang July 8, for killing Gov. Steuninberg, was commuted by the governor of Idaho to imprisonment for life.

That was just. Death is too slight a punishment for such an infamous wretch, guilty of twenty-two murders. Let the assassin live, daily reflecting on his crimes. The longer his life the more severe the punishment. And in another state of being he will learn what should have been taught him in mortal life, that a Jesus never paid another's debt. His merit, had he been a real character, was not great enough to atone for the sins of a world. Each offender in the great economy of Nature must suffer for his own wrongs, and a God has no pardoning power.

The pagan hell, a mere transference of volcanic fires to another life, which Christians stole with the residue of their creed from their heathen ancestors, is merely the extension of the torture chamber of the Middle Ages into eternity.

An Inerrant Bible.

A case of precocious fatherhood is related in 2 Chronicles 21:20, which we hope will please those who want us to select the good in that holy book, and pass by the evil things. We learn in the verse cited:

"Thirty and two years old was he [Jehoram] when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years and departed."

It follows Jehoram was aged 40 when he vacated the throne, probably died. Now, verses 1, 2, chapter 22:

"So Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram, king of Judah, reigned. Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem."

As the father, Jehoram, was only 40 years of age when he "departed" and his son, Ahaziah, aged 42, began his reign, so Ahaziah was two years older than his father, an incredible story in common life, but, disbelieved, the skeptic becomes a heretic, and deserves a roast in purgatorial fires.

The Difference.

Col. Ingersoll declared: "The common school is the bread of life, and all should be commanded to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge."

The Lord God, after having completed the job of tailoring he undertook for Mr. Adam and wife, Gen. 3:21, then, fearful Adam would put forth his hand and take of the tree of life, otherwise, of the tree of knowledge, drove the suspect out of the garden, and set up a flaming sword, which turned every way, like a modern kicking machine we see illustrated in the papers, to keep the disobedient cuss from returning.

Churchmen seem to like Lord-God's way best, and would only teach along certain favored lines, could they have their way.

Took Wind Out of Their Sails.

Addressing one of his Southern audiences, Sam Jones once requested all the husbands present who had not spoken a harsh word to their wives for a month to stand up. He shook hands with those who arose and then introduced them to the rest of the audience as the "twenty-seven biggest liars in Tennessee."

A Most Remarkable Visitation

Mother and Friends Who Declare Tucker's Spirit Has Visited Them Crying "I Am Innocent. Don't worry, I am happy now. Soon you will know who the real murderer of Mabel Page is."

AN INNOCENT MAN HANGED.

Tucker's Spirit, Mother Says, Cries "I am Innocent."—Aunt and Friends of Boy Executed for Mabel Page Murder Tell of Strange Visits. —Hear Voiceof Dead Man.—"Don't Worry, I Am Happy!" Mrs. Tucker Declares She Heard Him Say.

Charles Louis Tucker, the Auburndale young man, whose trial and execution for the murder of Mabel Page aroused the deepest interest throughout the whole country, because of the doubt as to his guilt, has returned to earth in spirit messages and in apparitions, according to the testimony of his parents, other relatives and friends.

In all of these messages, received in vision or in dream, Tucker has declared unwaveringly that he did not assassinate Mabel Page. From the spirit world his voice has traveled, asserting that in time the person who is guilty of the crime will be known.

The most remarkable of these messages from the dead have come to Mrs. Lucy Tucker, the loving, faithful mother of the young man. At times, said Mrs. Tucker, it seemed to her that her son had hold of her hand, dragging her into the grave where his body lies.

"Tell me," she said, "those messages and visions mean that my son was innocent and that he died a martyr."

Among her treasures and mementoes of the dead, Mrs. Tucker prizes more than 3,000 letters which she has received from people throughout New England. These letters were written to cheer the broken hearts and desolate home of the bereaved parents. They were written by people who have declared their belief that Tucker did not kill Mabel Page.

Have Talked With the Dead.

To get the exact facts relative to the strange visitations from the young man who was killed in the electric chair in the Charlestown prison, a reporter of the Boston Sunday American talked at length with the various persons who have been in communication with the dead.

Among those who do not hesitate to say that they have heard Tucker's voice and seen his form since his death, besides his parents, are Mrs. Adam Horle, his aunt, of Forest Hills, and Miss Grace and Miss Ethel Webster of No. 2 Preston street, Worcester. The Webster girls place flowers on Tucker's grave in Hope Cemetery, Worcester, every Sunday.

Mrs. Tucker says that many times while working about the house she has been startled to hear her dead son's voice behind her calling "mamma." She would turn quickly, believing her son was present.

Mrs. Horle says that on many occasions she has distinctly heard Louis' voice call "Aunt Sarah." On one occasion, in stepping into the parlor in the middle of the afternoon, Mrs. Horle says she distinctly saw an apparition of her dead nephew, his form clearly outlined in the air with his arms stretched out as though to embrace her as he was in the habit of doing when he visited her. She has also heard mysterious rappings at the door and gone there to find no one.

The Webster girls of Worcester have both received messages similar to those received by Tucker's parents and aunt.

Tucker's relatives and friends cannot account for these strange happenings.

Hear Dead Son's Voice.

"It is all very strange," said Mrs. Tucker to a Sunday American reporter. "I have received many spirit messages from my son. Another strange thing is the fact that often while I am going about my work in the house I am suddenly startled to hear my dead son's voice call 'mamma.' At these times I turn involuntarily, thinking my son behind me, to find nothing. I cannot account for these strange things.

"Most of the spirit messages which I have received from Louis have come to me at night during dreams. The first one I received was during the week after Louis was killed. Louis was sitting before me in a chair and looked the same as before he was put in jail. He said to me, "Don't worry, mamma. I am happy. Don't cry so much about my death. Try to cheer father up and keep him from brooding over my death. I am innocent of the crime of killing Mabel Page and that ought to comfort you, mother.'

"The next thing I knew my husband was shaking me, and I awoke. He said that I had been talking in my sleep to Louis and crying. When I became fully awake I began to cry again because of my thoughts for Louis. The next day, however, I recalled what Louis had said in his message, and this cheered me up, for I have always believed my son was innocent of the crime he was charged with, the same as thousands of other people believe. I receive hundreds of letters every month from people in all sections of the country. In nearly every one of these letters the writer says that he or she believes my son was innocent. This cheers me a great deal. I now have over 3,000 letters which I have received from people expressing their belief in my son's innocence.

"I Am Through With Suffering."

"Shortly after Louis was killed in the electric chair at Charlestown I had many messages of similar nature from him. In one of them he said: 'Mamma, I want you to come as soon as you can.' He seemed to be pulling me by the arm down into the grave. In the morning my arms ached. That showed he wanted us with him and I guess it will not be long before we will join him.

"At another time he said: 'I am all through my suffering. I am not suffering now. They thought I was the murderer, mother, but I didn't do it. They murdered me but before long they will find the person who murdered Mabel Page.'

"At another time he talked about the few things he had left and hoped I would be careful of them as he had been. He also said he hoped I would enjoy the things he left.

"Once in a message he said: 'I don't want you to leave the old house in Auburndale. I hope the people will help you keep the house.'

"One other time Louis said: 'I have heard in the spirit land that you will find out who the murderer of Mabel Page is within a short time. I am now happy, mother. There is no officer here to take me by the arm and bring me to court. When I died all my troubles and sufferings ended.'

"These messages have helped me greatly, for they must mean something. To me they mean my son was innocent and died a martyr, and they are being sent to me from the spirit world to console me.

"At another time I had a message from Louis which said: 'Mother, I want you to keep all the letters I wrote; don't destroy them. Take good care of father, for his health is not good. We will all be together again soon.'

Others Get Messages.

"In almost every one of the messages he has sent me Louis has told me that he was innocent. Several other people have received similar messages, including Mrs. Rosa Summerfield, of New Hampshire, and a Mr. Ash, of Providence, both of whom were good friends to us during our trouble. Mr. Ash received a message in which Louis said he was innocent.

Mrs. Adam Horle, of 3582 Washington street, Forest Hills, an aunt of Tucker's, when seen at her home, said to a Sunday American reporter:

"Yes, I have received many messages from Louis and I have also had strange visions of him. Only a short time ago as I opened the front room door I saw an apparition of Louis in the room. His form was clearly outlined in the air and he looked just as natural as in life. I was shocked at this occurrence. His form remained only a few seconds, then faded.

"His arms were outstretched as though he was going to embrace me as he always did when he called at the house. It all looked so natural that it startled me.

"Several times while going about the house I have distinctly heard Louis' voice call 'Aunt Sarah.' I don't know what to think about these things.

"At night I have received messages from the spirit world from Louis. In some of them he said to me that he was innocent and did not kill Mabel Page but that the man who did kill her will be found out soon. In one of these messages he told me to be good to his mother and father and do all I could to keep them from worrying."

Father Tells of Visits.

Albert Tucker, father of Louis, said that he often dreamed of Louis and that he talked with him.

"I cannot recall much of what Louis said,' declared Mr. Tucker. "He has said things to me similar to what he has said to my wife. I think of Louis all the time. I can't keep my mind off him."

Mr. Tucker's health is much better now than during the stirring times of his son's trial and after.

Nineteen-year-old Miss Grace Webster, of 2 Preston street, Worcester, who lovingly places flowers on Tucker's grave in that city every Sunday, said to a Sunday American reporter:

"I first saw Louis Tucker in a vision about one week after his death. He told me in the vision to put his pictures back on my piano. I had taken them down after his death because I could not bear to look at them.

"After the vision I obeyed his request and put them back on the piano. He said to me: 'I don't want you to feel so badly over my death. My suffering has ended and I am now happy. I want you to put my pictures back on your piano even though they do make you feel bad.'

"At one other time in a spirit message to me Louis said: 'You have been very kind to my mother and father and I want you to continue to visit them and cheer them up, for they are worrying over my death, and it is not good for them to worry.'

Just before Memorial Day I had another message from Louis in which he said he was not guilty of murdering Mabel Page, and he also said that the murderer would be found out."

Miss Ethel Webster, sister of Grace, has also had messages similar to her sister's. Grace says that in one of them Tucker told her he did not kill Mabel Page.—Boston (Mass.) Sunday American.

LILY DALE.—ROUND TRIP.

Round trip tickets from Chicago to Lily Dale can be bought every day during the summer for $17.50, and are good until October 31.

A special rate of $14, good for only thirty days, has been made for July 24, BUT NO DAY THEREAFTER, to both Lily Dale and the Chautauqua Assemblies. Ask ticket agents of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Line and also the Erie R. R. for Lily Dale Tourist rates. The former will take you by way of Dunkirk, N. Y., and the latter by way of Jamestown, at the foot of Chautauqua Lake.

Deducting a two-hours' wait at Dunkirk and the actual time spent in travel between Chicago and Lily Dale is only sixteen hours.

GEO. B. WARNE.

Suppose I were to say that when I sat down to write this book, a hand presented itself in the air, took up the pen, and wrote every word that is herein written; would anybody believe me? Certainly they would not. Since, then, a real miracle, were it to happen, would be subject to the same fate as the falsehood, the inconsistency becomes the greater of supposing that the Almighty would make use of means that would not answer the purposes for which they were intended, even if they were real.—Paine's Age of Reason.

When two men of equal intelligence and sincerity quarrel both are probably right.

FROM THE OLD WORLD.

More Extraordinary Manifestations Through the Medium, Bailey.—A Sensational Evening.

Melbourne Spiritualists, as well as Spiritualists in other parts of the world, have been keenly interested by developments at seances conducted under the patronage of Mr. T. W. Stanford, at the corner of Bourke and Russell streets. The remarkable results are obtained through the mediumship of Mr. Charles Bailey. Reports have been published regarding "apports" said to have been brought to the meetings with the rapidity of thought from the Himalayas, Borneo, the ruins of Babylon, Central America and other distant places. These "apports" consist of unique articles of savage dress, inscribed tablets, nests containing eggs, live fish, plants, lump of damp mud containing mosaic stones, and many things only to be obtained with difficulty outside the walls of museums. It is declared that the articles came through the walls in the form of ether, and are materialized in the darkness of the room through the psychic influence, "the vibrations," etc., attaching to Spiritualistic "conditions."

On Friday night there were from fifteen to twenty "sitters," mostly ladies and gentlemen of some education and position. Bailey, the medium, was carefully searched prior to the sitting in order to prove that there was nothing concealed about his clothing. The sitters sat in a circle round the table. At the head of the table was Mr. Bailey. The doors and windows were shut and all lights turned out excepting a small lamp upon a table behind the medium, where a shorthand writer was in readiness to note the messages. When the company was silently seated the medium's face began to twitch, his eyes blinked, and there was a series of heavy sighs and sounds like snoring. Within a few moments he was apparently in a deep sleep. He rose suddenly, and pronounced an invocation. Then he resumed his seat and breathed heavily once more. "Good evening," he said, in a changed voice."

"Good evening, Mr. W—," the sitters responded; "good evening; pleased to have you with us."

The spirit of a gentleman who was dead, or had "passed over to spirit land," was believed to have taken possession of the medium, and he asked all present to join with him in singing "Oh Think of the Home Over There." Mr. W— departed, and after the medium had again relapsed into slumber the spirit of Dr. W— took "control" and announced the program for the sitting. Professor D— would give a short address on Prayer, and later an "apport"—one of the largest yet received—would be brought in three parts from China. The medium would be seated in a chair placed upon the table, and the sitters must join hands and keep them joined for perhaps, ten or fifteen minutes. A sitter must on no account let go of his neighbor's hand. If he did so the person whose hand was released must make the fact known at once, so that the lights could be turned up immediately.

The Professor took "control" after the manner of the other spirits believed to be present, and delivered an address somewhat in accordance with the teachings of Emerson. In vigorous language he contended that prayers for temporal benefits are useless, but that every sincere desire, followed by effort, for the good of humanity was strengthened by the spirit of good, and, receiving answer, became a beneficent influence.

The medium mounted his chair upon the table. The lamps were extinguished. The heavy coverings upon the windows and the barring of the door prevented the entrance of the slightest ray of light from the street. The darkness was impenetrable. The sitters joined hands and waited.

"Ha "Goo'-night, boss," said a voice in broken English from the top of the table.

"Good night, Abdul."

The medium was said to be under the control of Abdul, a Hindu spirit, who had brought all the "apports" received previously.

"To pass a time, you sing, you like," again said the voice from the gloom.

"All right, Abdul."

One of the sitters struck up "Sun of My Soul, Thou Savior Dear, It is not Night if Thou be Near," and with the hands tightly clenched—some of the hands trembling—the "circle" joined in hearty and loud singing. Then there was a pause, and the sound of fluttering or scuffling upon the table.

"Ha, I catch 'im, boss; oh, dis a beauty, you like a dis," announced the voice of "Abdul" from the darkness; "hoo, two, I catch 'em. Tree, I catch 'im."

The fluttering ceased, hands clutched more tightly, and there was an occasional sigh. Then the lamps were lighted.

The sitters were amazed to see that the medium upon the table was clothed from head to heel in a gorgeous Chinese costume, hat included, and that there was a queue or "pigtail" reaching from his head to the back of his knees. The medium, it was subsequently explained by the "spirit," believed to be that of Dr. W—, had come under the control of the spirit of a Chinese mandarin, who had been killed in China in an affray with the Tartars about twelve months before. The mandarin was shot in the head and mutilated, and his clothing—all except the boots or slippers, which were taken by the murderers—was left in a house near the scene until brought away by "Abdul."

The medium, clad in his grotesque costume, climbed down from the table and tottered round the room. In a moaning voice he said—"Lo-Hi! Lo-Hi-i-i!" pointed to his head as if appealing for sympathy, and seemed to be searching for something. Now and again, amidst a muffled torrent of puzzling articulations, he made savage passes with his arms, from which it was concluded that he was looking for his sword. Still tottering round the table the medium seized a Vienna chair, and raising it above him by his teeth. He grasped the end of the heavy table with one hand and raised it.

Resuming his place at the head of the table, the medium took off the gorgeous Chinese costume, from above his ordinary garments. The Chinese clothing was closely examined, and found to be splashed with a few stains—said to be the marks of blood. The "spirit" of the "mandarin" departed, and Dr. W— took charge again to answer questions from the curious. He explained that the "mandarin" had been looking for his sword, and being a man of reputed physical strength, had lifted the chair and the table to show his power. Those present vowed that feats like these were far beyond the natural strength of the medium. The "mandarin's" name was "Lo-Hi," but, for certain reasons, no particulars could be given as to the name of the town in which he had lived while on the "earth plane."

After advising that the medium should be given "a little stimulant," because of the exhausting exertions through which he had passed, the spirit of Dr. W— said "Good night," and the regular proceedings closed. The medium lay upon his chair, limp and apparently almost lifeless. "Sitters" commanded him to "wake up," but his eyes remained closed, and he breathed heavily. Once he had jumped up convulsively, and, making a dash for the door, muttered something about catching the train. He fell upon the floor. Restored to his chair, he spoke strangely in broken words, whereupon one of the "sitters" declared that "some of the bad Hindus" were trying to get control. They had seen their chance to take possession of the half inanimate medium directly after the departure of "the doctor."

"Clear out!" Clear out!" "No more controls to-night," commanded a leading "sitter," as he rubbed the medium's head, and passed his hands above him; "away with you!"

"Perhaps it is Abdul trying to come back," suggested another."

Finally the medium was awakened, and the company dispersed. It is expected that the trouble at the close will be explained by some of the visiting "spirits" at the next meeting. The Spiritualists present were satisfied that the results of the sitting were convincing proof of the truth of their faith.—The Age, Melbourne, Australia.

A Spirit Appears to a Priest.

The following account of a spirit's appearance was printed in "The Irish Messenger of the Sacred Heart," for November, 1889. It was written by an aged priest during his stay at Compton House, ——shire, 1870. The priest says:

"I was in bed and asleep soon after eleven o'clock, but was awakened by the sound of the clock striking twelve. Opening my eyes I was astonished to find the room lightsome. I raised myself in bed, drew back the curtain, and, with amazement and fear, beheld the figure of a lady standing a few feet from the bedstead. She seemed dressed in blue velvet, and her hands were joined in prayer.

"For some moments I could not articulate, but at length I said: 'For the love of God, tell me who you are and what you want.' She answered, with a voice so melancholy and yet so resigned, such as I had never heard before. 'Priest of God,' she said, 'I was known on earth as Blanche Mandeville, and owned this house and estate in the reign of Henry VIII. I lavished large sums upon it, and neglected the poor. I erected a chauntry in the parish church hard by, where my tomb may still be seen, and left money for masses for the repose of my soul. But, alas, soon after my death came the dissolution of the monasteries and the change in religion, and those masses, which should have helped me, who neglected to do penance for my sins, have been lost to me forever. Oh! for the love of Him who died upon the Rood, have pity on me.'"

The writer says that all his fear passed away in the pity he felt for the poor sufferer, and he promised that he would "say mass for her that morning, and would not fail to make a 'memento' for her daily." The light gradually faded, and he distinctly heard voices as of angels chanting the last lines of the "Dies Irae."—Light, London.

Magical Influence.

There was a great gathering of Americans one afternoon lately in response to an invitation from Mrs. L. H. McCormick to see her new Egyptian treasures in London, Eng.

These treasures include a collection of old earthenware goblets and cups. Among them is one of great size, which is of peculiar interest because it has the reputation of possessiong magic powers, having once belonged to a wizard of the court of an early Pharaoh. It is asserted that when misfortune threatens a small column of red smoke issues from the hollow.

Mrs. McCormick had to pay a fancy price for this goblet because its former guardians said a terrible fate was ordained for those who should permit it to be taken away.

This weird object has a great fascination for Mrs. McCormick's guests. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid examined it with great care and even went so far as to thrust her hand into the goblet, hoping to take unawares the denizens lurking inside.

All Nature Has Its Language.

The dumb brute creation is no longer existent. It is extinct. Even the insects speak. Dr. Henry McCook, the scientific parson of Philadelphia, allows that if we think of language as a vocal medium for conveying thought and emotion from one individual to others, the bugs and bees may be said to be dumb. For insects have no true voices or organs of speech, such as belong to articulate speaking men. They also lack the means of uttering cries characteristic of birds and beasts. But if we take language as simply an understandable medium for expressing emotions, insects are thus endowned. They express emotions by bodily gestures. And mimetic language, though far more limited, is not less intelligible than vocal speech. Indeed, it may be argued that a glance of the eye, a movement of the hand, a shrug of the shoulder, a stamp of the feet, a toss of the head, may betray in man true thought or feeling even when spoken language is used to conceal it. JOHN A. HOWLAND.

Gathers sweet or smart
Where the eyes are blind.
Where no echo clings.

In the night, the heart!

Shadows on the Wall.

Portrayed by the Pen of Henry Morrison Tefft, of Norwich, N. Y.

Every soul needs a confessor. Words sometimes are a greater blessing than gifts. We gather strength or weakness from those around us. "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend."

Some of the greatest works in literature and art have been accomplished under the inspiration of an individual ideal or presence—a presence either actual or imaginary. Love baffled, passions ungratified, affection unresponded to, are as powerful incentives to action as their full fruition and enjoyment. It is said of Beethoven that "He wrote passionate love music for others, but won no woman's love for himself."

We are ignorant of the power that controls the movement of our thoughts. We are impelled to act but cannot say by what force. The organs of the body are well defined, but the mind of man has never been analyzed.

There are more starved souls in the world than bodies. Heart hunger is harder to endure than bodily hunger. Physical suffering is not to be compared with mental suffering.

Very little is known of the inner life of our most intimate friends. Our criticism and estimate of men's motives, actions, and actual history is generally wrong. The real person is seldom on exhibition. The machinery that moves the individual along and controls his thought is all out of sight. Our judgments of contemporaneous men, events and things are weak. In the words, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes and dust to dust," the history and biography of the great majority of mankind are written up, there is no more to be said, the record is closed. Nothing that they have ever said or done or thought of, will ever again be noted. Wealth does not bring reverence nor immortality. I would rather be the author of "Home, Sweet Home," and die penniless, than die leaving nothing but the millions taken from the hands of honest toil. "Home, Sweet Home," has reached, touched, softened, and comforted more hearts than ever will all the libraries that Carnegie has enriched or the colleges that Rockefeller has endowed.

A small lever lifts a mighty weight. We cannot tell which is the most useful to the world, the professional man, the business man, the man who devotes his life to literature, or the mechanic. Who can say that the worm we crush beneath our feet is not just as important in God's view as the lordly man? Nothing in nature is trivial, useless or commonplace.

Whether a thing is good or bad, beneficial or hurtful depends upon circumstances. The electric current that rends the oak is the same power as the one that carries the message.

Nature adjusts itself to its surroundings; so does life. Men fit their religion to their business, not their business to their religion. Not one man in a thousand will sacrifice money for principle. The moment you touch the pocket of the most loud mouth reformer he suddenly becomes quiet and ceases to be an "offensive partisan."

There is just as much violation of the statute law and the moral in a community as it will tolerate, and no more. There are enough nominally professed Christians in every city, village and hamlet to obliterate every saloon, gambling den and brothel within its borders. There is no power in a law unless public opinion sustains it. There is no power in an opinion unless there is conviction behind it.

The speaker's words must carry with them the weight of conviction, of belief, of an abiding faith in the truths he proclaims, else he will find no audience. If the orator could put his deepest thoughts into words, if the painter could paint his impressions upon canvas, if the sculptor could carve out of marble the ideal statue he sees in his mind; if all this could be done, how satisfying it would be; but it cannot. There is always to be this reaching forward to the unattainable, the unrealized, the unknown, the absolute.

"We must remember," says Renan," that every idea loses something of its purity when it attempts to realize itself in act. Success is never attained without some chafing of the soul's delicacy. Such is the feebleness of the human mind, that the best cause rarely wins except by bad arguments."

The forces of the world are equally balanced. There is a tear for every joy, a sigh for every smile, a death for every life. For every need there is a supply. If a martyr is required there is always one ready for the sacrifice. No great movement ever failed for want of a leader. Somewhere is a man just ready to fill the place.

Oliver Wendell Holmes says, "I believe, if a man were to be burned in any of our great cities to-morrow for heresy, there would be found a master of ceremonies that knew just how many fagots were necessary and the best way of arranging the whole matter."

All things are related. Nothing stands isolated and alone either in nature or life. Everything is dependent. The superiority of one man over another is relative, limited. Here we see in part and prophesy in part; the whole circle is never visible. The deepest truths cannot be demonstrated. We can feel and recognize truth when we cannot define it. We see mentally what it is impossible for us to describe in language.

Poetry is not always expressed in words. There is poetry in motion, in sound, in form. A beautiful girl is a poem in flesh and blood. Tennyson once wrote in a lady's album, "From a poet to a poem." A beautiful picture is a poem on canvas. Oratory in its highest form is poetic—it must touch the imagination. The imagination makes up by far the better part of our lives; facts are "cold and cruel."

A grain of truth is all we get out of the most positive statement. We agree on certain things and call it history. Knowledge is tentative. Because the ablest men embrace a doctrine, it is not indisputable evidence that it is true. The most absurd beliefs have been held by the greatest minds. Ignorance is often bliss; it accepts whatever is handed down without argument. Belief is rest; it is happiness. The devotee of religion who accepts its teachings without thought or question is never disturbed by doubt.

"Great God I had rather be
A Pagan suckled in some creed outworn,
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn."

More people believe or fear that death ends all than dare express it. Knowledge does not bring happiness, nor wealth contentment. There is just as much enjoyment in a crude age as in a more civilized and cultivated one. Every blessing carries with it a curse; every virtue has its alloy of vice. Nothing is contradictory as a human being. How God-like man is at his best; how devilish he is at his worst. How grand and noble in his moments of exaltation; how low and grovelling in his moments of degradation. In the harmonies of life each note must be sounded. The orchestra is not complete unless all the parts are played. Nature and art are best displayed by contrasts; the same is true with humanity.

A certain French caricaturist is quoted as saying that he "emphasized his sense of beauty by displaying forms of ugliness that call up in contrast a mental vision of classic charm; that he emphasized his love of righteousness by holding vice up to ridicule; his love of integrity by setting forth the vulgarity of deception and vice."

In whatever line you view nature she is inexhaustible. No two individuals ever have been or ever will be just alike in looks or mental make-up. There are resemblances, but no copies. There is a diversity of gifts, moods, sentiments and opinions wrapped up in the same individual mind. The greatest men do not always see with the same vision. The man that is tender and considerate at one time, is hard and cruel at another; he may be free and generous on some lines, and close and parsimonious on others. The smallest people are the most consistent. To be great a man must believe in himself; he must have absolute faith in his own divinity; that he is in touch with the divine mind. The best thought of the world to-day believes that Christ was human; that he came into this world and went out according to the ordinary laws of nature. Christ says, "I and my Father are one."

Everything moves according to fixed laws; there are no special providences, no miracles. It rains on the Holy Sabbath as regular as upon any other day. Lightning just as soon strikes a church as a saloon. In a railroad disaster the saints have got to take their chances with the sinners.

What one person sees by instinct, by intuition, another has to reason out or not comprehend at all. Sensitive and appreciative natures can see grace, beauty and loveliness where others behold only the ordinary and commonplace; they can see meaning in painting or other work of art utterly unseen and unnoticed by dull and coarse minds. Not one man in a thousand, looking at a painting by the great masters, comprehends its meaning or the thought that dominated the mind of the artist who produced it. Correctness as to details is not always evidence of genius. A portrait painter may paint his subject perfect as to form and figure, but give it no soul or expression. An instrument may be played absolutely correct and yet carry with it no inspiration The most tender song may be sung in a manner that would defy criticism as far as the technical rendition of the same, but it may be lacking in power to touch the heart, feeling, or sentiment of a single hearer.

The soul of the musician must go into the instrument he plays or the song he sings. It was said of Liszt: "His music played by another seems like dead ashes, after the fire of his own touch and interpretation."

There is a personality about some persons that amounts to genius. At the very appearance of the clown in a circus, before he has uttered a word, the audience laughs, cheers and applauds; it is the same with comic actors upon the stage. Some men exalt and give dignity and interest to whatever they touch. They give force and character to the cause they espouse, whether it is good or bad. That power which one person has over another, or over an assemblage of people we call magnetism; but that explains nothing; it furnishes us no idea of the strange, subtle force. Nature is continually beckoning us on, throwing out here and there hints of mysteries in her keeping still unfathomed. It is claimed that every cell of which the human system is composed, possesses intelligence; that the tiniest portion of our body, even to a hair of the head or a finger nail, carries with it the characteristics of the person to whom it belongs. "Many of our advanced thinkers," says a writer, "are fond of advancing the theory that the medium of communication in the future will not be spoken words but the more subtle and genuine, if mute, language of the face, the eyes, the whole body. Sarah Bernhardt forcibly illustrates the effectiveness of this method, for even those who do not understand a word of French derive nearly as much pleasure from the great actress' performance as those who are thoroughly familiar with the language."

We seem to be entering only on the border land of knowledge. The world is a great art gallery; it is universal history; it contains a picture of all the past, a record of all events. "Light preserves all scenes; air preserves all sound." The past is a sure prophecy of the future. If we could translate what has already transpired we should know what is to come. The clairvoyant looks backward as well as forward. If the facts did not exist, either actual or potential, they could not be seen or told.

If man is a part of divinity; if he draws his knowledge from one universal fountain, when is his advancement and progression to stop? Is there anything impossible for him to accomplish? Yet history, science, tradition, fable and legend, all tend to show that when a certain point in the civilization of a people is reached, the hand on the dial begins to turn backward, and the more brilliant the light has been the more dense the succeeding darkness. There is nothing permanent either in nature or life. Even progression must cease somewhere and retrogression set in. No form of government can remain forever. No religious creed can endure the test of time. Side by side with creation goes on disintegration—gathering together and scattering abroad. Put a wall around a country and its civilization will die. Let down the bars and allow all who will to enter and the same will be submerged, drowned out. America will soon be dominated, socially, politically, and religiously by the foreign element; the native force is already being supplanted.

The family is the unit of a nation. First the family, then the clan, then the city, then the state, then the nation. Whatever weakens the home helps to destroy the nation. The government, in time, must stand or fall on the stability and purity of the home life. The effort of mankind is now and must be in the future directed toward converting the whole world into one common brotherhood. "At first," says Frank Norris, "the seed of the future nation was the regard for the family; * * * but the family grows, develops by lateral branches, * * * becomes the clan. * * * Then comes the time when the clans, tired of roving life * * * settle down in a chosen spot, evolves the dwelling house, and the encampment of the clansmen becomes at last a city; * * * men speak of themselves as Athenians, not as Greeks; as Romans, not as Italians. It is the age of cities. The city extends * * * they include other cities, and finally the state comes into being. * * * States become federated, pronounced boundaries fade, * * * at last the nation is born. * * * Will it not go on, the epic of civilization, the destiny of races, until at last * * * we * * * may * * * know that the whole world is our nation and simple humanity our countrymen?"

The ideals of a people as well as an individual, should always be higher than present attainments or present realization; and though the goal may not be finally reached, the course will be steadily upward.

"The dreams that nations dream come true."

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

'Twas night—the world in darkness lay,
In a shroud of fear and gloom,
In chains and shackles held and bound,
As in a living tomb:

Erroneous creeds and false beliefs
Had hidden Truth away;
Men's souls were steeped with fears and doubts,
And Night had swallowed Day.

They lived and prayed by faith alone:
Blind faith—'twas all they knew;
They groped in darkness, blackest night;
With no star shining through.

They only hoped, they did not know
Of life beyond this shore;
To them their loved ones passed away
To return to earth no more.

But lo! one day on the eastern hills
A new dawn brought night's close,
And the radiant Orient sun
In all its glory rose.

To the sisters in their humble home,
Came demonstrated light,
The knock—the rap—the whispered voice,
Then visions, clear and bright.

The veil had lifted, night had gone;
Truth's lamp would brightly burn.
There was no death, all was life,
And loved ones did return.

Just sixty years ago the light
Was newly given to the world.
To-day an army names its cause:
With banner white unfurled.

And now all men, all creeds, all sects
The truth begin to see;
The light diffusing through all life
Reveals Eternity.

All doubt is gone, all ignorant fear,
All gloom, all skepticism;
For now the light of knowledge shines
In true, pure Spiritualism.

'Tis but the beginning we have seen,
For greater things still shall be,
When man is more highly unfolded,
And his soul, like a bird is free.

Hark! now a voice of angel hosts
Cries: "Lift the banner high!"
Your watchword is "Progression!"
Your goal the sphere-decked sky.

All time, all life, all space is yours;
Lead on the army brave;
And Truth the world shall conquer,
And Love, the world shall save.

Teach mankind of a God of Love;
And a law of universal good;
Of Life eternal, endless growth,
And Universal Brotherhood.

THE MUTUAL HELPERS.

The Good Work They Are Doing.

The Mutual Helpers, which is an independent Ladies' Aid, chartered with the California State Spiritualists' Association, held its semi-annual election of officers, July 2, at the home of Mrs. Ringlep. The old officers were all re-instated for another term: Mrs. H. S. Bock, president; Mrs. K. V. Hambly, vice-president; Mrs. Trevett, second vice-president; Mrs. Cora D. Ringlep, secretary, and Mrs. Martha Stinerson, treasurer. Delegates to the C. S. S. A. were elected as follows: Mrs. Bock, Mrs. Hambly and Mrs. Kottenger.

The Helpers then voted to have a two months' vacation, the president to call the next meeting.

This society not only helps the local First Spiritual Union, but does work all over the state. It has helped the Children's Fraternal Home at La Crescenta, Cal., and responded to many calls through your paper; also has aided many poor families of San Jose, no matter what denomination, working ever for the good of humanity.

My Pretty Blue-Eyed Niece.

I have tasted disappointments, and have wasted many tears
In the coming and the going of my few allotted years;
I have worried and have hurried to make others happy be,
And have felt the cold discomfort that they handed back to me,
But there is one I find responsive, and I find such perfect peace
When I look into the visage of my pretty blue-eyed niece.

Katharine Meyers

When I'm tired of the struggle and would lay me down to rest,
When my soul is sad and weary with this human life at best,
And I vainly hunt the silence o'er and o'er for something sweet;
When I feel but cold suspicion and faint love from those I meet,
I soon lose all sense of sadness and my spirit finds release,
When I look into the visage of my pretty blue-eyed niece.

I can see the sun grow brighter and the stars take brighter hue;
I can feel my soul grow lighter, and my brain finds something new;
There's a something softly whispers, of a future full of weal;
Of a soul of purest sweetness and of love, and then I feel
As if lifted to the highest of earth-pleasure and of peace,
When I look into the visage of my pretty blue-eyed niece.

And that all the world may see her and her pretty winsome smile,
Which is not put on for winning, but is worn near all the while,
Here is reproduced a photo, and please give expression true;
Don't you think down in your spirit you could deeply love her too?
Do you wonder all my troubles are subdued by perfect peace
When I look into the visage of my pretty blue-eyed niece.

And as life is calmly flowing, and my soul is floating on,
There come visions of the changes, from the darkness unto dawn—
Back to darkness—alternating—something bitter, something sweet,
But I know this life is better, and that mine is more complete,
And I lose all sense of sadness in the light of perfect peace
When I look into the visage of my pretty blue-eyed niece.

DR. T. WILKINS.

COLORED VIEWS OF HUMAN AURA

Are Shown for the First Time in Plymouth Church—Only Trained Actually See Them—Effect of Every Passing Emotion on Astral and Mental Bodies Are Explained in Illustrated Lecture Made Possible by Clairvoyance.

For the first time in Rochester, pictures in color of the human soul were thrown on a screen last evening in Plymouth Church. The appearance of the astral and mental bodies of different types of men and women in various stages of enfoldment were seen. Dr. B. F. Austin, who delivered a lecture on "Auras and Colors of the Human Soul," introduced the audience to the Human world—a world in which character is read in the eye and human nature is easily determined, as one reads facial expression in every-day life.

To give the audience an opportunity to recognize the characteristics of various auras of the person whose pectures were given, a key explaining the colors was first shown. This key included twenty-five shades, ranging from the faintest yellow to a shade that was almost black. It was difficult to recognize all the variations in shading as the views were successively displayed, from the primitive state of the savage to the highest development of man.

In the course of his lecture Dr. Austin explained how the pictures are obtained. He said the astral and mental auras can be seen only by those who have clairvoyant vision. By these persons the picture is reproduced on canvas much as a painter reproduces a landscape or portrait. The paintings are then reproduced by the aid of color photography. The lecture given last evening was based upon a work outlined "Man, Visible and Invisible," by C. W. Leadbeater. The Material contained in the book was obtained by the aid of clairvoyants, the slides being taken from a variety of subjects.

With the exception of the pictures of the highly developed being, the slides were representations of ovoids, bearing a resemblance to the contour of the human body. It must be remembered, said the speaker, that only one view of the ever-changing appearance of the soul's auras is shown; thus only a faint conception of the actual aspect as seen by the favored one is obtained. Passing rapidly from the consideration of the primitive state of the savage, which to-day is rare, the speaker described a view of the auras of a person in a violent state of happiness, approaching a paroxysm of joy.

Over the whole ovoid was a thin mist of rose color. Back of this and seen through it were several wisps of cloud of a brighter color having centers resembling blood corpuscles. Across the oval picture were bright waving lines denoting rapidly vibrating sensations of pleasure. The view was typical of such joy as a mother knows at the birth of a child. It was explained that the paroxysms do not last for any length of time, but if often repeated have an effect on the aura of the mind and body.

Similar to this picture was one showing a paroxysm of devotion, with the exception of the color, which in the latter case was blue. The picture showing the effect of extreme devotion was taken of a nun in contemplation of a statue of the Virgin. The thin mist or cloud surrounding the astral body was of a bluish shade, and in this condition the speaker mentioned a common occurrence of the shapeless cloud over a congregation of worshipers. Dr. Austin called attention to the absence of the yellow color in the aspect of religious devotion, denoting the absence of intelligence. He said that this fact shows that there is more often a spirit of religious fervor without an intelligent conception of the reason or object of the devotion.

There was a vivid picture of the effect of strong anger on the human nature. Many dark spaces from which bright flashes of red resembling in appearance streaks of lightning denoted the person who indulged in uncontrolled rage. The effect of this passion on the human being is lasting said the speaker, and is to be avoided not only for its effect on the individual himself but also on the object of the anger. Even though no word is spoken the passing of such a paroxysm of rage is injurious to the person who has excited it he said. Fear has a similar effect on others. A picture of the aura of a person in great fear was gray, without lines, and when viewed in the living aura presenting a constantly trembling ovoid.

Dr. Austin indulged in a few pleasantries on the subject of love, the aura of which was presented in a view of crimson color. Pure love as shown in the picture is an example of a more highly developed state, said the speaker. Though the colors of sensuality were much in evidence, the shades denoting selfishness were almost entirely absent, and those of jealousy were of a higher order. The speaker gave some advice in connection with the view showing the effect of irritation. The general aspect of this slide was scarlet.

Angry spots or specks were seen in the scarlet picture denoting a recurrence of the periods of irritation. These specks increase with each indulgence in fits of irritation, finally becoming fixed. If a man allows himself to worry if the train is late or the coffee is cold; if a woman frets because the baby upsets the ink bottle or the cat disturbs the cream jug, the specks in the aura increase in number, said the speaker, and the ultimate effect is to spoil one's temper.

Some of the last views described the effect and appearance of good and poor health on the astral and mental auras. Attention was called to the influence of a person in robust health on others with whom he comes in contact. This influence is attributed to the outgoing rays as seen in the aura of a healthy person. In the case of persons in poor health the operation is reversed, the effect on others being depressing. Cases of despondency have a similar effect, it was explained.

For a half hour before the lecture an organ recital was given by Miss May Croughton. The organ, which was built more than forty years ago, is said to be one of the best in the city. —Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester, N. Y.

The book on which the above lecture is based, "Man Visible and Invisible," by C. W. Leadbeater, the celebrated Theosophist, can be obtained at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $2.25.

PASTOR WOULD TAX CHURCH PROPERTY.

Declares Legal Exemption Puts Unrighteous Burden on People.—Unfair to Nonbelievers.—Radical Stand Taken by the Rev. A. H. Harnly, Baptist Minister.

Taxation of church property was advocated strongly by the Rev. A. H. Harnly in a sermon in the Austin, Ill., Baptist church recently.

"The church of Jesus Christ," the pastor said, "will never have rendered unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's until she has paid her full quota of taxes on all the property she possesses.

"We claim in this country to have absolutely separated church and state, and that the church is in no way subsidized by the state. We boast of our religious freedom. We point with pride to the first amendment of the constitution, and we say religious belief and the support of religious institutions is altogether voluntary. We tax no one for religious purposes.

Church Makes Taxes Heavier.

"That is the way we talk, and that kind of talk sounds good. The only fault to find with it is that it is not so. State and local governments are supported by taxes assessed upon property. The rate of tax depends upon the amount of property assessed. The more property in a taxing district the lower the rate. To exempt property, therefore, is to increase the rate.

"Now there are millions of dollars' worth of church property that is exempt from tax. The burden of tax upon the remaining property, therefore, must be increased to make up the difference. And thus citizens who may have no interest whatever in the church, and who may not care to contribute toward its work, are compelled, indirectly, to do so.

"Baptists have fought splendidly the centuries through for soul liberty and the absolute divorcement of church and state, and the church that will have the courage to do that will win the blessing of God and the confidence of men."

DEAFNESS

Successfully Treated

By the Simplest Methods Yet Discovered.

Ninety-five percent of the cases of deafness brought to our attention are the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed relief is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of specialists to always effect a cure. Neither our ear drums cure deafness. But there is a scientific treatment for deafness and catarrh which is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor genorated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the vibration of sound. Actina is also very successful in relieving ringing noises in the head. We have known people afflicted with this distressing trouble for years to be entirely relieved by a few week's use. Actina has always been very successful in the treatment of hay fever, asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds, headache and other troubles that are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina will be sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. Our advice will be free as well as a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease. General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. and Mrs. Warne arrived home from Portland, Oregon, a few days ago, delighted with their trip. They are both now at Lily Dale, N. Y.

Mrs. W. McCaslin, who is well known at Lake Brady and other camps, will visit Lily Dale this year, and act as agent for The Progressive Thinker.

C. A. Thompson writes: "During the month of June and July 6th, I visited the following societies in the city, The Church of Progressive Spiritualists (colored), Society of Psychic Forces and The Starlight Spiritual Society, and while the weather was exceedingly warm, the enthusiasm of those present was still warmer and everyone seemed to be filled with the spirit of helping along our cause. Please permit me to say without mentioning any medium's name, that the tests and messages given at each meeting I attended were marvelous in each case, especially so were those given to the writer, as none of the mediums knew my questions which I wrote. May God and spirit friends continue to bless all those who are working for the upliftment of our cause."

A. F. Hill writes from Boston, Mass.: "Mass-meetings do much good to call attention to the subject of Spiritualism. A few writers under my leadership caused a great change in the statement of mediums and Spiritualism in America. Spiritualism is a science and a religion. It is the foundation of nearly all religions. Mediums are in demand in Massachusetts."

The Spokane, Wash., News contains the following: "C. G. Pence, president of the Law Enforcement League, says that the fight for the Sunday closing of theatres has been given up in this city and will probably be abandoned on the West Side. Public sentiment does not demand the closing of Sunday theaters to such an extent as it does the Sunday closing of saloons,' says Pence, 'and the fight will be dropped. The campaign is too radical, so we shall stop, rather than be considered fanatics.' This may result in theatrical men abandoning taking the test case to the United States supreme court, as was planned after the supreme court of Washington sustained the constitutionality of the Sunday closing law as applied to theaters."

Laura G. Fixen has sold her dainty cottage at Lake Helen, to Mrs Kate B. Lowber of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Lowber has been at the camp for a couple of seasons, and is one of the social lights there. Mrs. Fixen has a large number of Chautauqua engagements this summer. She lectures at Des Moines, Iowa, twice on Friday end Saturday; three times in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Sunday. Monday she speaks at the Beatrice, Nebraska, Chautauqua, and Monday evening at Lincoln, leaving at midnight for the East, beginning at the Miami Valley, Ohio, gathering. Mrs. Fixen is the only out and out Spiritualist who is invited to the orthodox pulpits and platforms everywhere, and she brings her hearers the broad gospel which we believe in and teach.

OBIT

On board the Clyde steamer, just as she reached the dock in New York, June 14, James D. White passed to spirit life. He was 84 years old, and a true Spiritualist. He spent the last twelve winters at Lake Helen Camp. For a number of years he was almost helpless from a shock, and was waiting patiently to go. Services were held at the Stephen Merritt undertaking rooms, New York. He leaves a wife, son and daughter. The remains were cremated. W.

G. H. Brooks writes: "I left for Lily Dale, N. Y., Friday, July 10. I am to speak there the first and last Sundays of the camp. I shall spend most of my time at the Dale. My wife will not accompany me. Her health will not permit, much to our disappointment. I go to Lake Brady, Ohio, and lecture there July 26 and August 4. I shall return from there to Lily Dale. I will respond to calls for funerals during my stay at the Dale, I returned home July 1st from a short trip in the interest of the State Association work. I was very successful. Send all mail and telegrams to Lily Dale, N. Y."

Margaret J. Miller writes: "The First Spiritualist Church of Santa Cruz, Cal., has started in its second year as an organization. Its prospects are fine for another year of good work. It was organized in May, 1907, by a grand medium, Mrs. Kate Heussman-Harveston of San Francisco. She is affiliated with the State. We have had many good speakers on our platform, including Mrs K. H. Harveston, Dr. Adah Patterson of Los Angeles, Mrs. Longley of Washington, D. C.; W. J. Colville, and Rev. Swami Mazzinanada. We also have some good local talent. We hope to gain many supporters of this glorious truth, to learn to live the true life of love, peace and harmony for ourselves and for all others we can reach."

The Southern Cassadaga opens February 7, and closes March 21, 1909. For particulars address Mrs. A. M. Spencer, Corresponding Secretary, Lake Helen, Fla.

Mrs. M. E Humphreys writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "I am receiving the The Progressive Thinker, and like it very much. The books are grand and beautiful. The Wanderer in Spirit Lands, and Fate Mastered, both are so helpful. I am a medium and will recommend your paper and books. I have only been in the work a little over two years."

BEAR IN MIND that the Editor of The Progressive Thinker Is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are required when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink... Write on one side of the paper only, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Prof. Crocker, a healer of great power, passed through this city last week on his way to Lily Dale Camp. He has been located for some time at Spokane, Wash., where he had a large practice. Mrs. Crocker will accompany him to the camp.

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "At the Universal Occult Society, 77 East 31st st., we had a very harmonious meeting, and it gave me great pleasure to introduce as our speaker Dr. E. H. Manning, a new worker in the cause. As the doctor is a stranger in the city, we hope other societies will extend a welcome to him, as he will be a valuable worker in the cause. His lecture was followed by spirit messages by Dr. C. A. Burgess, Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Stein and your correspondent."

W. J. Elmo informs us that he is now holding meetings in Little Rock, Ark. Mrs. Elmo is an excellent medium, well known in Chicago, and they will do good work in the South. Address them in care of General Delivery.

P. A. Norman writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "In regard to your premium book, Interwoven, Spirit Messages, etc., it is indeed a very remarkable book. A few years ago I had the misfortune to fall from a building where I was working, and broke my leg. After coming out from the hospital, and walking with crutches down town, I happened to notice a simple sign of a medium for independent slate-writing. My curiosity and skepticism induced me to walk up a flight of stairs, to investigate what this 'humbug' was. For a moderate fee I had my skepticism reduced to nothing, being as thoroughly convinced of 'spirit return' as any mortal being ever was."

Mrs. C. Bergere writes: "The Fraternal Daughters' semi-monthly social held at the home of Mrs. Goldstein, on Wednesday, July 8, was a success in every way. The Donkey created much amusement, especially when the tails were pinned on Mr. Adams or Knapp. Three prizes were won: First, by Mrs. Moyer; Second by Mr. Adams, and Booby by Mrs. Adams, who pinned hers on Mrs. Kepner. Notice will be given in next week's paper where the next meeting will be; also about the picnic. Cards will also be sent to all."

We deeply regret to learn that the lecturer and author, Mr. J. C. F. Grumbine must cancel all camp-meeting engagements, owing to the sudden and unexpected transition of his beloved wife. She passed away July 4, at 10:30 p. m., in her home in Brookline, N. Y. Miss Lucy C. McGee of the Church of the Higher Life, officiated. Her body was cremated.

After the 17th of July all mail matter for Prof. Wm. Lockwood, should be directed to him at Lily Dale, N. Y.

Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes "Members and friends of the Band of Harmony had a most delightful picnic at Lincoln Park on Thursday, the 9th. The day was perfect, and a goodly number were in attendance. Our next 'Summer social' will be held at the home of Mrs. George Newkirk, No. 498 Fullerton ave, on Thursday afternoon and evening, July 16. Mrs. Newkirk is a new and enthusiastic member of the Band of Harmony. All are cordially invited, and a grand time is certain. Ladies will please bring lunch for themselves and friends. Coffee served at 6 p. m.; coffee checks, 10 cents. Take Northwestern elevated, and get off at Fullerton station, go one block east, or surface car on Halsted to Fullerton ave, and go one block west.'

A business meeting of the Illinois Sunflower Club will be held on Tuesday afternoon, July 14, at 70 E. Adams street.

The following, written by Archdeacon Farrar, is well worth recalling and considering at the present time:

"Your souls are a picture gallery. Cover the walls of them with things serene, noble, beautiful, and the foul and fleshly will soon seem revolting. 'Hang this upon the wall of your room,' said a wise picture-dealer to an Oxford undergraduate, as he handed to him the engraving of a Madonna of Raphael, 'and then all the pictures of jockeys and ballet girls will disappear.' Try the same experiment with your own souls. Let their walls be hung with all things sweet and perfect—the thought of God, the image of Christ, the lives of God's saints, the aspirations of good and great men, the memories of golden deeds, noble passages of poetic thought, scenes of mountain and sunset and ocean. Oh, do this, and there shall be no room for the thoughts of carnal ugliness, which deprave corrupted souls."

My Grand Old Men.

They are grand old men whose faces hang on my study wall.

I have done with the old Grecian manly beauty—the flawless marble face, unscarred by thought or struggle or experience.

I want the new tragic beauty of countenance that tells of the conflicts and triumphs of life;

The palimpsest on which we may decipher all that is best in human history;

The beautiful lines and curves laboriously wrought by persevering love;

The face on which great souls have been trying for years to stamp themselves, and which grow more beautiful to the end.

Such are the faces of my grand old men. WALT WHHITMAN.

VERY ENCOURAGING WORDS.

From President R. F. Little, of the State of Washington.

In the early portion of the year I penned a communication to The Progressive Thinker, setting forth the condition of our Cause in the state of Washington. As I read it, later, and in print, it occurred to me that it bore the stamp of pessimism, and as I read it now, I am still haunted by this creature, to which, or to whom, I seldom grant a hearing. I remember that we had been rudely jostled by the chief of police, together with the machinations of the Ministerial Alliance of this city, and that a scattering of our forces had occurred. We cannot fight well and be peaceable without harmony of mind, psychic law cannot operate to good purpose and effect. When the elements are chaotic, unity is destroyed, and it appeared at that time these adverse conditions prevailed.

Be that as it may, I am pleased to state at this time, that, during the year our prospects have materially brightened. There seems to exist a unity and concentration of mind and effort that are truly encouraging. My invitation through The Progressive Thinker for correspondence by those contemplating a visit to, or residence in this state, met with a response not only voluminous, but sympathetic and inspiring. The very desirable result has followed, viz., a strong current of vibratory energy from other portions of the country has been turned in the direction of our state. Psychic law annihilates time and space; once called into action, it operates with the certainty of inflexible law. Truly, a wonderful agency has been placed in the keeping of the twentieth century; its use conditioned largely on the knowledge and ability to apply. Alas! few know so little of its power; and so many allow its vitalizing strength to go unemployed; or, what is infinitely worse, misapply it, in wasted effort, or shallow and selfish purposes.

By and by, we shall know it better, and apply to higher aims and purposes.

But to the matter in hand.

We found, when fairly in harness, that the elements of strength were still in existence, and that what was most needed was an earnest effort to swing them into line. This was cheerfully undertaken; and now that we are entering upon the closing labors of the year, terminating with the encampment from July 12 to Aug. 2, and convention work Aug. 3 and 4, a brief review is doubtless in order.

As stated above, the first official action was to address a communication to The Progressive Thinker Strange but true we can reach more people in this state and do it quicker by communicating with The Progressive Thinker than by any other method. The response to this appeal was both generous and general.

The call for speakers and psychics was pronounced; and the surprising fact was in evidence that the call for speakers was in excess. Are we outgrowing the desire for phenomena? This is not desirable, but a more equal division is a hopeful indication. There is a strong tendency at times to overbalance. We do not need to place our phenomena in the hands of the scientists (so-called) nor philosophy in the keeping of the "intellectuals." The "open route" that nature provides for all is best; and after all, evidence in this case is almost wholly a matter of personal experience.

We have succeeded in covering considerable new territory during the past year. Several new workers have added strength to the movement, and the endeavor has been made to keep both philosophy and phenomena before the people. I believe there has been less divergence during the year than formerly. That is to say, we have heard less of "New Thought," less of Theosophy in the form of the dogma of re-incarnation, and more of the vibrating power of Spiritualism.

Not that these lines, in so far as they are well grounded, are useful, but they cannot and will not supersede the parent of them all.

Space will not permit personal mention to any great extent; but it is simple justice to say that the old workers, together with the new, have given the State Association a sympathetic co-operation that cannot be excelled. Willing hands and earnest hearts are the leading characteristics. We must not fail, however, to call attention to our society in the north that has done so well and the movement in the south, headed by Brother H. B. Allen. In the first instance our friends at Bellingham have moved out of the old rut under the leadership of our stalwart worker, Brother Taylor, ably aided by all the earnest workers of that city, whose names I would delight to mention if space permitted; and now own and occupy a temple of their own, have purchased a fine piano, and not satisfied with these attainments, are publishing a bright monthly magazine, and making a success of it, financially as well; all this grand work received the co-operation, directly, of the friends "across the line" (if there be such a line) and bears the regal stamp of absolute loyalty and total absence of the thought of self.

Brother H. B. Allen, at Etna, has been brave enough and generous enough to build, at his own expense, a temple, and the accompaniments of a successful center for Spiritualistic effort. This is great and honorable work. We hope it may soon become the rule, and not the exception. Spiritualists will be on the "rock" and our speakers and psychics will be poorly paid as long as our cult pays tribute to the "rent lords." Better occupy a "shack" or tent, and own it, than pay a royalty to "unearned increment."

Not the least of the successes of the past year, should be placed, a larger acquaintance with our friends in Victoria and other Canadian points. There has always existed a pleasing relationship, and our speakers have heretofore enjoyed working with our northern friends. I think, however, this year, the "pleasing bonds" have been made stronger, as some of our workers from Seattle have been closely in touch with them. Mrs. Lillian N. Foster and Mrs. Lucy Hamilton have both done effective work. The writer also spent two days in Victoria as the guest of Captain Geo. Caven, and attended the society meeting on Sunday evening.

Captain Caven and his good wife know how to entertain and make one "feel at home." If you don't feel at home, it is the visitor's own fault. This kindly spirit, and a visit to the "Gorge" and the "Hill," etc., made the trip a delightful one. We are going to visit Victoria again sometime, and remain until we are driven away.

By the way, we failed absolutely to find any "boundary line," either between the two countries or the inhabitants thereof, though according to the "books we should have discovered both. Geographically, there may be a "line of division," but, if so it will take a "submarine" to find it. And as to the people, we noticed a cosmopolitanism that was large and commendable. Down East Yankees, English Canadians, straight Canadians, Scotch-Irish, "plain" Irish, Scotch without alloy, together with Hindu, Chinese and Japanese, all mixed in the same "hilarious confusion" as in Seattle. If there is any line of demarkation, it is purely "psychological." In time it will disappear. The sooner the better.

The people there write of the visit of that other American foreigner, Mrs. Stein, of Detroit, Mich. According to the tenor of the reports, she pleased them mightily. This tallies well with the record wherever she has labored on the Pacific coast. We sometimes marvel at her success. She seems to build rather slowly, but joins completely in the end. There is evidently a strong "line up," with an agency invisible and invincible, stirring the soul as well as intellect.

We are becoming exacting, to some degree, as to the external accomplishments of our public workers. The best acquirement that I know anything thing about is a close alliance with the spirit world. We inspire as we ourselves receive. We touch the souls of others by the level of our own. And the larger soul-life draws to its larger level. The lack of soul experience leaves but the skeleton of a life.

The dominant Methodist church has a perfect system of ecclesiasticism, but the spiritual power of its founders has well nigh disappeared. A portion of the membership is famishing from lack of spiritual substance. It will never receive it until the barriers between them and the spirit realm are moved away.

Spiritualists may well profit by the history of that movement. Give us soul-life, soul-realization, and we become qualified for the high office of ministers of Light. I believe in the end we will discover this secret of true success.

We have an able corps of spiritually minded workers in our ranks, and an army of invisible helpers. A combination of the two will render our movement invincible. Ecclesiastical persecution can only retard, it cannot prevent its growth.

We hope to add some strength to this spiritual union at our coming camp at Edgewood. At its conclusion we shall be pleased to state whether or not our ideal has been realized.

They That Live in the Atom.

Atoms as solar systems are familiar. The attractive center or "sun" of the atom is a core of what we somewhat vaguely call positive electricity, for for gravitational attraction is substituted electric attraction and for planets we have electrons, or particles of negative electricity which revolve around the center, and relatively to their size are quite as far apart as Jupiter and Mars from the earth. Prof. E. E. Fournier suggests that possibly the electrons or planets of these little systems are inhabited. Nothing is small or great, but thinking makes it so. Mr. Fournier's conception of the supra world makes us realize that our ordinary notions have no more real validity than would the notions of one of our blood corpuscles as to the nature of the stream in which it finds itself. To such corpuscle itself is its own end, and it would be highly astonished on being told that it really was only one of countless billions which are regarded merely as subordinate parts of an organism, no less alive than itself, the dimensions of which, relatively to the corpuscle, are perhaps as great as the dimensions of the solar system, or indeed the stellar system to ourselves. If the size and anatomy of man were revealed to one of his tiny constituent cells, would they not appear as mere mechanical, insentient and monstrous as the stellar heavens do to us, looking upon them from within? Our solar system with its planets and their planets or moons may quite fairly be likened to a constituent atom of a mighty molecule or organism which we call the stellar universe. The number of such atoms or solar systems constituting our particular stellar systems constituting our one hundred millions, is by no means incomparable with the number which must be contained in the smallest living organism known as such to us. To regard the secular movements of the stars as absolutely long is as unwarrantable as to regard one year of an electron, its period of rotation within the atom, as absolutely short.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

The moral maxims of the New Testament have become in many instances obsolete, and the development of society is evolving new rules of conduct. Another table of commandments is in preparation, and will be given by men to God as truly as were the first. They will very likely find utterance in the "resolutions" of a convention composed of the wisest and best men of the world. Perhaps the new table will embrace such laws as these: 1. Thou shalt give women equal rights with men. 2. Thou shalt give a fair day's pay for a fair day's work, and the laborer shall share with the capitalist in the profits of their enterprises. 3. Thou shalt not protect one industry at the expense of another, and thou shalt not refuse free trade with other nations. 4. Thou shalt tax all property alike, religious or secular. 5. Thou shalt not give religious instruction in public schools, nor force any one to pay for the support of religious practices which they do not approve. 6. Thou shalt not advance the price of merchandise by "corners." 7. Thou shalt lay up treasure upon earth, but thou shalt use it for the benefit of man.—Robert C. Adams.

WANTS DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

Eighty-one Years Old, Plants and Hoes Large Garden and Reads The Progressive Thinker.

To the Editor:—Among the many splendid letters written me in reply to the advertisement of my forthcoming book of poems, is this remarkable statement, which I have the audacity to ask you to publish:

Milton, Rock Co., Wis., June 11, 1908
Dr. T. Wilkins,—Sir:—I read in The Progressive Thinker that your book of poems wil soon be published, and if so, I want a copy; I love poetry and I have wished many times I had them in book form so I could preserve them for my beloved children. I am the widow of Dr. E. W. Stevens, who wrote "Watseka Wonder." I am 81 years old, well and happy, though somewhat shaky from hard work, as I plant and hoe my own vegetable garden, three-fourths of an acre, and raise an abundance of fruit on another acre the other side of my house. Wish I had plenty of money to pay some lecturer to come here and talk to the people. I am out in the country 5 miles from the city of Janesville, in a little cottage of my own; and it is lovely here. I read The Progressive Thinker and enjoy it so much. I want my neighbors to read it, but some will not because they are Methodists or Catholics, and are prejudiced. But they are good to me, and treat me kindly. Fraternally,

MRS. OLIVE A. STEVENS.

Eighty-one years of age, well and happy! Read that again and again, you who think you are weighed down with a mighty woe! Cast a glance in the direction of that little cottage of comfort and contentment, of old age and energy, of motherhood and peace; of spirituality and the blaze of life that should fill the world with joy and hope and reconciliation. Think of this aged woman planting, hoeing and pulling weeds in the burning sun of a hot summer day, just to be independent, at harmony with the world and hugging to her soul The Progressive Thinker and a book of poems, as her comforter.

Will there be any stars in her crown?
Will there be any weal over there?
Will the angels of soul-land ever frown
When she climbs up the golden stair?

DR. T. WILKINS.

"YE OLDEN TIMES."

The Whole Truth Told in Regard to the Same.

To the Editor:—I find in the issue of The Progressive Thinker of July 4, an article signed by J. W. Chambers, in which he gives some prices as they were 60 and 70 years ago, but by giving only a part of what is true so for as it goes, there will certainly be a wrong impression made upon the minds of those who are not old enough to remember how things were in the so long ago.

Yes, 50 cents was the price per day, of ordinary labor. Carpenters received $1, but other things were in proportion. One could get board and bed for $1 per week. Seventy years ago my father hired a house and lot on the edge of a small village for a year for the use of which he paid $12, one dollar per month. The house was not finished in modern style, but it was comfortable and large enough for a family of seven. We never felt crowded, but with this house there was a plot of ground on which we raised vegetables enough for summer use and some to lay by for winter.

A little sister came to me that summer, making eight of us. A woman was employed two weeks at 75 cents per week, and then our mother took the helm again. The doctor's bill was $3.00. To-day it is expected to employ a nurse at $10 or more per week, and a girl in the kitchen at present wages besides, and the doctor wants from $15 to $25; a house and lot like the one spoken of would now cost nearly or quite as much per month as father paid for the year. Does not this part of the truth give a different look to the 50 cents a day wages as compared with present wages?

Yes, calico was 25 cents per yard, but it wore much longer, was of better make than we have now, and a good calico dress was nice enough to wear anywhere, while most of the home wear was spun and woven at home—not quite as polished, but very durable. Sheets, pillow-cases, towels and table cloth were also made at home, and much of the finer linen thus made is not outdone now by machine-made material.

As to the price of wheat, corn, pork, your correspondent has taken the lowest figure. Sometimes conditions came about which made these staples much higher. Seventy-two years ago the past winter flour was $10 per barrel. I do not remember the prices of other farm products; but do know that the farmer's pork in years when acorns were plenty and the hogs ran loose, cost him nothing but to catch, kill and make ready for market.

The same will be true to-day if the farmer has a forest of oaks fenced in, but his stock of any kind is no longer permitted to run at large. As to the price of corn, since the trusts were established, railroads built, etc., that staple has been burned for fuel on our Western prairies. Wouldn't pay for marketing. I do not know what wheat was sold for, but very low. There have been instances when sent to commission merchants to be sold, the commission, the freight, etc., has taken all or about all. But these, bad years, surplus of crops, etc., should not be taken as a standard when summing up the trend of events, as to their significance.

One thing is certain, we had no tramps in those days, no idle men for lack of employment, and the farmer's latch-string was always out to the stranger, and his hospitality unstinted, and if you wanted to board with him for awhile he would ask you $1 per week, and often would furnish better board than can be had now for $5.

A to what N. F. Ravlin writes, I feel quite sure his large experience warrants his conclusions. Commencing public life a popular Baptist minister, he was of the growing kind, and getting new light, he left the church for the ranks of progress, and for years he has been an earnest worker, only waiting now to join his loved ones gone befoe.

But changing the subject, I am stopping a few weeks in Battle Creek, Mich., the place from which I issued my first paper 34 years ago. I have had the pleasure of meeting that earnest worker, Will J. Erwood, who has just closed a year's engagement with the society here, and is now booked for six camp-meetings, two in Michigan, one in Wisconsin, and three in Kansas. What next I know not, but he will be true to himself, hence true to the truth he sees, wherever he is. Would we had thousands of such.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago. Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

N. S. A. Convention at Indianapolis, Ind.

It is somewhat premature to announce the convention of the N. S. A. to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 20 to 24, 1908, but it is early receiving so much attention, and so many are interested that it is best to state the exact date, as above.

The convention will begin on Tuesday morning, and conclude not later than midnight of the following Saturday. Many who are now arranging to attend, and as delegates desire the facts of the coming important assembly, will appreciate this advance notice, if my correspondence warrants such a conclusion.

The early interest in the annual convention is certainly an indication of a grand one to be held this year.

Announcements will be made soon; and these suppled to all who may desire. The addition of a Monday night reception, and the following Sunday mass-meetings, will increase the desire of many to attend.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

In Reference to the Indiana State Association.

The Indiana State Association of Spiritualists, through the management and kindness of the Chesterfield camp organization, has been granted the privilege of holding a Grove Basket Massmeeting on Sunday, July 19. This is just one Sunday before the beautiful grove is opened to the public proper for the camp season.

The Indiana State Association is working hard to make all arrangements for the coming N. S. A. convention, which will be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, Oct. 20 to 24. The best of talent will be secured, and message bearers will be present.

The camp season is short this year, and this will afford an opportunity to visit the beautiful grove early and hear speakers who are not on the camp program. The State Board desires a full attendance, that they may present their state work to the people of Indiana. Remember the date, July 19.

ISAAC B. RICH.

The Passing of An Old-Time Spiritualist—A Prominent Factor in Connection With the Banner of Light.

To the Editor:—I have looked in vain in the columns of your valuable paper for a notice of the mortal demise of one of the earliest, most devoted and prominent Spiritualists of the country, especially of New England, that section in which Spiritualism took an early and most effective hold on thousands of intelligent people, mainly through the influence and labors of The Banner of Light, of which the subject of this sketch was business manager for over thirty years. He passed to the higher life May 10, of the present year, at the ripe age of eighty-one. He was born in Bucksport, Maine, and in all the region round that town he is beloved and now his memory is honored, for he never forgot the place of his nativity, and he made it a point to spend a portion of each summer there amid the scenes of his boyhood, preferring to rest in that hallowed spot to accompanying members of his family to fashionable resorts, or on extended trips for pleasure.

Mr. Rich was essentially a man of modest tastes, and a son of the people; he had no desire for display, and flaunting fashion had no allurements for him. He was a worker all his life, rose to business eminence and wealth by his own energies and active labors. As a practical printer, in press work, or as an attache in theatrical houses, from "call boy" to lessee and manager, he gained ripe experience and strength of mind which made him a power in every undertaking and calling that he entered.

But it is with his Spiritualism that I am most concerned, for it was in the line if his business management of the good old Banner of Light that he was brought mostly into notice as an advocate for our cause, and as a quiet but energetic worker for the spread of its teachings and truths. For over thirty years he filled this position, sparing neither of his means nor of his counsel in the defense and dissemination of Spiritualism. With his business partner, Editor Luther Colby, he did what he believed was right for the protection of mediumship and for the spread of both the phenomenal demonstrations and the philosophical tenets of our movement and undismayed by frowns, threats or persecutions from those who did not accept our teachings or approve the course of Spiritualism, he went fearlessly forward till mediumship became a matter of household discussion and Spiritualism ceased to be a tabooed subject among all but its followers.

For a period of fourteen years, I was associated with the proprietors of the Banner of Light. As its message bearer for its free circles, and as psychic for the weekly private seances of Messrs. Colby & Rich, I may be presumed to know much of the true spiritual status and worth of both these good men; and I can truthfully say that I ever found them both honest, sincere, humane and devoted Spiritualists, conservative to prudence on some questions, but sufficiently radical on all to keep in the forward march of the age; both staunch friends of mediums and noble defenders of immortal truth.

When the wisest and widest history of our movement, as one of the grandest and noblest factors of the ages in the progress of humanity, is written, the name of Isaac B. Rich will hold an important and just place therein, because he was a quiet man, retiring from contact with the world, except as far as his business required. He was sometimes unjustly accused by thoughtless or loud-mouthed Spiritualists as being only a money-getter, or as "No Spiritualist;" and for more than twenty years I have at one time and another, denied these false assumptions, and given instances of his nobility of character, his generosity and of his true Spiritualism, though for a number of years now I have seen and heard but little of him and his work.

During my fourteen years of administration in the free circle room of the Bannerof Light (and I do not mean that I served gratuitously, for I had a good salary, the Banner of Light proprietors always paid good salaries to all in their employ, this being one expression of their sense of equity) we held weekly private seances for Messrs. Colby & Rich, at which many matters were discussed by them with their counsellors and mine, Spirit John Pierpont. At all of these seances, Mr. Rich always looked eagerly for written messages from his son George, his friend Dr. Kittredge, and after her transition, from his beloved wife, Mary. His watch for, and reception of, these communications, were sufficient refutation of the charge that he was no Spiritualist, not to speak of the thousands of dollars that he paid from his private purse for the support of meetings in New England, and for needy mediums and aged Spiritualists.

After the business part of the weekly meetings with their spirit advisers was concluded, Mr. Rich invariably spent an hour or more in quietly conversing with "Father" Pierpont on spiritual matters, asking him of the spirit world, its laws and conditions, its realities and mode of living, including a whole range of subjects on these and philosophical questions.

Two years before I retired from the service of the Banner, my Guides notified these men and myself when that event would come. One day in sitting, about six months before I left the establishment and went west, Mr. Rich said to the spirit, "Father Pierpont, I wish you would make me a promise." The reply was, "I will do what I can, my son."

"Promise to stay with me as long as I am in the body."

The spirit said "I have a high regard for you and am interested in your welfare. I will promise to be with you all that I possibly can while you remain on earth, but I cannot promise to remain in charge of this work, for I am called in various directions elsewhere. I am not only with this medium, but have duties and works in many places. The time of this medium, and my own in connection with this establishment, is nearly out, but I will always bewith you as a friend and helper."

I believe the spirit has been with him, and many others also, and that he was met by Father Pierpont, who was given this paternal title by the proprietor of the Banner, because they loved him as a father when he entered the spirit world.

Mr. Rich, like his partners, was very generous. Many times it was my duty to collect funds for various poor mediums or other needy people. I never applied to them in vain, they always gave lavishly and for practical purposes. The last letter I received from Mr. Rich was less than two years ago. I wrote to him asking that he give me a donation to swell the fund I was collecting at Onset for the N. S. A. pension work. He responded with his check for One Hundred Dollars, and a cordial letter which was full of friendly words. He was a true Spiritualist—not faultless, but human, kind and sincere.

STARS OR PLANETS.

An Interesting and Instructive Lesson in Astronomy.

The genial and able W. F. Jamieson, in taking up his pen to puncture a critic exposes himself to a somewhat similar operation. While it is true that scientific men in deference to popular speech, or as a sort of poetic license, speak of certain planets as "morning and evening stars," they will tell you what, strictly speaking, the term star is only applied to those distant orbs which shine with their own light.

No astronomer would have said "the nearest star is about 38 millions of miles away," for two reasons: First, because the term star, so used, would be misleading; and second, even if applied to a planet, it would not be true.

Brother Jamieson says: "Correct; is not Mars a star?'

Not scientifically speaking, Brother J., and it is not the nearest either. Venus is very much nearer. Mars, when in opposition, varies from 40 to 60 millions of miles in distance; Venus is only about 25 millions of miles away, and one of the minor planets, Eros., sometimes approaches within 14 millions of miles of the earth.

When I read the sentence criticised by Dr. Hutcheson I passed it by as a typographical error or a slip of the tongue. No well-informed person would deliberately make such a statement.

It must be admitted, however, that many equally indefensible things are said, particularly by those who claim to speak in trance, or under control. A noted and really eloquent trance speaker made Columbus discover America in the Mayflower. Another, under the "control" of Copernicus, discoursed very confidently upon the inhabitants of Jupiter. As astronomers regard this planet as incapable of sustaining life, I desired to test the spirit before accepting its dictum upon so important a matter. I therefore asked him how to explain the difference between the Copernican and the Ptolemaic systems, the "control" at once began to get weak and abruptly left—perhaps to refresh his memory by a perusal of his own writings.

Prof. Huxley, who, while in the form, never turned his back to a foe, yet while speaking as a spirit through a medium, fled incontinently when I asked a question or two regarding his famous discussion with Prof. Owen upon the comparative size and structure of the brain of man and the higher apes.

I do not insist that our speakers should be absolutely up to the mark on all scientific questions. The moral social and spiritual uplift of mankind may be preached without such accomplishments, but I do think that our public teachers should know enough to be certain of their ground, whether the utterances are their own or of some ex-carnate spirit.

SEEK HAPPINESS.

When trouble throws a dark'ning veil
Around you, in your keeping
Is strength to make its shadows pale;
Such strength is not in weeping.

When heavy clouds obscure the way,
No cheering sun is shining,
That strength to make all bright as day
Will seek the silver lining.

Look always to the right in life;
The gain is yours by doing it.
Farewell to envy, worry, strife;
Find happiness in wooing it.

ANGELS.

Angels are near us day by day,
Although we fail to recognize
The beauty strewn along life's way,
The bliss that in their presence lies.

They share with us the thorny path,
Bend o'er us in the night of pain,
And lay their hands upon our brows
Till hope illumes life's sky again.

And but a narrow stream divides
Their lovely, balmy sphere from ours,
Where music blends with rippling tides
That waltz through fields of fadeless flow'rs.

We walk with angels close to God,
And germs of truth and purest love
They sow within our yearning souls,
To fit us for their home above.

PROTECT GENUINE MEDIUMS.

Let Dishonest Pretenders Be Punished by Due Enforcement of Law.

To the Editor:—It is with a sad feeling I undertake to address you this morning in regard to what is called "dishonest mediums." What an epithet to apply to our soul-inspired earth-angels. I have been a Spiritualist for over fifty years, and for eleven consecutive years of that time was president of the Clackamas County Society of Spiritualists, consequently had ample opportunity to observe the motive of all those who visited our yearly camps at New Era, calling themselves mediums. Also within the last half century I have had the pleasure to attend hundreds of private seances, and I can conscientiously say that during all those years I have not met one medium whom I had reason to believe was in any way dishonest in his or her practice of mediumship.

Sometimes the medium may be imposed upon by conflicting opinions of his guides, or by a lack of knowledge, on the part of the one officiating, and the medium himself not in the least to blame.

But I am compelled to admit that I do have reason to believe there are persons calling themselves mediums who practice fraud in the name of mediumship on every occasion; but these are not mediums for the demonstration of life beyond the tomb, nor should such be allowed to bear the sacred name of medium. There are laws now on our statute books to punish all who obtain money under false pretense; which laws should be enforced to the letter on every occasion of this kind. Let pretenders prove their claims or go to jail.

But why such zeal to protect the sacred calling of mediumship against impositions of any kind, and not the sacred calling of other religious teachers.

Christian people are imposed upon, and the Christian ministry suffers disgrace when a pretender calling himself a preacher agrees for a consideration, to preach from a Christian pulpit doctrine he does not himself believe.

Here is another clear case of obtaining money under false pretense, and should meet the condemnation it deserves.

But both Christian and Spiritualist should be careful what they promise to give for a consideration.

The Spiritualist medium should not promise any evidence or demonstration of life beyond the grave, but "wait to see," and let the investigator judge for himself.

Should a Christian preacher engage for a consideration to preach the word of God, is it possible he could fill his engagement or his teaching harmonize with truth? But he would be liable to a fine for false pretense.

Men may preach for a consideration what they believe to be truth or believe to be God's word, if we prefer that name without being entangled in the law for false pretense.

Protect all religious teachers alike, and serve all pretenders with a just condemnation.

All teachings of whatever name or nature for the good we can do should be in the suggestive mood. The "Believe-or-be-damned" mode of teaching is irksome to every refined soul on earth, and as far as my observation goes, Spiritualists generally have adopted the suggestive mode of teaching, and I earnestly recommend the same mode of teaching to our Christian friends.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire."

Religious teachers cannot live on the wind alone. A little bread with the wind gives more strength of body. Yet we should strive to avoid any near approach to commercialism in our labors for religion and the good we can do. WM. PHILLIPS.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

June 18, 1908, my dear wife, Lovina B. (Korst) Hutchins, aged 33 years, passed to spirit life. In early childhood it was noticed that she communed with those called departed or dead. She was encouraged to devote much of her time giving helpful messages from spirit friends to those here in distress and to inquiring minds. It simply astonished the skeptical when she peered back in their lives and described an early home or where a mother rocked him when a baby, or nursed her under the shade of a certain tree by some stream of water, perhaps long forgotten; or a cabin and its detail furnishings, the pictures and the different rooms, the different crops and woods, if any, on the farm; the direction and distance to town, the neighbors also, or where one lived in a town or city.

Looking up an absent member of a family for the anxious ones, she described some lumber camps; in one instance, a curious cash-box he was making, and when the son would return home to Toledo, would pass back and forth past his mother's house and not come in. She described the color of the garments he wore, including the buttons, etc.

In a few months he returned, but so late at night he passed back and forth by his home, then to a hotel until morning. How did she foresee the coming home, etc.? She generously gave her services to local Spiritualist societies; when so young they stood her on a chair to give her clear and pointed tests. In one instance pointing to a strange young man in the audience, she described his spirit mother, who wanted to know what business he had coming there. (Both still orthodox.)

We have been married nine years. In papa's care she leaves baby Laurel, of nineteen months, and Lincoln, aged seven. No doubt she has now greeted our young spirit daughter, now three years and a half in spirit life (twelve days in this), though she had often seen the spirit child with our family when she was living.

Through her mother love, no doubt, she will still continue to watch over our home and help guide the little footsteps, and continue to help me from a higher position. The funeral services were conducted at our residence, 457 Seward avenue, by Sarah A. Lewis (inspirational, of this city.

ACTION OF THE MIND.

Its Wonderful Effect on the Body.—Her Teeth Was Under the Bed, Yet She Went Into Spasms.—Justly Indignant When She Found She Had Not Swallowed Them.

To the Editor: This incident from the New York Daily World scores ONE for Christian Science, as set forth a loud peal at the door bell of Dr. Daniel McGuire, of Tompkinsville, brought him to a front window in his night dress one morning.

Harry Wagner, of New Brighton, was dancing in the moonlight on the lawn.

"In humanity's name, doctor, be quick. Mrs. Wagner has swallowed her teeth and is fast choking to death. The teeth are in her throat and won't go up or down."

Dr. McGuire sprang into his trousers, then into his automobile and he and Wagner raced to Mrs. Wagner's bedside. When they got there two physicians from the S. R. Smith Infirmary were working over her, and, although she was black in the face from choking she was telling them she wanted her own doctor.

Dr. McGuire, after a hasty examination, failed to find anything in her throat, so had her taken in an ambulance to St. Vincent's Hospital, where she was laid on an operating table and given chloroform.

Three doctors got together and used first a probe and then the X-rays. Nothing showed. Mrs. Wagner even in her unconscious state still exhibited convulsions of the throat, although after all the probing and prospecting there was no sign of the swallowed teeth.

Finally it was decided that an operation must be performed; but, as a precautionary measure, a hospital orderly was sent to the Wagner home to see if there were any false teeth lying around there.

Within half an hour, during which Mrs. Wagner went into hysterics twice, the man came back.

He laid a set of teeth on the table.

"They were under the lady's bed; she doubtless dropped them out while sleeping."

Mrs. Wagner literally rose from the operating table in wrath.

"Gimme those teeth!"

But alas, against Mrs. Wagner's firmest conviction they fitted to a nicety and she had to acknowledge that they were hers. But she had the last word on her husband.

"Why didn't you look under the bed before stirring up all this fuss?"

Really, what next in this curious world of ours, when the action of the mind is thus exhibited?

SCIENTIST.

SOLILOQUY OF THE LABORER.

It is the morning of the Sunday. The long week's work is done;
In the struggle for existence the week's battle has been won;
And the quiet rest of Sunday "knits up the raveled sleeve of care."
And the burdens of another week will be lighter now to bear.
'Tis the dream out here for a single day, there, the joy of life one never feels
In the roaring of the blazing forge and the grinding of the wheels;
The song of birds he does not hear,
and never sees the pending sky,
In the blinding dust and blazing steel and strained nerves and tired eye,—
These tell the story of the week, and Sunday's brief relief from pain,
From weariness and over-work then back to the blinding forge again.

And what is all this labor for? That I may earn a little bread
For the patient wife and baby ones—
'twere better they were dead—
What hope for them when I am done?
There is no beckoning hand,
No willing arms to help them up, nor strength to make them stand;
But everyone to pull them down, and step on them that he may climb,
For what are human souls but ore to coin the dollar and the dime?
And human hands are only cogs in the great machine of gain,
And they must fit their appointed place, writhe as they may with pain;
Nor can they rest; they're connecting links between the rude ore and the gold,
Though eyes grow dim as they sometime will, and prematurely old.

The man who owns this vast concern reared yonder blazing domes
By mortgaging our children's lives and robbing them of homes,
By taking health from their mother's cheeks, and knotting up her nerves
Into bands to bind their father's life, for the gain of him he serves.
We're told this adds to the Nation's wealth, and boasting statesmen tell
Of the thousand millions of added wealth that make the columns swell;
But what is all this set against the million hearts that ache;
Of the patient mothers and dying men, that the untimely grave must take?
Is human life of no account in the reckoning of the greed?
Must the long lines be so wide apart
as the basis of our creed?
The one to earn by selling soul, and self-respect and life,
And to make the balance bar stand even cast in the children and the wife?

Is it a vain hope that by and by when men shall wiser be,
The balance shall be adjusted in a mutual sympathy?
Then money shall cease to measure men, but justice and honor and right is up
And mutual trust and self-respect;
then men will be grand in might,
And great deeds shall be done, and the planet shall shine in the glory of a day,
Of which poets have dreamed and singers have sung and the kingdom of Right come to stay.

A QUESTION ASKED.

In Reference to the Protection of Mediums.

To the Editor: In The Progressive Thinker for June 6 I saw an article under the heading, "To Spiritualists and Mediums," and being one of each I was much interested in what it said. In part it says that all Spiritualists and mediums, who have the good of the Cause at heart should take out a certificate from the Chicago Spiritualists' League, because it is recognized authority, and holders of same are endorsed by a religious society, which is also recognized by the city as a power, which is working in the only way to uplift our Cause. In The Progressive Thinker of March 21, 1908, we have this question asked, Why may not any other organized society as well as the League endorse our mediumship, and protect us before the law? The article goes on to state the police officials desired the assistance of the Spiritualists, the religious Spiritualists, if you please, who are formed into a religious body representative of the doctrines and truths of Spiritualism, since they had been told that Spiritualism was a religion and entitled to the same protection under the law as other religious bodies. I wrote to the mayor in regard to the Chicago Spiritualists' League being indorsed by the city authorities as being the only recognized body of Spiritualists, and he referred my letter to Corporation Counsel Brundage. I stated in my letter that I was treasurer of the F. O. O. S., a society of religious Spiritualists, chartered and organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, provided for churches (religious) organizations, imposing obligations, and requiring legal accounting of responsibilities, having power to ordain speakers and mediums, empowering them to officiate at weddings and funerals, and giving them all privileges given to any minister of a religious denomination. In reply to my letter, he said that all the power which had been given by the city authorities as stated in the new city ordinance, was given to all Spiritualists and mediums who could prove they were honest and reliable, and that no one needed protection who lived up to that part of the city ordinance pertaining to mediums and spiritual clairvoyants.

I hope that all true Spiritualists will realize that the F. O. O. S. was organized to help to build up our noble Cause, and not to tear down, as some people seem to have that idea.

The writer was exceedingly glad to see these words. "The upbuilding and power of the religion of Spiritualism," embraced in the teachings of the Chicago Spiritualists' League. I trust and pray that in the coming fall all the Spiritualists' societies throughout the city and state, who are not running for their own pecuniary gain, will bind together in one noble body of workers, and let the world see, through the columns of The Progressive Thinker that Chicago is the head of the greatest Spiritualistic movement of the age.

Hoping we all remember the words of the lowly Nazarene, where he said, "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." In the writer's opinion that could be read thus: They that are honest in their Spiritual work need no protection, and the law will not protect frauds of any kind, whether they are in or out of the Chicago Spiritualists' League.

Buried Books Resurrected and Republished.

It has been said and reiterated that Spiritualists are not readers, and that their libraries contain more novels than works on science, archaeology and Spiritualism. This may be true in certain localities, but speaking in general terms, it is not true. Spiritualists, considered as a body, are thinkers and readers, requiring no priest to think or decide for them. It is questionable if they have manifested as much zeal in the missionary work, distributing pamphlets, leaflets and recommending books to others as do Theosophists, Christian Scientists and orthodox Christians.

But to the point. For thirty years and more, Colby & Rich had published, advertised and sold my books, and never so much as a ripple of discord entered into our business relations; but in late years, through the perils and final death of the Banner of Light, new editions of my books were not brought out, though there were more or less calls for them. The plates were in the hands of the Banner of Light. They are now in my hands, and two new editions have just been published, one "Death Defeated and the Secret of Keeping Young," published by the Ellis Publishing Co., Battle Creek, Mich., the other, "Immortality, Our Homes and Employments Hereafter," published by Dr. B. F. Austin, Rochester, N. Y. This is the tenth edition of the latter book, which is bound in cloth, contains 320 pages treating exhaustively of the homes and employments of spirits as described by themselves through such mediums as Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and some thirty other mediums. Price, $1.25.

The book, "Death Defeated and the Psychic Secret of Keeping Young" is a book of 226 pages, handsome cloth binding, and treats of how to "live immortal on earth," of the lives of Herodotus, Pythagoras, Plato, Seneca, Plutarch, Voltaire, Shelley, Graham, etc.—what these people and hundreds of others ate and drank to live so long and accomplish so much. It also treats of hygiene, sun-baths, right conception, heredity, etc. Price $1..15.

All of my books are for sale by The Progressive Thinker Office, 40 Loomis street, Chicago. J. M. PEEBLES.

"The Religion of Cheerfulness." By Sara A. Hubbard. An excellent book for the culture of health and spirituality. None can read it without pleasure and profit. Price 50c.

"The Bible." By John E. Remsburg. Its authenticity, credibility and morality. A large book for $1.25.

"The Warfare of Science With Theology." By Andrew D. White, LL.D. The two large volumes of about 900 pages are indispensable to the student, and no library is complete without them. Price $5.00.

"Materialisation." By Mme. E. d'Esperance and Rev. B. F. Austin. Excellent. Price 10 cents.

DOING AN EXCELLENT WORK.

The Value of Being a Member of the Chicago Spiritualists' League.—The Benefit of Holding a Medium's Certificate of this Society.

First, let me say personally I have the best feeling for each and every individual professing to be a Spiritualist and who is more devoted to the Cause than to Self. The C. S. L. is endeavoring to uplift the Cause, and its members individually and collectively; it is not working to create charter societies, nor to create new ones, nor to organize an independent State or National society of its own. The C. S. L. is chartered by the state of Illinois, and this charter gives the League authority to ordain, to issue certificates to mediums, to buy and sell property, and gives it all the powers possessed by any religious society in the state of Illinois. In its charter it is plainly stated that the League must work in conjunction with the State and National Associations.

The C. S. L. is a Meeting of meetings; and nearly every Spiritualist meeting in Chicago has representation in the League. Furthermore, the League has reincorporated under the name, The Society of Spiritualists; is a religious society; is registered as such in Cook county, Illinois, and is recognized legally, the same as any other church in Chicago, through its trustees and official board. The benefit to a medium in getting a certificate is that identification with the League and its protection is thus gained. The League being a legally organized religious body, its members are recognized by the State Spiritualists' Association, because that Association and the League work in harmonious conjunction; and a medium holding a certificate of membership in the League—which is recognized by the State Association, also becomes recognized by the N. S. A.

The C. S. L. in conjunction with the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association produced the ordinance which is now a law in the city of Chicago; and after it left our hands there were but two words changed in the ordinance before it passed the city council, and those two words were "Crafty Science."

To become a lay-member one must be recommended by a member in good standing. A medium's certificate issued by any society chartered from Springfield, and which is not an auxiliary of the I. S. S. A., may be recognized by the city authorities, but would not be recognized by the State or National Associations, neither would it be O. K. with any regular organization. The only recognition such a certificate could claim is from the society which issued it.

The I. S. S. A. issues no certificates to mediums but will indorse Chicago mediums holding certificates issued by the League. The police department also recognizes mediums who have certificates from the C. S. L. There is no other society beside the N. S. A., the I. S. S. A. and the C. S. L., that has a religious charter registered in the city hall of Chicago.

It is not the purpose or intention of the League to interfere with any small societies or their working, but all such are recommended to become auxiliaries of the State and National Associations. We are simply trying to have all mediums become identified with a recognized organization; and we believe that all Spiritualists who have the Cause at heart more strongly than self-interest, will look at it in the same light. As president of the C. S. L., I certainly am in a position to understand and appreciate where we stand regarding the city's protectection of our society.

I wish to say further, speaking for the League, that as to any persons holding ordination papers from the State Association, and who may be working for "societies" which are known to be antagonistic to the State and National Associations, such persons must naturally be regarded as traitors to the Cause of Spiritualism, and before continuing such questionable work should give up their ordination papers, for they will surely prove boomerangs in their own hands. Also, members of the State Association who may be working with societies in any secession movement against the State and National organizations—by way of presuming to create opposition state and national societies,—such members of our general fraternity need watching, for their works are in darkness, and they breed discontent, political trickery and disruption.

On the other hand, the workings of the League are fair, open and legitimate. We are in the bright light, and aiming for the right. In this way, and in THIS WAY ONLY can we hope for safety, harmony and progress. I make no protest against any man or woman thinking or acting according to their own ideas of right, but when they come under the glorious banner of Spiritualism, the searchlight of the League is upon them, and this is what every true Spiritualist ought to be proud of. The League is a sign of progress and a demonstration of intelligence in our order. It is a successful achievement in the line of right and security of our interests. Great heavens! we have enough enemies in the world without breeding anarchy within our own ranks; and any person among us who may be trying to tear down work that has taken years of labor and personal sacrifice to accomplish, such persons are the ENEMIES of Spiritualism, and should be ostracised or even "Oslerized," to the advantage of the Cause.

A charter from Springfield does not protect the holder against prosecution at the hands of the police department of Chicago, even though such papers may have been utilized to cause the city government to believe the holders were working with a recognized organization. In this connection I will state that the police department has requested the presidents of the State and League Associations to aid them in their work of ridding the city of all "fakers," whether fortune-tellers, dishonest mediums or other workers who are regarded as detrimental to the city's welfare. This request has been and is being acted upon, and hence our organization is working in harmony with the representatives of the law.

Thus a grand work is being accomplished by the regularly organized Associations, and no one can question our motives. As spokesman for the League I can say that our policy is EQUALITY AND JUSTICE before the law and our own consciences—FAVOR NONE AND FEAR NONE, and in this I am protected and guided by my Inner Light.

The C. S. L. is progressing rapidly and succeeding in its grand work. We are receiving encouraging letters from all over the United States. Other cities are taking up the same ordinance that we have had passed in Chicago, and are starting similar Leagues to strengthen the Cause, and for the protection of all honest mediums and members; and many inquiries are received as to our mode of procedure.

To all "independent" meetings which are opposing recognized organizations, I wish success. I have only the best of feelings for all, individually, but conscientiously,—when advancement of the Cause of Spiritualism is at stake, I could not give them any encouragement or contribute one cent toward their progress.

In conclusion, let me say that Spiritualism has triumphed over all obstacles in the past, and MUST AND WILL SURVIVE. Let us put aside all differences, and pull together against the turbid stream of materialism and ecclesiasticism that would deluge all before if it were not for God's own staying hand and our buoyant Ark of Light and Hope. The church confronts us—a military despotism ever prone to tyrannize and destroy everything in its path. Against all this let Spiritualists proclaim their message of Joy, Hope and Love. Let the prophecies of old be fulfilled. Let the beautiful philosophy of Spiritual belief be the Savior of the world. Let whosoever is without sin cast the first stone. Let intelligence and truth prevail, and then God and His Kingdom cannot go against us, or would not if it were possible. Let our watchwords be, ORGANIZATION! HARMONY! PROGRESS AND MUTUAL AID! Let the GOOD OF THE CAUSE actuate every member of our grand Fraternity who would represent the ETERNAL VERITIES OF SPIRITUALISM.

Yours for the Cause,
DR. C. A. BURGESS,
President C. S. L.

DELPHOS (KANSAS) CAMP.

The thirtieth annual camp meeting of this notable camp begins Aug. 7, closing on the 23rd.

For thirty consecutive years this this camp, without a single omission, traversing onward through adversity, obstacles of almost unsurmountable magnitude frequently besetting its pathway, yet, never faltering, it has climbed to an eminence seldom reached, under like circumstances and conditions.

Our program while not advertised in detail, consists of the highest and most pleasing arrangement for the entertainment of camp visitors. Our constant aim has been to secure the very best talent obtainable. Very few camps throughout the country have had the honor and pleasure of the most notable men and women speakers appearing upon its rostrum, as has this camp.

Our list of speakers and mediums engaged for this camp are: Will J. Erwood, Battle Creek, Mich.; W. D. Noyes and wife, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mrs. Bessie Bellman, Winfield, Kans., president of Kansas State Association of Spiritualists; Mrs. Nora E. Hill, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Inez Wagner, Kansas City, Mo., with negotiations in progress for further talent.

To all lovers of a free and hospitable people, where you are made to feel that you are one with the many, Delphos camp is incomparable. It offers to the languid, pent-up, tired soul, hedged in by worry and city strife, a panacea that will refresh and invigorat as no other remedy. Come to Delphos camp. Come where worlds touch worlds, where no "twilight zones" divide the realm of spirits in and out of the earthly forms.

For further information in detail, write to the secretary,

I. N. RICHARDSON.

Many New Cottages being Built.—Town Water Installed on the Grounds.—Many Arrivals.

Unusual activity in every direction marks the opening of the summer at this popular, old-time camp ground, the second oldest in the world, and everything bids fair for a prosperous season.

Seven new cottages were finished last month, varying in cost from $800 to $2,500. On Denton street, on the Highlands, commodious structures have been built for John Johnson, of Troy, N. Y., Prof George W. Edawrds, of Brooklyn, and Dr. Wm. Critchley, of Portsmouth, N. H.

On the old grounds the cottages recently finished for Mrs. Mary A. Wales, of Amherst, Mrs. Carrie Dodge, of Boston; Mrs. Kate Nowach, of New York, and Leon E. Henry are all handsome edifices. Mrs. Elizabeth Hall, of Albany, N. Y., Mr. F. A. Bidsford, of Boston, Mr. S. E. Townsend, of Providence, R. I., and F. S. Wilbor, of Lake Pleasant, have cottages in process of construction that will be completed before the convocation commences, Aug. 2. Lake Pleasant is now a fire district with its own commissioners, and pipes are being laid for the installation of town water upon the grounds.

For the past ten days the grounds have reminded us of the streets of Boston, during the construction of the subway; our none too wide thoroughfares being piled high with dirt on either side, with ditches five feet deep in the middle. The laying of the pipes will be completed by July 15, with hydrants located and in operation for fire protection, but no connections will be made with cottages until fall, the association plant furnishing water as usual for this season.

The Lake Pleasant Lyceum has held two sessions with thirty pupils present, Mr. George Cleaveland acting as conductor. Much interest is being taken and a thriving Lyceum will soon be in progress.

About one hundred cottages are now open. The Home Comfort House and The Roosevelt have quite a few guests already. Harry S. Savage has leased the boat privilege, and will also handle the baggage as usual; Mr. Philip Yeaton, of Boston, is running the dining room at the depot, and Charles F. Slate's cafe is located at the electric car station.

Vice-presidents W. W. Lee and Mrs. A. S. Waterhouse are hard at work as usual; directors Crafts, Critchley, Edwards and Childs are located at their cottages; Mrs. Abraham H. Dailey has opened her new residence for the season, and new arrivals are coming on every train. The dances in the Temple Wednesday and Saturday and the band concerts each Sunday bring many local visitors to the grounds.

Pequoit Camp, Mass.

Pequoit Camp, South Swansea, Mass., was dedicated and first meeting held Sunday, July 5. The camp is beautifully situated at Ocean Grove, on the shores of Mt. Hope Bay.

Mr. and Mrs. Richmond L. Bishop, of Swampscott, Mass., successfully conducted the opening service, with an earnest, sincere audience, eagerly reaching out to receive the truth and welcome messages from the higher life.

The first meeting was very encouraging, and the camp will no doubt be very successful in the future when it becomes better known. Service will be held every Sunday during the summer months, with good speakers.

MRS. W. H. BROCKETT,
Pres. of Pawtucket Society.

Fraternal Order, of Springfield, Mass.

The Fraternal Order of this city is not only alive, but working earnestly to build up a spiritual order that shall be a credit to the cause of Spiritualism. Meetings are held every Sunday and Friday evenings, open to the public, at the homes of the members, which have developed a strong interest in spiritual matters; and several members are showing mediumistic gifts that have been waiting such an opportunity for development.

We held meetings the month of May in the American Mechanics hall, which were well attended. Mrs. S. C. Cunningham of Cambridge, Mass., was the medium, and she gave some interesting demonstrations of her wonderful powers. One evening she suddenly paused, and looking up in a surprised manner remarked: "An angel form just passed through here; some one is about to pass out, and you will tell me who it is when I come next Sunday." The following Tuesday morning our dearly loved sister Eliza B. Wood passed to spirit life by a sudden attack of heart failure; and the next Sunday evening Mrs. Cunningham assisted at the memorial service of the dear sister, we using the service of the Fraternal Order. Mrs. Wood had been a Spiritualist for over forty years, having come into the light of spirit truth when such a course meant persecution, but she had the courage of her convictions, and always lived a life consistent with its highest spiritual ideals. She realized that her loved ones were ever with her, and while she is now with them, her life has left an example of devotion and love that is revered by all her friends.

Much interest is shown in preparing plans for the future in the way of building up the Association, demonstrating its principles, and developing lines of work that may prove productive of good to thehe cause of Spiritualism.

The Fraternal Daughters have given several suppers which have been very enjoyable occasions. We meet on every Wednesday afternoon for sewing, and discussion of ways and means to aid the Association, of which we are auxiliary.

MRS. M. E. GLOVER.
Vice-President, Springfield, Mass., Association, F. O. O. S.

The Revised Premium List.

Read Carefully, as We Introduce a New Premium Book, Which Is Extremely Valuable.

Have You Read OUR PREMIUM BOOK OFFER?

A FREAK OF THE WIRELESS.

Illustrating How Messages May Come from the Spirit Realm.—Messages from Remote Points Caught in a Missouri School.—The Experimental Instrument Made by Prof. Elliott of Richmond and Stored in a Basement Was Found to Be Clicking Conversations.

Richmond, Mo.—D. C. Elliott, professor of science in the Richmond high school, went into the basement of the school yesterday and heard a strange clicking. Investigating, he traced the noise to a wireless telegraph instrument which he had made to instruct his pupils in wireless telegraphy. The machine was stored in the basement while not in use.

The mysterious clicks continued to come from the machine. Prof. Elliott is not a telegraph operator, and the noises puzzled him. Finally he sent for R. G. Peters, the telegraph operator at the depot. Powers went to the basement and heard this message:

Santa Cruz, Cal.
W. M. Bowers, Colorado Springs, Col.

Your wireless this morning about securing Toledo instrument, have to say we cannot get hold of any here. Will advise you later if I can secure the same from San Jose.

Carson Experiment Station.

Talked With Oklahoma City.

The different stations on the wireless circuit discovered there was a new station catching messages, and an investigation was begun. This message was then sent out from Oklahoma City, Okla.:

There is a connection on the circuit. Caught some station marked Richmond, Mo., high school.

OKLAHOMA CITY.

The Oklahoma station then sent this query to Richmond:

"What kind of station have you?"

Powers, the operator, answered:

"It is home made."

Following this the Oklahoma City station sent this message to Colorado Springs:

"Richmond, Mo., has experimental station on this circuit. Says same is home made instrument. This circuit caught on account of damp weather. Says he has no pole."

Richmond Caught Them All.

All these messages were plainly read by Powers in the basement of the high school. Then came this message from Colorado Springs to a ship in the Gulf of Mexico:

"John R. Markes, Mallory Line, Texas, via Oklahoma City or Galveston: May your journey be without exception the best of the season. Answer me from New York."

Prof. Elliott regards the incident as one of the most remarkable things he has ever heard of in connection with wireless telegraphy. That a home made instrument, made without regard to any system and stuck away in a basement without wires or the lofty pole most stations have, should be able to catch messages from such a distant point probably will furnish much matter for comment among wireless experimenters.

The above as reported conveys an important lesson illustrating the impressive fact that messages from the spirit side of life reach certain minds that are attuned in unison.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, Lily Dale, N. Y.

The Southern Cassadaga opens February 7, and closes March 21, 1909. For particulars address Mrs. A. M. Spencer, Corresponding Secretary, Lake Helen, Fla.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., JULY 25, 1908 NO. 974

IS THOUGHT A LIVING POWER?

A Plunge Into the Deep Ocean of Metaphysics.

To the Editor:—In No. 971 of The Progressive Thinker there is an article entitled "Thought a Living Force?" by Samuel Phelps Leland, Ph.D., LL. D. For thousands of years men have been speculating on the mysteries of human life; but the mysteries still remain unsolved. The writer claims to have solved the problem of "the power of thought," by attributing to it "a living force," which he has discovered to be "the dynamo that converts one force into another.

He quotes Worcester, who defines thought as "an action of the mind, capable of existence independent of the mind that creates it." But this does not imply force; it is the effect of a cause which cannot be a cause; therefore, not a force. It is a creation of the mind. The mind, then, is the force—the cause, and thought is the effect. Effects are not causes and can produce nothing. Thought is the conception of what one has been thinking, impressed upon the memory, and expressed in words. What one has been thinking, or what one perceives, may arouse certain feelings in others; as, one in danger or thinks he is, instantly rushes out of it. Why? Prof. Leland would say, "Because he thinks he is in danger; therefore the thought is the force that moves him to act." But he was not in danger; he only thought he was. The force is just as strong, yet there was no reality in the case, and could be no force.

The feelings aroused by the sense of danger awaken the consciousness of danger, and he instantly flees from it. This instinct is universal in all sentient, conscious beings. We could not think unless there was something to think about that was prior to the thinking. Thought certainly does not create that something; and without that there could be no thinking.

Upon the authority of Worcester's definition the writer continues as follows: "Thought is a living force. It controls all the other forces. It binds them in bands of iron and steel. It makes the engine; the revolving dynamo converts one force into another and rides over the sea of forces, and makes the obedient waves obey the will," etc. This is but a gratuitous figure of speech, not admissible in scientific expression. It implies that waves are conscious, and thought a personality, or it could not exercise will power.

An analysis of thought will enable us to get a clear conception of the manner of its promotion. We think; but why do we think what we do think? The answer is plain when rightly conceived. Life itself is essentially Feeling; for without life there could be neither sensation nor consciousness, therefore life is sensation in consciousness; that is, it is a conscious sensation. It is that and nothing else. There is no mental operation without these; neither can there be without them.

Force? Certainly; but what is that force? All that one knows or seeks to know; all that does or seeks to do; all that he obtains or seeks to obtain; and all that he avoids or seeks to avoid, are effects either to satisfy some desire, gratify some feeling, or to avoid some evil. Desire, feeling and fear are states of conscious sensation. These are persistent and irrepressible. In a general statement: The supreme desire to live, to enjoy, to be happy.

This supreme desire gives issue to a concern for our well-being, and that of those we love. Well-being is well-feeling, and well-feeling is enjoyment—happiness. This concern is the only incentive to our voluntary activities.

Therefore, the fundamental law of human conduct is: Man employs the most available means at his command and he pursues those interests which he thinks will best promote his welfare, present and future, and he avoids as best he can the evils which he fears will bring him pain or misery. This law is as fixed and determinate as that of gravity itself. The impulse to act is the supreme desire above noted. Thought is the conception of that desire and the universal mistake of mankind is in taking the conception of the thing for the thing conceived.

The law of thinking is: Feeling gives rise to the seeming of reality in what is felt. The seeming is taken for the thing which appears to be reality, but it is no proof of it. This conception is so associated with force—action—that it is taken for force.

This analysis is not gratuitous; it is the process that everyone experiences, though he is not aware of it. But the indisputable fact that conscious sensation is the basis of all voluntary activities is the authority upon which this analysis is based.

Thought may be the willing light that brings to him the secrets of all space; but he has the advantage of most people. Perhaps he sees in the "secrets of all space" the verity in his closing paragraph:

"If ever the claims of communion of departed spirits with living men shall be established it must be along these lines and scientifically; and not by the disgusting jugglery and tomfoolery of what is known as physical manifestations."

Thought is only the conception of things spoken or written. They are recorded in millions of volumes many of which are now sunk into oblivious desuetude.

The author, Prof. Leland, is a striking example of one who feels as he thinks, and to him Thought is a living force; an exception to all the rest of mankinod who think what they feel. E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

A HYGIENIC RELIGION.

It is Badly Needed at the Present Time, as Demonstrated by Dr. Hager.

Straws Which Show Which Way the Wind Blows.—A Mute Appeal.

As straws show which way the wind blows, so mute appeals for practical things become the ideals for future generations. Instead of expressing the ideals of art in pyramids, sphinxes and massive-columned religious edifices, the ideals in art to-day are expressed in practical ways, as hospitals, sanitary built public buildings, practical homes for the insane, comfortable public conveyances, irrigating dams and practical canals.

The ideals in education to-day are not some theories to be taught how to appease the wrath of an anthropomorphic God, and how to secure tithes for the maintenance of a lazy set of fat priests, but instead the tendencies in education are eminently practical, and by these methods specialists are not only qualified but encouraged to work out still more practical problems, and humanity is thereby benefited. Things that are not practical are thus relegated to the rear. Thus astrology and unreliable prophecy are taking a back seat, perhaps to be brought to the front again at some future time; but you may rest assured that until some genius will work out the practical things in these subjects they will not have ideals created that will demand further attention at present.

The Jews originally started with a Spiritualistic-hygienic religion, and if all the signs fail not, we are about to travel over the same grounds again; but as this is an age of science, an age of practical things, we will not be content in taking everything for granted and by blind, superstitious faith rest content with all obstacles that beset our path; but boldly, yet slowly, by scientific methods try to overcome them.

Surely we have made wondrous progress in this way in the line of public sanitation. The discovery of the cause and prevention of malaria, yellow fever, cholera, bubonic plague, diphtheria as well as asepsis in surgery, together with many other benefits that humanity now enjoys, were not evolved at one bold stroke, but slowly, guardedly, one point after another was worked out until the whole became clear. Thus the whole mass of discoveries were made out of small, unreliable, unknown items that ultimately made up the whole mass of truth.

Perhaps no city in the world can show a better record in health matters than Chicago. Her death rate is the lowest per thousand inhabitants of any city in the world. Although the central meeting point for many surrounding states where smallpox exists, and while almost every week many new cases are brought in from the country, yet by an efficient system of isolation, fumigation and vaccination we have less smallpox in this great city than some small villages nearby.

But while the death rate is decreased in infectious diseases, we still have to contend with such an enormous high death rate in children and infants, that truly shows such an enormous amount of ignorance in mothers that could and should be prevented; that shows a demand that exists along educational lines that can not be met with all the civilizing agencies at our present command. Education along practical lines is needed here, and can be met only by those who come in close contact and repeatedly impressing it upon the mother or prospective mother. Here there is an ideal existing that is not met with any social factor that exists to-day, and I am sure it will have to be met by educational methods. Here I am convinced is a field for a practical HYGIENIC RELIGION that could meet ideals that would bring blessings on the system.

Take a look with me at the Bulletin of the Chicago health department for July 4, 1908, and see if you cannot discover a mute appeal for a practical HYGIENIC RELIGION:

"A study of the mortality of Chicago for the first six months shows a mortality 1.567 less than the same period last year. The largest factors of improvement have been in pneumonia and pulmonary tuberculosis.

"But while these bad-air diseases have decreased diarrhoeal diseases in infants have not—62 children under one year of age having died from all causes in excess of the number dying last year. The deaths from diarrhoeal diseases at all ages have increased 165. The deaths from diarrhoeal diseases in children under 2 years of age have increased 183.

During this same period this same group of citizens—the children—have suffered 483 fewer deaths from diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough combined. The conclusion is inevitable that something is operating in these babies to produce fatal diarrhoea. Why is it that hygiene going forward in every other field since 1904 has been going backward in baby food and baby care?

"The present indications are for the worst diarrhoea death-rate year since 1897. If the present rate holds for the remainder of the year it will give a total for 1908 of 3,414 diarrhoea deaths, or 15.76 per 10,000.

In 1907, 1,,004 babies died from diarrhoea (19.74 per 10,000) in the 5th sanitary district, or west of the north fork to Robey street and west and north of the south fork for a distance of about two miles from the river. In the 15th sanitary district, south of 75th street and east of Stony Island avenue, 175 died, or 27.38 per 10,000.

"Contrast this with 17 deaths of babies from diarrhoea (3.25 per 10,000 in the 7th sanitary district, bounded on the north by Fullerton, on the south by Ohio, on the east by the lake and on the west by Clark street at the south end, by Sedgwick street in the middle, and by Halsted street at the north end.

"This means that the children of the well to do are living—the children of the less well to do are dying.

"Is there not enough of public and private conscience to do something to save these 2,500 lives? There is yet time. Our hope lies in this: Nine hundred and twenty-four deaths have occurred in the first six months; 2,490 are feared in the next six months. In 1907 759 occurred in the last six months; 2,046 in the last six. In 1907 there were 114 deaths in June, 269 in July, 805 in August, 523 in September, 234 in October and 113 in November.

"The Milk Commission, the Visiting Nurse Association, the small parks, the Daily News and La Rabida sanitariums, the settlements and the family physicians are going good. But the demand is for more effort.

"This Bulletin goes to all the priests and preachers in town. Will they not assemble their congregations and tell the mothers how to care for their babies until October? Will not the Labor Unions get such word to the families of their members that these may be spared the long weeks of heart-breaking toil that come to the mother who has a sick baby? Will not the mothers themselves give the well babies more water and less milk—and no beer, no cabbage, no coffee—no dirt in anything?

"The public agencies are excellent, but the meat of the situation is the home and the mothers and fathers who control the homes."

Do you think the priest or preachers have qualified themselves in these practical things, and that they are competent to teach these matter to mothers, even if they cared to. I think not, and moreover I think that there are not a great number of them who care for the children of the poor as most of them do not cater to, nor care for, the children of the poor, nor meet the poor mothers.

The ideals that are created to-day are for practical things, and these must be and are worked out by cold, hard-hearted scientific methods. Theoretical, dogmatic, man-made religions are on the wane, and the idea for a practical religion is now beginning to show the symmetry and beauty of her glorious radiance.

Will the Spiritualists help to supply the wants of these ideals and thus take the place in the ranks of benefactors to humanity, or will they, too, pass on with all their unreliable mental phenomena and artificial toggery?

I appeal for a SPIRITUALISTIC-HYGIENIC RELIGION based on modern scientific educational methods to supply the practical ideals that are now so rapidly manifesting themselves.

Meriumistic Experiences.

New Years' Day, 1900, I had the following mediumistic experiences:

First, I sensed a restlessness and was informed by an angel that this restlessness was in great part, in the mortal mind-realm, and as the inducted ideas flowed into mortal brains on all the vibratory lines for effects, this restlessness is felt by the people and is externalized in their rush and efforts to do things. At this juncture, immortals pressed around me and opened up panoramas of the status of humanity. This was strange, for it was such an intermingled throng—first a group of mortals, then a group of immortals. This impressed me as the cause of the great unrest and rush manifested by Earth's people. They are pressed onward by invisible pressure to observe and search for things new and old to fill the gaps which thus far have broken connection between cause and effect in the universal wielding, and especially cosmic evolution, of all things, man included. Here came a change and a great company of bright, intelligent mortals passed before in this panorama. These are believed in the Supreme Spirit of the Universe from whom all life, intelligence and blessings go forth and are manifested through all forms of externalized sub-germs, and carried upward in progression in the regular order of supremely governed evolution. A short space behind these came a caravan of not only people, but throngs of all kinds which they brought with them. They were marked "Traders," "Showmen," and "show-women." They were a shallow, shadowy lot. They believed not in God nor a Supreme Spirit, etc., and appeared apathetic to even the term "religion." They floated bills printed in large letters on the breezes, some of which read thus: "We believe that the God-idea is, and has been an evolution of mortal mind; that it had its origin at the side of open graves when the desperation of separation from their loved ones inspired a hope in a future life and that sometime in the future, after a longer or shorter period, a reunion might be possible.

Then came a group whose playbills announced what wonders they were able to perform. These were gaudy, very pretentious, but very shallow. I was overwhelmed with a sensation of infinite pity as they passed. Quickly another large company of pompous-looking mortals appeared, and passed. Their motto was: "Students of Nature;" but strange to say, they were all enveloped in a misty, cloud-like vapor, through which were traced in letters of seeming fire: "Erroneous are the ideas held by these students." Their belief is that creation is automatic, operated by Nature's powerful principles in keeping with her laws, etc." As these passed very slowly by, I beheld, in the entire scenic panorama opened before me, all the misconceptions and errors indulged in by these different classes of people, but to mark them was not possible, for the scene passed too rapidly for that, and as I wondered over this and many similar experiences I have had, I yearned to know, if other mediums have ever had such experiences, viz.: While retaining full consciousness, seeing crowds of immortals thronging around them and bringing before and between them groups of mortals, or rather, mortal projections or shades, as most of them seem to me to be, when they thus appear in connection with immortals.

Readers, if you have had such experiences; then can you appreciate my position and feelings when I pen this. I know all presentations as described above, are intended for object lessons and to teach us that life is real, and truth alone is mighty as a power to help us up progression's spiral stairway. Another thing I have learned by being so closely associated with the immortals, and it is this: That no matter how observant we are at such times, we can grasp and retain only parts of what is placed before us. We learn many grand lessons and parts of the great problems of life and its immortal career, and of cosmic operations, but not the whole. I am glad it is so, it keeps us humble and gives all students and workers a chance to be of service and to do their share of showing up some of the errors of the ages and putting in their places eternal truths, as they, by intuition and inspiration receive them. DO THEY KNOW?

Do they know the earnest striving
Of our spirit's tortuous way
In the clay-bound vestures writhing,
With our life held back at bay?

Do they know our motives golden
As they glitter for a space,
Then go down in failure's cauldron,
Leaving on the earth no trace?

Do they know we grieve so surely?
Do they know we still are true?
Do they know—and learning, whisper
Of their fealty yet our due?

Do they know the trend and measure,
And the lives that hem us in?
Of the vibrant chords that quiver,
Throbbing heart and brain within?

Can it be it does not count us,
The endeavor and the pain?
These environments are earthly—
They cannot the spirit stain.

Could we know they did—each failure
Would be less in its despair;
Taken and reset—might glisten
Jewels priceless, rich and rare.

THE MOST DELIGHTFUL SPOT.

Los Angeles and the People's Psychic Society.

To the Editor:—Here is a hearty greeting from Los Angeles, the most delightful spot on earth. Come, and look the place over for yourself, and if you don't fully agree with my sweeping statement, you will be the first to head a list of disapprovals. I want you and the readers of The Progressive Thinker to know what the People's Psychic Society is doing in its own line of work. We are now an organized society. The membership has increased since taking this step. You know there are so great a number of people who, will not interest themselves in any particular branch of work, unless they can "Join it" When they have written their name in behalf of an order, why, there is a responsibility on their part hitherto not felt.

Our Sunday morning audiences are most encouraging in every way. I have been in a way identified with the spiritualistic movement for over 20 years, and must say, with all due and respected courtesy towards other societies East, that I have been interested in, our society here in Los Angeles extends a greater freedom of speech, a tolerance, a genuine spirit of good-will in behalf of all talent demonstrating from our rostrum, which makes possible many things, that we do not find in all movements of a psychic nature. We are most guarded as to our selection. We are most fortunate in having with us a Prof. W. W. Raymond, who contributes largely in the line of Metaphysics, Comparative Religion, Music, Oratory, Physical Culture and Character Building.

All of the above named branches of enfoldment, I endorse and recommend this quiet, earnest, thoughtful teacher and student, as a most worthy instrument in behalf of individualization. I often hope our psychics in the A. B. C. class will see and appreciate the great need of intellectually fitting themselves for the position they contemplate taking. I know, that only through this order of preparation will we attract the superior minds seen or unseen.

It is through the law of attraction that these various avenues are found in the first place, and it is through the abuse of a perfectly natural law, that results in a complete failure, and not the intelligent use of that law.

Our object in life should be to contribute to every moment of each passing day, a something that is true and pure. A reality that will stand the test of investigation. Do you know of any way this condition can be realized without deep study, carefully investigating every avenue that may throw a greater light your way, and hourly, daily searching for every item that may add to an idea you are holding for a fuller realization. An earnest man, never poses; he is too busy with a more valuable proposition.

We never get anything for nothing that is worth one cent more than we pay for it.

Real life lies in love, and good hard work. Who wants to rest, dream and rust? Not I! And so I again state, I am so thankful we have in our midst thorough and consistent workers who are not willing to sit down with folded hands, waiting for the spirit to do the work they should. The facts are, an entity in spirit expression cannot do our life's problems. We can co-operate with them. When we meet a medium who is nearly always under an influence, controlled, so to speak, you will find upon close investigation that the medium is but little better off for the time and strength given; also, much that is given will be inferior in quality and clearness, which could be entirely overcome through a course of training that will interest the unseen section, inviting a full recognition of their power in sympathetic unity, believing that good can be obtained from all, provided all interested do their respective parts. We do know that only through the exercise and cultivating of certain finer and inherent forces, individuals of the unseen world will aid, instruct and guide us in a highly commendable way, if we make this possible, and greater good can be accomplished.

I believe that what is worth doing at all is worth putting forth our very best efforts in all corresponding directions.

We send our children to school that they may become respected people of influence in this one phase of life, material, but the moment we contemplate opening the occult side of life we taboo the idea of a preparatory course and as a rule take anything that is given us, without really giving it any thought at all—simply swallow it whole and call it fine; letting it go at that. This resigned state makes it very difficult for our advanced workers, but they will be sustained in their efforts. The true manifestation has come to stay, and is fast becoming universal.

WHY CANNOT ALL THE YEAR BE SPRING?

Why cannot all the year be Spring,
When birds and trees and flowers all sing,
When every blade of grass is green,
And naught but beauty can be seen?

Why cannot all the year be Spring,
When all the stars with gladness ring,
When every soul feels God is near,
And every mind is free from fear?

Why cannot all the year be Spring,
When all the days new joy do bring,
When modest, blue-eyed violets peep,
And Nature wakes from Winter's sleep?

Why cannot all the year be Spring,
When each man feels himself a King,
When every day the Sun shines bright,
And happy dreams fill all the night?

THE FOLLY OF SUICIDE.

The Suffering therefrom Is Something Terrible.

Dr. Franz Hartman, writing in "Broad Views" with regard to the prevalence of suicide, says:

"Many seek to escape the ills of this terrestrial life by destroying their physical bodies. Some expect annihilation, others imagine that they will improve their condition by entering into a 'better world,' and there are some who are kept from killing themselves only by fear of dying, which they believe to be a painful affair. There is a long array of what are claimed to be communications from the souls of departed suicides, many of them seeming to be quite genuine messages, which say that a person experiencing a forcible and premature death does not escape suffering, and if anybody kils himself for the purpose of escaping pain, he may by his act be, so to say, jumping from the frying pan into the fire. It is stated that such a 'spirit or soul,' remains still earth-bound until the time when the natural term of his life would have expired.

"There are in my possession several messages which I have received from what appear to be the spirits of deceased suicides, and whose genuineness has been tested as far as possible. They describe their sufferings after death, and claim to have suffered even from injuries inflicted upon their physical bodies, with which they were still connected, while the astral ligament was not broken. One of these unfortunates was a young lady who poisoned herself on account of some love affair, and a suspicion having arisen about the manner of her death, her body was exhumed three days afterwards and dissected. She claims to have felt every cut of the dissecting knife as if it were cutting her living body. Another suicide who shot himself describes the tortures he felt by the separation of his 'nervous' body from the physical; another suffered the pains of being burned alive while his body was cremated before the astral separation took place."

We do not consider that the progress of a spirit in the after-life is necessarily determined by the length of the normal earth-life; a person committing suicide is likely to be in an undeveloped state spiritually, and has to find his way upward by a process that may be slow and entail much mental suffering. When a spirit is thoroughly ripe for leaving the body we believe that this process is quite painless, like going to sleep, and that nothing done to the physical form afterwards can affect the enfranchised spirit. But we are here for a purpose, and have no right to abandon the post of duty.—Light, London.

A MESSAGE OF LOVE

Oh, what is the message I leave you,
As the end of my journey I view?
'Tis only of loving and blessing,
Dear heart, that I know, good and true.

Yes, all are my own and my dear ones,
Though never your faces I've known,
But I've reached out glad hands through the distance
And know you, and bless you, my own.

Oh, grand is the army of workers—
All workers so noble and true—
Who are giving their lives for a purpose,
The angels have long had in view.

They walk by your side and inspire you
To wipe out old errors and wrong,
And bring to all lives highest blessings
Of wisdom and love, with sweet song.

For long with these workers I've tarried,
Unknown and unnoticed, so still,
Yet ever with earnest endeavor
My work and my duty to fill.

I bare all my heart to the angels
Who once on our earth-path have trod,
And trust with all loving assurance
In the justice and power of sweet God.

I hold not one remnant of hating,
Though many my life have distressed,
For I know all must learn by their doing,
Ere their spirits can find perfect rest.

So earnest the work that I followed,
So sheltered the path that I trod,
Few knew of my earnest endeavor,
Perchance but my own soul and God.

So glad is my soul, and so joyful,
For all my sweet dreams will come true,
I will join glad hands with the angels,
And work as I once worked with you.

Not resting supinely on our laurels,
And think that our work is all done;
But ever with new added vigor,
We will work as though just begun.

Oh, glad is the welcome that waits me,
I know in that home of the soul,
And we'll dwell in the home of the blessed
While ages on ages shall roll.

I know them so well, and I love them,
Sweet friends whom the years bore away;
I know I shall meet and shall greet them
In that home on that beautiful day.

Farewell! May all blessings attend you!
I ask it in faith and in love,
For I know your unselfish endeavor
Is one with the angels above.

SPIRIT OF THE WEST.

Official Visit and Result at Portland, Oregon.

To the Editor:—I come again with a little message, as one who wishes to give out through your paper a few thoughts on the delightful visit we Spiritualists of Portland, Ore., enjoyed with our new acquaintances, but already beloved President of the N. S. A., Dr. G. B. Warne and wife, of Chicago. They arrived here on the 23rd ult., evening train, and were met and escorted to their hotel, The Portland, by the president of the First Society, Mrs. Emily L. Driscoll, Mr. Harrison D. Barrett and Rev and Mrs. G. C. Love, where they were left to rest and prepare mind and body for the long list of pleasures and official duties awaiting them.

Portland is a beautiful city, set as a gem in the green hills, with grand old snow-capped mountains in the near distance, lending their serene dignity to views that, once seen can never be forgotten, especially when beheld in company that adds the human joy that makes complete the glory and grandeur of Nature's lavish hand. Our peerless, clean-cut cameo, Mt. Hood, can never be forgotten by anyone who once has seen its grace of line and lofty summit, associated as it is with all that has made history in this land of the receding white man and his nobler, diligent successor. All this for our friends to begin their week of pleasure and work, a week that only seemed to end, it really never will as we see the lengthening line reach out eternally.

The private reception and public reception were alike our pleasures, and we trust were others'. The public reception was a season long to be remembered.

The banquet given on Saturday evening was the culmination of the "Spirit of the West," roses and all. It was a feast indeed, and a never-to-be-forgotten one, where wit and wisdom found expression in human eloquence through words of loving kindness, hope and cheer, mingling like leaves and blossoms in the trees, fanned by the summer's balmy breeze.

Inspired indeed were those who took part in the evening's program, and the fullness of the stream flowed on into the great river of delight, our Sunday evening meeting, when President Warne gave us one of the grandest lectures ever listened to. His subject was The Good That Spiritualism Has Done the World." He dwelt upon its call to the scientific world and the fact of the recognition by the greatest scientists, also of the part it played in the great civil strife of our nation, reviewing many of the incidents in Lincoln's career, presenting that which, though familiar to most Spiritualists, is not to those outside our ranks, many of whom heard the lecture and were, like ourselves, entranced into that utter stillness that marks the efforts of one of Nature's interpreters, the true orator.

The culmination of the week of social enlargement, official investigation and adjustment as well as the great abilities of our honored President of the N. S. A., was the addition to the society at the close of the Sunday evening meeting of twenty-two new members, a number equalling the entire membership in good standing when the society fell into the hands of a woman with her heart in the right place, and her head clear to labor for the welfare of humanity, with "love for all and malice toward none," our president, Mrs. E. Driscoll, whom we love, honor and trust.

And in closing I will say May Heaven bless the workers all, National, editorial, in the field, on the platform, and the private factors too. May the light shine brighter for the great work done in Portland by our noble President, George B. Warne.

Very Truly Yours,
MRS. NORA ARMSTRONG.
Corresponding Secretary First Society, Portland, Ore.

IN THE WOOD.

"Keep sweet!" the robin in the tree
Chirps forth his cheering song to me
So many times, as though he knew
That I was sorrowful and blue;
Still from his perch, high overhead
"Keep sweet! Keep sweet! Keep Sweet!" he said.
And if you listen you may hear
His message musical with cheer.

"Cheer up" I heard it all along
The way, from trees came forth the song
So many times, as though the words
Were messages from cheery birds.
Through all the wood the music rang,
"Cheer up! Cheer up! Cheer up!" they sang,
And if you listen you may hear
The message hopeful with good cheer.

"Don't fret!" I heard the branches stir
With many a hopeful messenger
Who in his wisdom seemed to know
That I was worn and grieving so.
So from the branches overhead
"Don't fret! Don't fret! Don't fret!" he said,
Until in listening I forgot
My troubles all and fretted not.

Religion of the Aztecs, Its Parallels in Roman Catholicism

"Judge Ladd of California turned the light of legal evidence on Christian Origins, and found no reliable proof that such a person as the ecclesiastical Jesus ever lived."—Progressive Thinker, March 21, 1908.

I quote from his Moral Theology, Vol. VIII., page 444, edition of 1828:

"Mulctas pecuniarias Episcopus sibi addicere non potest, quantum vis pauper sit sine licentia Sedis Apostolicae (ur expluribus argumentis S. Congregat. evincitur in Tract De Syn. Dioc. L. 10. C. 10. N. 2). Sed debent in usus pios expendi. Multo magis non possunt nisi in usus pios applicari illae mulctae, quas Tridentinnum inflexit clericis non residentibus, aut concubinariis."

Translation.—A bishop, however poor, cannot appropriate pecuniary fines to his own use, without the permission of the Apostolic Sea (as is evident from the numerous arguments of the Holy Congregation to be found in the Treatise concerning Diocesan Synods, book 10, chapter 10, Number 2). But he should apply them to pious uses. Much less may he apply to other than pious uses, those fines which the Council of Trent, (sixteenth century) has imposed on non-resident priests, or those priests who keep concubines." And priests who did not keep concubines were obliged to pay double.

When the late pope, Leo XIII., died in 1903 the Camerlengo, an official who has sole charge of the papal apartments until a new pope is selected by the Holy Ghost, found, hidden away in a deep recess in the wall of the pope's private office, and concealed by heavy drapery, the immense sum of $1,750,000 in gold. It was carefully packed in sacks. Possibly it was the Holy Father's share of the "Cullagium." Requiescat in pace.

The Aztecs had many feast days. One in May was called a "Jubilee," at which they were granted "full indulgence and remission of sins." Aug. 23 was the "Festival of all the dead" to secure their souls "a safe passage through an intermediate state." Sept. 12 was the "Purification of their Virgin Mother"—Chimalman. Sept. 13, for "the woman who sinned by eating the fruit of the tree." Nov. 11, for "the gods who fell from heaven."

Jesuit Acosta says they fasted before their feasts and "these facts were the same unto them as our four ember weeks." Bonwick says: "The Saniards were surprised to see the Mexicans keep the vernal forty days' fast." This was in memory of Quetzalcoatl, who "was tempted forty days on a mountain." Bishop Las Casas says that they fasted one day in the week "like unto our Friday, in commemoration of the crucifixion." They fasted before taking the communion, and commerce between man and wife was prohibited for twenty-four hours before that ceremony. Do papists recognize any similarity with these instructions?

Their purgatory was for children who had died at an early age and for adults guilty of minor offenses. Of this, Kingsborough says: "In the same way as our holy doctors teach the existence of Limbo for children who died without baptism." Women dying in child-birth, went straight to heaven.

Their hell was a place of darkness and situated in the center of the earth; and says Prescott, "the absence of all physical torture forms a striking contrast to the schemes of suffering so ingeniously devised by the fancies of the most enlightened nations."

They had as many saints as the papists. Every day was devoted to one or more of them, and "little images were to be found in the humblest dwelling." There were many local saints; each had a specialty. One cured one disease, another cured another disease. Altars were built for them, "before which lights were kept burning, flowers were offered and the image itself was dressed and decorated according to the whim or pecuniary ability of the priest." Says Diaz: "A laughable matter it is that in each province the Indians have their gods, and the gods of one province or town are of no profit to the people of another. Thus they have an infinity of idols, to each of which they sacrifice."

They also had the Sacrament of extreme unction. Says Jesuit Acosta: "The priests did sing the funeral offices like to our answers. At these mortuaries, they ate and drank." This would seem to be the origin of the "Wake."

The most amusing, yet instructive part of Jesuit Acosta's history, is where he explains their Sacrament of Holy Orders, and their holy men and still holier women. It was evidently a tender point with him. You may swear at Jesus Christ, seduce a woman, rob a till, commit murder, but don't infringe on the prerogatives of the priesthood. He says: "The devil has even in Mexico some kind of religious women." They were supposed to be virgins, at least when they entered the convents; they were closely immured; dressed in a peculiar habit; cut their hair close; rose at midnight to perform the same offices as the priests. The elder ones were called "mothers," and they were ruled by one of their number who employed them in making cloth for the adornment of the images and the temples.

Before describing their priests, Jesuit Acosta says: "What made me wonder was that the devil would usurp to himself the service of God, yea, and use the same names; for they have their acolytes (altar boys) and Levites and call their high priest 'pope'." He then describes a monastery having cells for the monks; that their daily duty was to swing a censer full of incense before the images; and that the acolytes assisted in these ceremonies by handing them the incense, garments, lights, etc., with many bowings and genuflexions. Humboldt describes a painting that he examined, which portrayed the genuflexions

The monks rose at midnight, said prayers, sang and did penance. They were divided into two classes: the immured and those who mixed with the people. To every large city, and there were more than a hundred of them, a priest of superior rank was delegated. He was obeyed by all the others within a given jurisdiction, but was answerable for his own conduct only to their pope. All the clergy dressed in black cotton manties.

On taking Holy Orders, the priests were anointed, but Jesuit Acosta piously assures us that the oil used was "unsavory" and unlike "that sweet composition, which God defend should be employed in any other thing than in his divine service."

Their rosaries or beads appear on several MS., but more especially in the Codex Vaticanus. The number on the string cannot be counted, but they are evidently separated in sections of about equal length.

Gomara says they had "a cross like that of St. Andrew, and used it like us Catholics, to defend themselves against mighty specters, and also placed it over new-born children." Martyr repeats this statement and also that crosses of copper or wood were placed over their graves. Prayers were read at these ceremonies, in a language unknown even to the priests, thus proving the antiquities of these rites.

If St. John confined himself strictly to the Isle of Patmos he must have had telepathic communication with Mexico. This article has grown much longer than I intended, so I will only quote two or three more paintings, all, seemingly, treating on the same subject.

In the Mendoza collection there is a curious symbol called Yxcoymec. It is a beast with an eye in the middle of its body, and on the tenth page of the Vatican MS. there is another with five eyes on its back. A peculiar figure also appears, throwing off rays of light; and a stone in the Vienna collection has painted on it seven eyes. Speaking of these and others, Kingsborough says: "It cannot be denied that a pasage in the twelfth chapter of Revelation, which has perplexed all commentators on Scripture, 'and there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the Sun,' receives considerable elucidation from some of the figures contained in the Mexican paintings."

It is unnecessary and would be too tedious to attempt a description of the civilization, arts and sciences of the Aztecs. They were a gentle and highly cultivated race and immeasurably superior to their conquerors. Cortez wrote five letters to Charles V., decribing their country and the customs. These letters never have been translated and from them various historians have made only short extracts. But it has just been announced (Mar. 12) that F. A. McNutt has translated the entire series and that they will shortly be published by the Putnams in two octavo volumes. The curious reader is referred to them. I shall only treat of the antiquity of the Aztecs, their practical annihilation and the puerile attempts of the Holy Church to assimilate their ancient religion with the comparatively new cult, now called Christianity.

Humboldt says that their monuments and traditions remind him "of others of high and venerable antiquity; that it is impossible to read the descriptions which Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus have left us of the Temple of Jupiter Belus, without being struck with the resemblance of that Babylonian monument to the Teocolis of Anahuac." (Herodotus died about 420 B. C. The Temple he refers to was at that time a very ancient pile.)

Humboldt continues: That their calendar is "one of the most ingenious to be found in the history of astronomy;" that nothing in the "denominations and hieroglyphics of their months indicates that they have taken birth in a more northerly clime," and "It cannot be doubted that the greater part of the nations of America belong to a race of men who, isolated ever since the infancy of the world from the rest of mankind, exhibit in the nature and diversity of language, in their features and the conformation of their skulls, incontestable proof of an early and complete separation."

Prof. John Fiske says: "We now know that in the earliest post-pliocene times, if not in the Pliocene age itself, at least four hundred thousand years ago, the American continent was inhabited by human beings."

The celebrated Count Galindo "fired with the contemplation of the Mexican ruins, pronounces that country the true cradle of civilization, whence it passed over to China, thence to Europe." And Prof. Draper scouts at the monkish stories and says that the student "will find himself constrained to cast aside such idle assertions as altogether unworthy of confutation or even of attention."

Possibly the day may come, when by spirit aid we can trace the Mexican myth to the East, where it was known as IES or Jes, and afterwards was latinized and crops up in Europe as Jesus.

Every effort was made by the Inquisition to destroy their paintings and all evidences of their religion. Bishop Zumarraga, the first papal bishop in Mexico, burned immense quantities of them. It may be worthy of note that some years ago this same bishop came to me through a private medium and after identification, confessed his crime.

Boturini spent many years in making a collection. The Inquisition seized and burned them, and with difficulty the collector escaped the same fate. But quite a few escaped the Inquisition, and though very incomplete, still enabled Kingsborough and others to give us a faint idea of the Aztec cult.

But as long as educated Aztecs remained, the papal church was in danger, and order were issued to exterminate them. There was only one cleric who expressed pity for the unfortunates. He crossed the ocean several times, vainly imploring mercy for them. But the fiat of the church had been issued for their destruction. Christian Europe would have been shaken from center to circumferencee had the truth been allowed expression. The deadly Inquisition drove them in multitudes into the water; then being baptized, they were submerged till drowned. Countless thousands perished in the mines, or from unaccustomed labor, or were deliberately tortured and murdered in a vain attempt to have them disclose hidden treasures.

When the liberal Mexican government disestablished the papal church, the mohasteries, etc., were sold. Then underground dungeons, filled with human bones, were discovered. Fearing a popular revolt, the government put on the screws and the press was prohibited announcing any more of the discoveries.

On June 25, this year, the news crept out that while excavating in a cloister yard of an ancient Dominician church at Vera Cruz, workmen unearthed an underground chamber filled with human bones. This church was where the Inquisition for that city held its court.

The one honorable exception to this murderous gang of hell-hounds, to whom I have referred, was Bishop Las Casas. In his work: "The History of the Destruction of the Indies," he says: "I positively and truly assert that within the space of forty years, there have unjustly and tyrannically perished by the oppression and infernal conduct of the Christians, more than twelve millions of persons, men, women and children; and I believe that I am not mistaken in asserting that they were more than fifteen millions."

News of these massacres had reached Europe. An excuse had to be found. The Dominicans, that noble order of Christian priests who sought to merit heaven by making earth a hell, excused their conduct by saying that the Aztecs were the lowest order of humanity and that their daily food was human flesh. Bishop Zumarraga wrote that "20,000 victims were yearly slaughtered in the capital." Torquemada improved on this and made it "20,000 infants," and Herrera insists that 20,000 were slaughtered on a specified day in the year." Another stated that he had discovered that at the dedication of a temple in 1486, 70,000 were slaughtered. Torquemada gives the number at exactly 72,344; another says 80,400, and still another rounds it off with an even 100,000. However much they may differ as to the number, they are a unit in declaring that the Aztecs feasted on the dead bodies. But Bishop Las Casas says: "This is the testimony of brigands who wish to find an apology for their own atrocities."

These cannibalistic habits are not in strict conformity with the character of the king who is recorded by these same historians as a man "of a mild and moderate disposition," and of whom Diaz says: "On our way home (after their first interview with Montezuma), we could discourse of nothing but the gentle breeding and courtesy of the Mexican monarch." Nor do they agree with the accounts of the siege of the city of Mexico, where all admit that no suffering from famine could induce the Aztecs to eat the corpses; but we do know that at the siege of Rousillon, a city in Aragon, in 1475, the Spaniards "did eat their own dead."

Before these massacres had been determined on, these same historians wrote in regard to the teachings of the Aztec God. Torquemada says: "In truth, the dominion of Quetzalcoatl was sweet and he exacted no service from them, but easy and light things, instructing them in such as were virtuous and prohibiting such as were wicked, evil or injurious, teaching them likewise to abhor them." And priest Sahagun says they were "a good people, attached to virtue; urbane and simple in social intercourse, shunning lies; skilful in arts, pious toward their God."

These charges against the Aztecs did not satisfy inquiring minds. Enough of their theology remained, known to many, and it was found neccessary to explain it.

At that time, in Spain, they had a peculiar organization of clerics, known as the "Council of Seventy." It was named after the number of disciples Jesus was supposed to have had. This council was unique—sui generis. They always considered themselves at least one step in advance of the theologians and by their authoritative decrees, frequently came in conflict with that infallible gentleman on the banks of the Tiber. At one time, when Holy Church was nearly rent in twain, vainly attempting to determine whether Jesus had only one "will' or two—a human and a divine—these gentlemen boldly declared that he had "three;" as God, a divine one; as Man, a human one; as a Savior, a third one, which they prudently declined to classify.

So this Council of Seventy turned to the lunatic of Patmos and declared that the Aztecs fulfilled the prophecy in Revelation. Owing to the peculiar formation of the lakes at the city of Mexico, which, with their outlets and supply streams might convince some idiot that they resembled the seven component parts of an animal, it was determined that this was the beast spoken of in the prophecies. But this theory did not last long. The Spaniards had conquered the country, and the Holy Father had confirmed their right to it.

Then one of the holy men discovered that the Aztecs called their devil "The rational owl." At first blush, that was strong evidence; for "how can the devil be rational?" was the cry. This seemed the solution, when a still holier member suddenly remembered that the Christian devil, their "Prince of Darkness" was called "Lucifer" (light). So this theory was shelved for future consideration.

The Two Kings.

Comprehensively Illustrated in an Allegory.

Millions of years ago, when this old world was new, there came to reign upon it a mighty King, who declared that he should rule over all the nations of the earth—that even emperors, queens, kings and princes should yield the scepter and the crown whenever he saw fit to send forth the cruel mandate.

The beggar and the child were not ful King; he was no respecter of persons. The royal purple and the ermine were no more to him than the tattered garments of the poor. His touch upon the cheek of the child would change its rosy bloom to a deadly pallor. He declared that even Nature should respond to his mighty power; for at certain seasons of the year, he would touch her with his frosty finger, her cheek would turn to crimson for a moment, then she would cast her beautiful garments to the earth to be blown hither and yon by the autumn's blast, and she would become withered and brown and dead.

And so this King of Terrors has stalked about over the earth ever since the world began. There is no place that has not felt his blighting presence; there is no home that has not been invaded by this unwelcome intruder; locks and bars, prayers and tears are useless. The sweetest bud in the family bouquet he has breathed upon and it has withered. The father, the mother, the wife, the friend—someone of them is gone away: And his name is Death. Some day he will come for you, too, when you do not dream of his presence; for it is said he often steals in like a thief in the night. You may be drinking deeply at the fount of pleasure—that will not matter to him; you may be surrounded and protected by home and friends and wealth—he will not care for that; you may be on the brink of some great joy—and he will touch your eyelids and they will be sealed; he will kiss your cheek, and it will become pale and cold; he will put his fingers upon your heart-strings and the life, the music in you will be gone.

Tenderly amid flowers and tears, your friends will lay your form in the arms of Mother Nature, and the man of God will say: "Dust to dust, ashes to ashes," and King Death will laugh.

Your friends may plant a shaft of marble at your head, in memory of you, and after a time the storms of winter, the heats of summer and the dust and grime of earth, will blacken and blur those letters upon the stone, and your name will be obliterated and you will be forgotten—and Death will laugh again.

But there is another great power in the universe, greater than Death, and his name is LIFE, and he has many beautiful angels. Some of them are called Love; others Light and Truth, and Wisdom, and they do his bidding always. He fills space. He is the force which animates every atom in the universe—the rocks, the earth, the trees. He breathes in the fragrance of the flowers; he smiles in the sunshine; his subtle influence may be felt in the air you breathe. By the laws of adhesion and cohesion he fashioned our earth and all the mighty worlds in space.

When as sparks of living light, you and I existed in the great ocean of life he said, "Go forth and conquer!" and the sparks trembled—went out into space to seek their affinity with matter and become living, breathing entities.

When Death blew his frosty breath upon the brow of Nature and said it must die, the leaves fell from the trees; the flowers, with drooping petals, closed their eyes in dreamless slumber; the great oak that but a short time before had spread its green foliage to the smiling sunbeams, now lifts its bare arms as though in supplication to the overarching skies; but we know the oak is not dead—we say, it is resting.

The spirit, the life principle, lies hidden deep within the bosom of Mother Nature.

Soon that great King whose name is LIFE will kiss the sky—the sunshine and the Spring will wed, and the flowers with quickened life will again come forth.

The positive and negative forces in Nature will unite and the electrical current send its life-giving power out into every tree and flower and tiny blade of grass, until the whole world is in one blaze of glory.

Ah but you say, this does not prove to us that the King Immortal you speak of is a reality. We know that Nature has a way of winding itself up somehow, and goes on and on by some law of perpetual motion—but tell me of my darling, the child I resigned to the arms of Nature, after the mighty monarch Death had breathed upon it. We know he is a reality, for he takes our loved ones away and never brings them back; the fruits and flowers and grain come forth anew and smile upon us, but where are those who were dear to us? We have called, but in vain; the sweet voices we loved are lost to us forever. We have prayed, but our prayers have fallen back upon us like echoes in the lonely forest, and soon we, too, must yield ourselves up to this cruel Death. Oh! if there is an undiscovered country to which our loved ones have gone, tell us—tell us of it, that our hearts may be at rest, be stilled of this pain.

Now that kind and beneficent king called LIFE heard the cries of the bereaved and lonely ones; he saw the tears and felt the throb of lonely hearts, and he bade his angels Love, Truth and Wisdom to descend to earth's inhabitants (for he loves them much) and impart to them the knowledge they had so long sought.

The angels obeyed, and when they had come into the mortal sphere they were attracted to a home where King Death had set his seal upon the brow of the mother. It was an humble abode, but the golden rule had been the law of life, and to such the angels love to come.

The mother, a widow, had toiled from morn to eve to maintain her little flock, until at last, overcome with fatigue and care, her life was slowly and silently ebbing away. Her features were drawn and colorless; the faltering voice was scarcely audible to the darlings who were clustered about her in all the abandonment of grief that cannot be stayed.

The apartment was chilly, dark storm-clouds were spreading a mantle over the sky, bringing an added gloom to that little abode. All life and beauty and hope were shut out from that home, or so it seemed to that sorrowing group.

The eldest, a delicate girl of thirteen years, upon whom would devolve the cares so soon to fall from the dying mother's shoulders, watched and waited, thinking of the mother going away—she knew not whither, and she would never see her again. And when, at last the fluttering breath had fled, when the lips were cold and could no longer respond, the child threw herself across her mother's body, cying, "Mother! Mother! come back to me! I am all alone! Oh! come back!"

The unseen angels who, during all these hours had never left this home of sorrow gazed with mingled feelings of pity and joy upon the scene, and they said, "Let us fling back the shadows that divide the mortal from the immortal, that this child of earth may see that her mother is not dead."

They waited until her grief had spent its force and she became more calm; then they flung the shadows back and her spiritual vision was opened, nad she saw and heard that which filled her soul and all her future life with joy. She beheld her darling mother no longer encased in the form she had known, but one finer, loveller, more transcendently beautiful than any form she had ever seen—but still her mother smiling upon her with the same smile, gazing upon her with eyes as full of love as ever they did in the past, and with her were the angels the King of Love had sent, and near by the dear father, smiling as of old, and the little brother the King of Death had robbed them of so long ago.

The little room that until now had seemed so dark and gloomy, was illumined with a glory not of earth; sweet music, before unheard of, seemed to fill the place with melody, whose vibrations rose and fell like the ripple of waves on some enchanted shore. Roses and sweet mignouette mingled their fragrance with the lily and the violet—all was beauty and light and loveliness.

The mother's joy seemed perfect, but for the grief of her child, for she had been a good woman. Placing her arms about the child, she said: "My darling, I am not dead; the body lying there is but the worn-out garment I have cast away for a better one. I am alive and the angels Love and Truth and Wisdom tell me that I am an immortal spirit. And, darling, remember we will never leave you; though you may not see us, we will guard and guide your footsteps all your earthly way, and when King Death casts his shadow over your mortal existence, we will come with the angels of LIFE and bear your spirit away to the realms where King Death cannot enter."

And so the veil was lifted and the angels of LIFE still come and go to all the children of earth. King Death no longer laughs; his power is broken and his sceptre is gone. The veil over the doorway of the Temple of Life has been penetrated by the eye of the spirit.

Millions of earth's children are glad with a joy unspeakable. The King of LIFE has come and Death himself is dead.

Yes, Death is dead, and in his place
Stands Life, Eternal Life!
Oh! mortal, turn thy gaze above—behold
Such glories as can ne'er be known
In all this outward strife.

Let Peace her mantle fling
O'er all thy earthly ways,
And when thy soul casts off the heavy chains of earth,
Thou'lt wing thy flight to fairer climes and brighter days.

Eternal LIFE and endless progress
Is the way of every human soul,
And thou shalt climb to heights undreamed,
And grander truths perceive,
As age on age in endless cycles roll.

WORTH WHILE.

You say, my child, it's not worth while
To study your lessons at school;
But when you're a lad
You'll be ever so glad
That you mastered each study and rule.

And when you're a man, it is "still worth while"
To study the lessons of Life;
For we learn much through sorrow
That will aid on the morrow,
Thus growing through hardship and strife.

All small things do dwell, in the end it will tell,
Every kind word and act is "worth while";
You will never repent
Of a life kindly spent.
Forward, then! bravely facing each smile.

SPIRIT TOLD CHUM WHERE TO FIND THE BOOK.

Old Virginian, One of Original Three Cronies, Relates a Strange Story.

Visiting acquaintances in San Francisco, Cal., is Col. John L. Grubs, of Richmond Va., a former assistant postmaster of that city and gentleman of the old school, whose stories of plantation days never fail to interest all who are fortunate enough to be within earshot.

Col. Grubs is not a believer in ghosts or psychic phenomena of any description, and has no theory of his own to account for the following incident which he related one night when the conversation had drifted into the supernatural.

"I had two bachelor friends," he said, "with whom I used to hunt a great deal in the bird season. Out of season we would get together whenever we could and talk over our favorite books and other topics of kindred interest. Everybody at home who knows me knows to whom I refer, and as one of the parties met a tragic death, the figures of this story will be pretty well recognized at once.

"My bachelor friends got closer together when I got married, to speak to one was also to say something of the other. They took it in turns spending evenings with each other, Charlie going to Dick's apartments every night for a week and vice versa.

Fireside Cronies.

"Each had a special chair for the other on either side of the open fire in winter and side by side on the balcony in summer. They were at particular as a couple of old maids in this respect, and some others, one of which was not to exceed a certain number of drinks an evening, except on very special occasions.

"They were one time considering a work in three volumes, two treating of Southern songsters, and one of Virginia birds exclusively. They started in on the latter and read with delight of their old acquaintances of the forests and Jeems river marshes.

Dick valued this volume very highly, so highly, in fact, that he didn't quite like the idea of Charlie taking it out with him one afternoon to read in a favorite haunt, near the old reservoir. Dick had a business engagement and could not go along.

That night, the first in years, Charlie was absent from his accustomed seat near Dick. The latter was so disurbed that the next morning he went around to his friend's home only to find that they supposed Charlie to have spent the evening with him as he often did.

"During the day there was no news of him. The next day it was decided to drag the reservoir, and the body of his life-long friend was found.

Turned Down Dead One's Glass.

It was a said blow to Dick, who found himself completely at a loss without Charlie. Everything reminded him of the dead man—his pipes, his books, the empty chair, the empty glasses that he had to turn down every night as he poured his own drink and drank it down in sorrow.

"It was long before he thought of the missing book on Virginia birds, the book which Charlie had taken with him on that fateful walk. What could have become of it? It was probably lying at the bottom of the old reservoir, where his friend had perished.

"The fire was bright, and opposite him was Charlie's empty chair. On a little table at his side were the decanter and two empty glasses. He filled his own and tried to forget, but he could not.

"The following night he again sat by the fire staring at the vacant chair on the other side of the hearth and thinking how empty his life was without his old chum. Again the thought of the missing book returned to his mind and would not be dismissed.

"The fire died down and he got up to put on a fresh log. When he sat down it was in Charlie's chair. As he did so Charlie strode into the room in his old fashion."

Ghost Did Not Look Uncanny.

At this moment the Colonel interrupted his narrative long enough to say: "And this is the story just as Dick told it to me. He did not feel surprised, at least not any more so than at the sudden appearance of a friend who had been long absent. There was nothing uncanny about the appearance of Charlie. He looked just as he did the afternoon he came to borrow the volume on Virginia birds.

"'Why, Charlie, damn it,' said Dick, 'I thought you were dead.'

"'So I am,' replied Charlie; 'I was drowned.

"'Preposterous, man! Here you are as natural as ever. Come, take a drink. You don't know how I have missed you.'

"'I am dead, old man,' said Charlie, 'but I could not rest until I got that book off my mind. I knew how much you thought of it and how much you would worry over it. None of the things I have done or left undone have worried me. It was the book, the book, the book all the time. I carried it along the road, but loitered on the way, and it was almost dark when I came to Ridle's blacksmith shop. It was too late to read, and I left the book there, intending to return for it.

"'Old boy, I did not get a chance to start back, but the book is at Ridle's.'

"Charlie was gone.

"Dick found himself staring from the chair and saying, 'But for God's sake, Charlie, don't you pull out like that—"

"But there was no sign of his friend.

"And," added the Colonel, "the book was found at Ridle's."

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

TELL ME, AS I CLASP HANDS WITH THEE, SWEET WIFE.

But one rare being in the Universe
holds allegiance from me;
None other responds to life's dreams,
my heart throbs, none other but
thee;
While high over us sweet Nature's banner unfurled wide to life's
breeze,
Waves vibrant in our loves, that bear
us swiftly on beyond earth's seas.

Who says we're not married in highest heaven, dreams in cloistered cell
Of true, pure, noble and trusting womanhood doomed to endless hell;
But the God above and truth around us, bear to us radiant life,
As across life's chasm, I clasp hands with theo, my beautiful wife.

I am told, to me one dearer than life, is with you "over there;"
You spoke often of her wisdom and beauty, while you still were here;
You told me she was mate of my soul,
a counterpart of my life
And I have felt her strange, sweet influence as part of thee, sweet wife.

I have believed her wisdom the true inspiration of thy wit;
Her Soul, the fountain of thy love that warmed friendships through life's cold mists;
In very truth, I've dreamed her great
Soul,, the subconscious in your life;
Oh, Sweetheart! Is this truth? Tell me! as I clasp hands with thee, sweet wife.

The life that was and life to be, are one; Destiny marked them ours;
Ours for life's battles, our Souls' joys and wisdom gleaned from sage, or stars.
Here, thou wert my life and love;
Hope thrilled our hearts through all noble strife;
Is love unending there? Tell me; as I clasp hands with thee, sweet wife.
DAVID.

WHAT SHALL WE FIND?

What shall we find when we leave behind
Our forms of earthly clay?
Shall we take our flight to the world of light
And behold eternal day?

Will our spirits soar to the glistening shore
Of a glorious river of life,
Then joyously bathe in its silvery wave
And be cleansed of all hatred and strife?

Will their faces shine with a love divine,
When we enter that heavenly land?
Will they bid us come to a beautiful home,
Hold out a welcome hand?

Will angels bright in that world of light
Which they have prepared for us
there?
Shall we find sweet rest on a loving breast,
And no more harrowing care?

Will there be no tears, no doubts and fears,
No sickness or heartache again?
Will loving smiles our hearts beguile,
And banish all sorrow and pain?

Shall we find rare flowers in fragrant
bowers,
And meadows of unfading green,
Enchanting hills, and lakes and rills,
All glowing with golden sheen?

Shall we hear glad songs from countless throngs
Of spirits made happy and free?
Will our hearts be filled with joyful
thrills,
As we join their grand jubilee?

Shall we find all this transcendent
bliss
When we leave the earthly shore?
Will peace and joy without alloy
Dwell with us forevermore?

Then why should we fear when the angel draws near,
In garments of dazzling white,
To bear us away where endless day
Forever excludes the night?

So gently we'll glide on the flowing tide,
Across to the other shore.
Where visions bright will greet our sight
And troubles are known no more?

A MAGNETIC HEALING SCHOOL.

I have been thinking of commencing a school for the purpose of giving instructions in healing by Magnetism. Magnetism is the most effective, the most painless and the speediest method of healing of any system in the world. Every person can do some good, healing, but I would advise only those who note some success in treating slight pains to learn. They cannot have complete success unless they learn to apply their magnetism properly. This is taught in the "Manual of Magnetic Healing," so that a healer may do fairly well, and with practice make a much better success than regular doctors, whose success in chronic cases is about, or even below zero, or than even osteopaths, who seem to stand higher than any other system of healing, but if they would be perfect, they should thoroughly study the human system, particularly the nervous system. I should if I could find those willing to be treated in the presence of the class, provided the treatment is costless to them, give illustrations of treatment.

The time required for the school would be short, not to exceed three months, and the price would be about $25.00. Free to those unable to pay. Room rent would be about $8.00 to $15.00 per month, and of course living is as cheap one place as another. If the school is in any way encouraging, I shall continue it every year, or have someone who will. Address me at Olympia, Wash.

MANUAL OF MAGNETIC HEALING.

By Daniel W. Hull.

Dr. Hull has been a healer for more than forty years, and has been uniformly successful. His instructions to healers, and those wanting to learn to heal are the most complete of any work that has ever been published. No healer should be without it. Price 25 cents.

Extraordinary Spirit Visitations

The Many Manifestations, Presentiments, Dreams That Happened Before, at and After the Death of Perl J. Cupp.

After reading and re-reading the testimony of many others, pardon me to write what happened under my own observation, and in my own family. Ere this I have heard of many things happening, but never paid the least attention to them, and doubted until my dear boy was called home, Nov. 27, 1905, aged 21 years, 5 months and 10 days. To write the many apparitions, manifestations, dreams, presentiments and premonitions that happened before, at, and after the death of my dear boy, Perl J. Cupp, causes sorrow and tears; but if I can help my fellow man, or men of science, to draw some conclusions, I will do so. We may call it telepathy, sensation, Spiritualism, imagination, hallucinations, or whatever name you may suggest, but we know in our case these things did come within our notice.

I have always been a great believer in God, Christ and the immortality of the soul, and that death does not end all, but the coincidence referred to in this article convinces me more firmly that what we call death is only the shuffling off this mortal coil, and we put on an immortal body, a spiritual body, the very moment death comes. With all my reading and thinking of this all-important subject, that death is only a separation, I find that my knowledge of the future is a grain of sand surrounded by a limitless ocean, and if ever a family should be thankful to an all-wise Providence, it should be my family. We had many visions, presentiments and manifestations shown us after our dear boy had gone to that city beyond this earth. These presentiments will ever be remembered. They will always be a solace to us, that our dear boy passed through the pearly gates safely, and now dwells in that city where there is no sickness, no death, no sorrow.

I will give a synopsis of characters:
Geo. W. Cupp, father of Perl J. Cupp.
Nettie I. Cupp, mother of Perl J. Cupp.
Lola Cupp, only sister of Perl J. Cup.
Fred A. Cupp, brother of Perl J. Cupp.
Ella Barr, sister of my wife.
Lydia Cupp, wife of Corydon C. Cupp, a brother of Geo. W. Cupp.
Parkie, a brother of Perl J. Cupp, who died 18 years before.
Thomas J. Cupp, a brother of G. W. Cupp.
Don Cupp, a brother of Perl J. Cupp.

First, I have heard of dreams, manifestations and presentiments, but I was somewhat a doubter until they came under my own observation. If I did not know they were true, I would not believe them, but I know they are, and the only explanation I can give is that they are divine.

Perl J. Cupp died, or was cut to pieces by a train of cars, Nov. 27, 1905; age, 21 years, 5 months, and 10 days. He was a great traveler. He had been in nearly every state in the Union, over most of Canada, and in every country in South America. He had just been home 10 days after a two years' trip to South America. He knew no fear. He was on the ocean when, for four days, they pumped water day and night ere they reached land. On Sunday evening, before his death, he pulled up his sleeve and said, "If ever I am killed, and you can't identify me, look at this tattoo on my left arm." For six hours he lay at the morgue, not identified, and within only a few feet of his mother and sister. He had been away two years, and scarcely any one knew him.

But when he came home from South America he stopped at a restaurant and got a lunch. Allen Schwab was at the counter, and he was well acquainted with Perl. When Perl was killed, he was all cut to pieces, only his head and left arm remained whole, and no one recognized him. But Schwab thought all the time it looked like Perl's hat. He said to himself: "As soon as my dinner is over, I will go up and get Thomas J. Cupp and take him over to the morgue, and see if it is not Perl." It was. I was on the road, and away from home. When the news reached my wife she became frantic. My wife sent my boy to the grocery, and Dr. Davis was there. He said to Don, "Go home and tell your mother it is not Perl, and to dry her tears." Dr. J. Leonard was there, and my wife said, "Go over and look at his left arm, and see if such a tattoo is on his arm." He reported there was. Now, why was it Perl showed it, the tattoo, the night before? Why was it only his left arm that was saved, of his whole body? All the rest ground to pieces. Can mortal man explain this? Another peculiarity of his was that he always carried a bundle of letters from Miss Rose Belle Isle, of Menominee, Mich., to whom he was to be wedded in the coming April, and he always carried identification cards. When we asked the coroner, he said nothing was found. We wondered, after his burial, where these were. I looked around, and found them in the book case. He had always carried these, and had carried them all over South America. He was leaving then for a trip to Marion, Ohio, and Cincinnati, Ohio.

On Saturday evening, Mrs. Ella Barr, living at Toledo, Ohio, dreamed she saw my wife all dressed in black, and sitting in a corner weeping bitterly. The dream came true to the letter. Toledo is 65 miles from Mansfield.

On Monday morning, the day of his death, at 3 a. m., Belle Cupp, at Parma, Mich, dreamed she saw Perl all cut to pieces. She was so positive of its truth, my brother could not console her, and she would not go to sleep. Parma is 150 miles away. They knew nothing of his demise until the Saturday following his death.

On Sunday night previous to his death, Fred A. Cupp was 1,000 miles away, on the ocean, he being in the United States navy. Five times he got up in his sleep, and the crew inquired what was wrong. He said: "There is something wrong at home. I know my brother is dead." They talked to him, and he fell asleep. At 5 p. m., when he was called, the first thing he thought of was: "We shall miss him, but not forget him; there's a vacant chair at home."

The whole piece he said over and over all day; and he would sing this piece, and could not get it out of his mind. He never received word of his brother's death until Tuesday, 11 a. m. He had written us of his dream. On Tuesday at 2 a. m., Lydia Cupp, 85 miles away, at Portage, Ohio, sprang up in bed and began to cry, and my brother said, "Lydia, what is wrong?" She said that she just saw Perl, and that he was all cut to pieces. It was so plain; everything was so real. She would not be comforted. She would not sleep, and all day Tuesday her husband and she talked about it. We called them up by long distance phone, Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m., to notify them that Perl would be buried Wednesday at 11 a. m., at Fostoria, Ohio. They related the above incident to us then.

But now comes what I deem the greatest test of all. From the moment my wife heard that Perl was killed, her weeping was great—she could not be consoled. Perl was left at the undertaker's until Tuesday. I could not get home until late Monday evening, and my wife would not do a thing until I arrived. Her cries would be, "Oh! An endless eternity." She believes in a hell of fire and brimstone. And Perl away so long! She did not know how he had lived. No one could console her. He was brought home on Tuesday. The family, accompanied by the Rev. R. H. Edmonds only, went in to view all that remained of our loved boy. His face and neck was all that was saved, except his left arm. The Rev. R. H. Edmonds said he would offer up a word of prayer ere we left the room. I saw that I had to burst into tears, and turned to one side, so that my wife would not see me cry. I held her with my right arm. While the Rev. Edmonds was praying, my wife and Lola Cupp said the most beautiful light they ever saw came and shone in his coffin, and around his face, more beautiful than the rays of the sun, more bright than the brightest of arc lights. They thought that Perl was going to speak, to laugh. My wife bent over to hear him speak, but he spoke not. Can mortal man explain this? It was the glare of the light of heaven. My wife left the room; her tears and sobbing ceased. She said: "I know now my boy is safe in that heaven of rest." We are poor; but all the wealth of the world would not purchase this one omen, if it could be sold. Oh! I imagine my dear boy begging of God to send an omen that he was safe. The surety came. Two hours before he clasped his arms around her neck, and kissed her good-by and smiled. How well she remembers that. But it will never be remembered as this last smile, because it was from above—a heavenly smile, an immortal, a spiritual smile. It was no sun's rays, because it was raining, and the heavens were blanketed with clouds, and not one ray of the sun could be seen. She has told me more than 100 times that, if it were not for this token, she would be beneath the sod. She never could endure it. Oh! how we ought to thank God for that light. Can anything be more sublime? Can mortal man explain only what is divine?

Let us now go over my experience. I, being away, came home at 2 a. m., Tuesday. Perl being away two years, I wished certainly to have a long talk. We talked Thursday. Thursday night I dreamed five times that I should take a paper dollar I had in my pocket and go up and get $100 insurance. Something would say, "If anything should happen, you are poor, and that will help you to bury him." All day Friday the same thought came to me. I did not. I should have done so. Perl had one fault. I never said a word to him before until the Friday before the incident. What prompted me then I know not, but I could not get it off my mind. At last I said, "Perl, do you know the one fault you practice is worse condemned in the Bible than even murder?"

He arose and said: "I know it, papa, and henceforth I will be a man."

As I said, when he was killed, I was away. My brother called up the chief of police and said he should go to the hotels and find me and inform me of his death. I was at Marion, Ohio, that Monday. When he informed me, I thought I could not endure it. I went to my room to weep. Men came to talk, and speak words of comfort. At last I started to go across the street. I will never forget it. His voice, as plain as ever it was, came and said: "Papa, dry up your tears. I am happier and better off than you." So plain, so positive was it that I thought it his voice. I called up by long distance phone and asked if it were true. They said it was. I worried about his future, I admit. One night, he came to my bed and said: "Papa, to convince you I am safe, I have brought you little Parkie, and you know little children always go to heaven." What comforting words! I have not the ability or the power of language to utter such words. Hence they must be divine, and come from the distant shore. He and Parkie looked natural—only Parkie had grown. I then worried because he was all cut to pieces. One night he came and said: "Papa, do not worry; what we think brought us sorrow and pain, only brought joy and happiness." From that time I never worried.

Jan. 1, 1906, I was sitting at the hotel, Marion, Ohio, when all at once a voice came and said: "Take good care of mother." It was so shrieking that even to this day I can feel it in my left ear. I went to my room, and penned a poem entitled, "Take Good Care of Mother."

Mrs. Ella Barr died Saturday evening, Feb. 3, 1906, at Toledo, Ohio. Sunday night, at 2:45 a. m., she came to my bed and said: "I am now with Perl; he and Parkie are having such a good time." I did not know she was dead. I told my dream to my family so that they would not say I made it up. She looked as natural as ever.

Once Perl came to me and said: "We recognize friends over here, but how I do not know. I have not been here long enough to study it out. The first I met was grandpa (referring to my father), and then others came."

We had a long conversation on Friday before his death. He said he did not blame me for my failure financially. He said he was perfectly satisfied about Fred and Lola—never mentioned Don. One night after death, he came and said, "The last conversation we had I said I was perfectly satisfied about Fred and Lola, but never said a word about Don. But have Don preach Christ and him crucified, as not one-half of his love and kindness has been told." He has never come to me since. I don't think he will.

Now, these are dreams and visions of things I never thought of. Explain them to me. If there is anything I can do, I will help you. One thing I forgot about Ella Barr. (I believe the reason she came to me was this: I once did her a favor, when all her friends seemed to leave her. I always believed she came to me to repay that kindness. As one poet has said, "If you have had a kindness shown, pass it on, pass it on; till in heaven the deed appears, pass it on, pass it on.")

HOME JOTTINGS

From the Pen of Mattie E. Hull.

Among the excellent articles that have appeared in The Progressive Thinker from week to week, there has been none that has more deeply stirred my soul within me than the communication from H. D. Barrett, which heralded the good work which has recently been achieved in Portland, Oregon. For two reasons I was especially interested in the report that the Ordinance had been passed, over which there had been bitter contention: First, because it is just, therefore right; and Second, many names included in the report of those who stood valiantly in defense of the Ordinance are names of some of the good friends, with whom "The Hull Pilgrims" have worked at stated times for many years. In fact, in all the work in which Mr. Hull and myself have been engaged in the city of Portland, it was done under the auspices of "The First Spiritualist Society," except the independent meetings we held in the Mallory parlors. Having been so closely associated with the society from time to time, we understand the obstacles with which it had to contend, and the outside pressure which, like counter-currents, at times made the work difficult and disheartening.

Dear friends of Portland, I would like to reach my hands over the distance, and grasp yours, and verbally assure you of my continuous interest in your welfare. Moses, who loved you, and whom you loved, would express from his home of larger opportunities, his interest also, in every step of progress you make.

There are two classes strayed in opposition against the Ordinance, which has proven so successful in Chicago—the Ordinance for which "The Chicago Spiritualists' League" so nobly stands. One class is made up of those who have had nothing to do with Spiritualism, but to make use of its name, in their schemes of graft and exploitation. Persons who have announced themselves as "The Greatest Living Psychics"; "Most Wonderful Clairvoyants in the World;" "Mediums who never make a mistake," and so on ad infinitum.

The other class, as far as my observation and knowledge are concerned, is made up of honest and well-meaning people, who are ignorant of the general phases of the movement, and having had no experience except with bonafide and in every way, trustworthy mediums, and they cannot imagine why legislative enactment should prohibit anyone who claims mediumistic powers. Possibly, a third class might be named: Those who know of the deceit and trickery labelled "Mediumship," and would let it go on, as one of my correspondents has written, "These people will sooner or later hang themselves." Those who take the position do not realize that while the secular press publishes the sensational advertisements of the grafters who claim to be the "Wonder of Wonders," that our best mediums are under ban, and bear to a certain extent the stigma that has been placed upon the most unworthy. Spiritualism and its true evangels will be placed before the world in their true light as the good work goes on.

"Where are you going to Camp?" This question has reached me in a score or more of letters. Strange as it may seem, this is the first season since 1872, that I have been free from camp meeting engagements. I will state the matter as it is; when replies to some of my applications for dates, were received I was not a little surprised to learn from those to whom I had written, that they had "no idea" I cared to make engagements this season; had it been known, I would have been on the program," etc. It seems a little strange, as I had announced in the papers at various times my desire for camp meeting dates. I will now state that I would like engagements during the month of September and occasionally during the Fall and Winter months.

If I conclude to continue my work in the Morris Pratt School, I can arrange my periods so it would be possible for me to fill Saturday night and Sunday engagements within a few hundred miles of my home and would be glad to do so.

I conclude, from several letters received this summer, that some of my friends think I am in "very poor health" this summer. Such is not the case; I am leading a busy life, dividing my time between household duties, garden work, writing, and not the least among the varied things that are in the every-day program, are the sittings, or in other words, the seasons of communion with my invisible teachers and loved ones. I am busy from early morning until nightfall, and am grateful for the strength given me to accomplish all that I have since the closing of the School in May.

Of course, since Mr. Hull left us, the business connected with our publications, devolves upon me. I have an extensive correspondence. All of this, with matters pertaining to the home, and my psychic work fill up the long days.

I have not failed to hold a sitting for Mr. Hull, one day since the transition service one year ago the 14th of last January. He who, for so many years was my teacher in many things, does not fail me now. In many instances his messages to me are beautiful spirit revelations, and it is when lifted in soul into those vibrations where it is possible "to receive the blessings," as he used to say, that I feel it still sweet to live and labor in this mundane sphere.

One of the most positive proofs that has come to me, assuring me of Mr. Hull's interest in my work was contained in a letter written to me by a Denver friend, when I was in Los Angeles. It contained this: "I have received an unmistakable message from Mr. Hull." He gave points in the message that made him positive it was his "old friend Moses" who gave the communication; this was for me: "Write Mattie, and tell her not to give up her daily sittings; I am anxious that she should continue them regularly; they are as helpful to me as to her." The writer added: "Mr. Hull seemed so earnest in the matter, I felt it was imperative that I write you and I cannot urge the matter too strongly." This was but a short time after Mr. Hull's transition. No one knew of my sittings, except the people in the home where I was entertained.

The Biography.

It may not be out of place to state here, that a large supply of Mr. Hull's Biography has reached me, and of course I would like to sell them as rapidly as possible. The cloth-bound are one dollar per copy; paper, 50 cents. A discount will be made when taken by the half-dozen. I say this, because sometime during the winter, persons connected with societies asked for this information.

Spiritualists in Ohio, I may pass through Cleveland in August, if so, shall spend some time within 30 miles of that city. If you have not made previous engagements, let me hear from you. MATTIE. E. HULL.

A CURIOUS VEIN OF THOUGHT.

Thomas C. Buddington, a Prominent Medium, Starts a New Sanatarium at Hawk's Park, Fla.

To the Editor:—"Way down upon the Indian River" in Florida, your paper occasionally comes to the "New Thought" pioneers in this section of the world, and it brings to us a question as to whether Spiritualism after all is what we hoped it would be in the early stages of the movement. What with the loss of spiritual power to the mediums for demonstration, and the substitution of "fake phenomena," as evidence, it begins to look as if the "Cause" is getting in a bad way. The Searchlight reveals almost as bad a condition of corruption in mediumship as President Roosevelt's searchlight made plain to the people when he turnedit on the Standard Oil magnates.

Well, down in this country we are not disturbed by any of the ideas which agitate the Northern people. The Florida Cracker is not familiar with ghosts except as "haunts" and "harnts," as he terms them, and "Fake Phenomena" is something he knows nothing of, though he says he "has hearn tell of ghosts appearing up North, and he would give a dollar to see one." When a "Cracker" will give a dollar to see anything short of a circus, his interest is certainly aroused, and there might be a chance for a ghost-producing medium to win the dollar if he could give a good show.

We have no disturbing spirits in this state outside of Lake Helen camp. There occasionally they appear when the camp is in session, but but they come with the Northern contingent who bring them with them, and keep them active as long as the camp is in session. The rest of the year all is peaceful and serene as far as ghost affairs are concerned, and only a few spirit "wags" enliven the monotony of the long Florida Summer. Chief among these is "Artemas Ward" of the 60's who says he is "still dead," not having had any reincarnation yet, nor does he propose to re-embody until there are fewer fools among mortals who swallow eveverything done by spiritual mediums as true. He prophesies that it will take at least a hundred years to eliminate the fools, and twice that time to get rid of the "Fakes," even if The Progressive Thinker should be published in A. D. 2100.

He also says that "New Thought" is a hard subject to get a foothold in the average mortal's mind, owing mostly to lack of gray matter in the brain. "In order, therefore," he says, "to facilitate the growth of brain structure, the advanced spirits of the higher spheres have given up working among mortals to make Spiritualists, and are now concentrating their efforts to stop those who are so afflicted from becoming demented with fads and notions.

When a psychic or inspirational speaker starts out to "Reform the world," the best remedy is to put such psychics or reformers to work with the axe and grub-hoe in this country until they are satisfied the world was formed all right at first, and does not need their assistance to change it. If, however, with the use of the axe, grub-hoe and brush-hook, supplemented with the plow and cultivator, they can raise a crop of sweet potatoes and watermelons, they are on the high road to mental health and physical wealth. When they have got along far enough to own an orange grove, their chance for escaping the lunatic asylum is assured.

No Floridain ever believes a man who can make money this way is unsound in mind or purse, or ever will be. In order, therefore, to assist this class of spirit workers, we are at work opening a "New Thought" ground on the East Coast R. R., about 25 miles from the Lake Helen Camp, where the afflicted in mind and body can come and be cured. We have about 130 acres of good wild land awaiting the transforming work of the "fad"-afflicted reformer. We have a good supply of "magic" axes, "magnetic" grub-hoes, "electric" brush-hooks, and rakes for male reformers; and for nervous females nothing as yet has been found so effective as the "insulated" washboard, made of glass and placed in a tub of galvanized iron, filled with soap-suds and soiled clothes. The moment the patient puts her hand on the board the nervous excess of the brain comes to the fingers' tips, and although at first the arms may ache, soon that passes away and the exhilaration of clean clothes as they come out of the tub exalts the spirits and puts the patient on the high road to health.

So far everyone who has entered this natural sanitarium has recovered and even the writer, who when a young man had had visions of "Reforming this world," is entirely cured.

You will see by the accompanying photographs what a magnificent ground has been chosen by these advanced spirits to cure the mentally unsound and the physically incapacitated. The best thing about the spirit instructions given, is not to exclude any, however badly afflicted they may be, but like the grave-yard take them in until they experience the resurrection. This of course includes mediums who have been "faking" as well as their dupes, and we have great hopes that such mediums may be cured of their weaknesses and restored to honesty and sobriety.

But we assure them the moment they show signs of a relapse, the axe and grub-hoe treatment will be applied until such time as the "guides" say it is safe to turn them loose again. On these grounds there is no room for faking or dishonest phenomena, nor will there be any "winking" on the part of the management at doubtful manipulation of the mediumistic conditions.

It is not intended that this "New Thought" center will be a spiritual Bazaar where money will be the ruling power or its acquisition the chief spiritual motive. Hence, those "on the make" will do well to give it a wide berth. Those, however, who wish to come to a place where clean demonstrations of a spiritual order are given and who wish to study them, can come and be sure of a welcome, but none others are wanted. The scrapping, snarling, growling, scandal-mongering crowd may heed the Irishman's statement, "Your absence is very good company." We hope to have at least one center where spiritual truth can be sought and studied without unfavorable conditions to interfere with it.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

THE VENERABLE OCTOGENARIAN

The illustrious Col. R. T. Van Horn passed through the city last week on the way to that Shrine of Instruction, the Lily Dale camp. Although in his eighty-fourth year of age, his brain power is equally as great as when he sat in Congress term after term, assisting in making the laws of the Nation, or when he led his brave regiment in behalf of the Union cause, or when he illuminated the Kansas City Daily Journal with his advanced thought. He still is a wonder in intellectual vigor, and may be regarded as the Mascot of this wonderfully popular place of resort, Lily Dale. We think he is "booked" by the Fates to visit this camp ten more consecutive sessions before he starts for the Celestial City where he will have a specially high seat.

A Revival of the Past.

A news dispatch from New York of July 10 tells of a mother in that city who branded her 6-year-old boy on the forehead, giving as a reason she wanted to make of him a holy child. The poor deluded woman disfigured her loved son for life, obeying the instructions of the Lord, Ezekiel 9:4, "Go through the city and mark thou upon the forehead of the men," etc. We quote in substance from the Douay Bible, the Catholic rendering. It adds in a note that the Thau, or Tau, was the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet, which was in the form of a cross.

The Brahmans practiced the same rite many centuries before there was a Christian as they still do.

Scott, in his Commentaries on this quotation from Ezekiel, says: The practice of stamping the cross on the forehead of Christians "was at its height a short time before the Reformation; and it began to decline in many countries, when the doctrines of the Gospel became more generally understood and believed."

The same author, in his Commentaries on 2 Kings 18:4, says:

"The superstitious veneration paid to sacred relics in the Christian church, and especially to the adoration paid to the form of the cross, and even in express words to the wood and nails of it, with all the impostures which have arisen from that almost idolatry, have exact parallel in the worship of the brazen serpent."

It will be remembered it was the Lord who directed Moses to make a fiery serpent, set it on a pole [cross] and every one bitten by the serpents he had sent to bite the people shall live. So Jesus was set on a cross that every one who believes in him shall be saved from everlasting burning.

The Trail of the Viper.

The trail of the successful revivalist can be traced in any country a month or so after his departure, by the number of religiously insane he leaves behind him. His subjects are highly psychologized, and are left in that condition, with visions of an angry God, a flaming hell, with, perchance, some unbelieving dear one undergoing the tortures of the damned, ever before him. The hypnotic influence was not removed. What remains to a sensitive but to dwell continually with those mind-disturbing pictures of despair ever before him, such as the Billy Sundays of that profession have conjured in an over excited brain, and made real to receptive victims.

Grief borders on the extreme of gladness.—Italian.

A Tangled Thread of History.

(No. 3.)

It is now almost universally conceded by the learned, that Josephus' long story of the rendition of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek is a fiction. That he made heavy drafts on outside events, gathered from other authors, is everywhere apparent. He of limited reading is of course ignorant of this fact.

Alexander the Great, crossed the Hellespont in his grand march east to crush Darius, the Persian monarch, some time in February or March, B. C. 333. Reaching Sidon [Fishtown], the parent city of Phenicia—a little more than 100 miles due north from Jerusalem—says Rawlinson, in his "Story of Phenicia," page 216:

"While Alexander was at a distance, the Sidonians sent envoys to meet him, and invite him to enter their town. The Macedonian monarch readily complied with their request, and Sidon passed quietly into his hands."

Alexander advanced southward, besieged Tyre, spent seven months before its walls ere it fell, when he crucified 2,000 of her principal citizens, sold 30,000 of her inhabitants into slavery, then marched on Gaza, a seaport of southern Phenicia, about 120 miles south of Sidon. Two months were spent in subduing that city. It was late in autumn. The rainy season had set in, and supplies for his large army were nearly exhausted. Alexander was hastening on Egypt, where he had determined to spend the winter.

Open Josephus' "Antiquities of the Jews," Book XI., chapter 8, midway section 4, and read:

"Now Alexander, when he had taken Gaza, made haste to go to Jerusalem."

Then, after his manner, he enters into a protracted detail of his cordial reception; his entrance into the city; his sacrifice to God in the temple; his moving on neighboring cities, even advancing as far as Samaria, full 40 miles due north of Jerusalem, making a circuitous route to the northeast, over an almost impassable mountainous region, before he could again reach Gaza, to resume his march on Egypt. And all this to re-enact just what Rawlinson tells us occurred at Sidon more than ten months before.

Such is a specimen of Josephus, everywhere prolix and untruthful. Instead of confirming the Old Testament by his account of its translation into Greek, what Smith's Bible Dictionary, quoted last week, is truthful, "It is a fountain whose source is concealed," and this fact is everywhere apparent.

Instead of corroborating Bible story does it not demonstrate that there is something concealed in regard to that collection of ancient literature, which priestcraft has labeled "Holy?" Honest, truthful history does not require frauds and forgery to strengthen its statements

Additional to the 120,000 Jewish slaves added to the population of Alexandria, historians report another 100,000 of that people located in that great metropolis; but neither of these statements is probably true. It was Phenicia which was on the great highway between Babylonia, Assyria, Persia, and Parthia to Egypt. Each time either of those powers, whether led by Cambyses, Nebuchadnezzar, Ashurbanipal or other great warrior, it was Phenicia that was overran and her people were led into slavery; but such facts are rarely mentioned by Christian authors, Jews alone were the victims of such inroads, they telling the story.

Singular, is it not, that a people so highly favored by Alexander, as related by Josephus and generally believed, should be compelled to contribute such a vast population of slaves to the building of Alexandria?

Ptolemy Philadelphus sent his heralds to all known nations to collect their history for the Alexandrian library. Is it probable Phenicia, the country nearest to Egypt, and possessing such wonderful resources, was overlooked? On the contrary is it not probable it was the first drawn upon for its history? We are assured such a history was in existence, and, marvelous is it not? we are told IT DISAPPEARED IN THE FORE PART OF THE FIRST CENTURY OF THE CHRISTIAN ERA. What became of it? Now we have to ransack the history of other nations, and make immense drafts on the Old Testament to collect only a fragmentary history of the people who gave the world its letters; who founded colonies that rivaled Rome in power and population; who were the parents of commerce, and the first to engage in mining.

It has been shown several times in these columns the magnificence of these people who had colonies all along the southern coast of the Mediterranean; who circumnavigated Africa; who founded a mining colony in south central Africa; whose ships were on every sea, and whose sailors were in every port. What became of them?

Josephus had the entire Jewish nation either killed in the battles of Titus, sold into slavery, or carried away in triumph, to grace the gladiatorial sports of Rome. Now the Jews are everywhere, generally most numerous in those regions where we found the Phenicians at the commencement of our era.

As we shall show further on, the Phenicians used the same language credited to the Jews; they employed the same characters in writing; worshiped the same gods; and were very earnest temple builders. Besides a lost history the whole race is lost! Shall we say they are metamorphosed into Jews? And have we not only metamorphosed the people into Jews, but HAVE WE NOT ALSO STOLEN THEIR HISTORY AND METAMORPHOSED IT INTO THE OLD TESTAMENT, AND MADE IT THE BASE FOR THE NEW TESTAMENT?

More: Have we not constructed our Messiah, the Holy One, the Anointed, a belief in whom is to save our souls from a yawning hell, out of passages found in that transmuted history, and located him in the almost inaccessible mountains of Judea, at a time when it was almost barren of inhabitants?

It would require a large volume and much labor to unravel the tangled thread which priestcraft, aided by scholarly monks in the monasteries, have thrown around this subject. Copyists of ancient literature, they interpolated every page with their forgeries, and the villainies have gone on uninterrupted for centuries and still continue. The Dark Ages, a period of a thousand years, if it ever existed, is lost to the world by their crimes.

We cannot place a finger on a single date between A. D. 350, and 1350, and say with certainty, we are within a hundred years of its actual occurrence, or can asseverate positively it occurred at all. During the entire forming stage of Christianity until the Reformation, at the commencement of the sixteenth century, civil and ecclesiastical matters were wholly under priestly control. And, notwithstanding the long list of Popes who date back to "St. Peter," there, probably, was not one until the Crusades.

It is purposed in our next to outline a short account of the Phenicians, which will aid us in correctly answering the many questions propounded during this article.

Holy Tricksters.

A learned writer, John I. Riegel, in a late issue of The Truth Seeker, says the statement that the parents of Jesus were residents of Nazareth is a falsehood:

"The name Nazareth is not mentioned by the writers of the Old Testament, by Josephus, or by any historian of the Messianic period. It does not apply to a locality, but is an invention to account for the term 'Nazarine' (nazora, despicable—the offscour of those separated from the community). It was used throughout the Roman empire to designate the rabble of the Jews, hence the inquiry of Nathaniel, 'can any good come out of Nazareth'?"

The writer could have added with truth that Paul, in all his Epistles, failed to use the term "Jesus of Nazareth."

The Bible translators had the happy faculty of making cities and proper names at will, and the former they could locate wherever would best accommodate their convenience. To make a proper name it was only necessary to capitalize a verb; illustrated in John the Baptist, properly rendered it would be John the dipper; Mary Magdalene, should have been rendered Mary the harlot. Now they have invented a city, and named it Magdala, and located it among the mountain crags, off the west coast of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus christos, Anglicized correctly, would have been rendered Jesus, the anointed; but instead they capitalized the Greek christos, and made it appear as a sur or family name.

The above are only a few of hundreds of like frauds of which the translators of the Bible were guilty to bolster up a gigantic impostor.

Sectarian Colleges on the Wane.

Shurtleff College, located at Alton, Ill., founded in 1831, endowed with $100,000 productive and $50,000 unproductive resources, where Baptist ministers were manufactured, feels the pressure of modern thought, and is proposing to remove to some other locality, hoping thereby to re-establish its past fame. But it is too late. Sectarian schools must give place to scientific. Either theology, with its creation of the universe in six days, the flat earth supported by pillars, a sun that was stopped in its course for a whole day that a slaughter could go on, and a thousand other false stories, must be taught, and students made to believe the ignorance of 2,000 years ago; else the knowledge science has revealed must be substituted. If the latter there will be inharmony and church creeds, and ordained ministers must soon be suspended for heresy.

Saved from Hell.

A news item in our morning paper of July 3 said:

"A woman has been arrested at Pherson, O., charged with having chopped off the heads of her five children."

The papers are overflowing during the last month or two with similar cases. The mothers have been attendants on revival meetings, and have been cursed with visions of the damned. Made insane with the prospect of eternal woe for their children, she accepts hell for herself to save her loved ones from priestly doom. As we read accounts of such cases we feel like redoubling efforts to extinguish such damnable teaching.

When a man loses "FAITH" he generally begins to think, and it's those who THINK that move the world.—National Ripsaw.

Some Unpleasant Truths

When Publicly Expressed They Often Prove Highly Beneficial to a Cause, Resulting in Great Good—A Portrayal That Should Be Carefully Considered by Every Spiritualist.

A noted man, once mistaken for a statesman, declared, in days not so very remote, "It is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us." There is a mighty truth involved in those words, and, just at the present time, that saying can be echoed by all thinking Spiritualists, who owe it to themselves and to the world to meet the condition that confronts them in all honesty of thought, and find a remedy therefor. Perhaps the old-fashioned disease, "the sleeping lethargy," has such a firm hold upon the majority of Spiritualists as to render it useless to hope for their recovery through any awakening treatment that can be given them. Safe, snug, serene and selfish in the possession of what they call Spiritualism, they are absolutely indifferent to the weal of the Cause as a whole, or to the welfare of those who represent that Cause before the public.

The salaries paid the average speaker by nine-tenths of the Spiritualist societies now in existence are not sufficient to provide decent support to any one who has a family, or who is responsible for the care and keeping of others not able to provide for themselves. In one certain section of the nation, with the possible exception of three societies, the highest salary paid any speaker is twelve dollars per Sunday. Such a speaker is seldom employed more than four Sundays in succession by any one organization. He is lucky if he gets more than one Sunday! He is generally forced to be content with five dollars for two lectures each Sunday, plus expense of travel.

The speaker must make up his itinerary for a season of 9 or 10 months with one Sunday here andanother one there until he has filled possibly thirty-six or forty Sundays. If he is paid five dollars per Sunday above expenses, he has two hundred dollars to show for his year's work. Special lectures and funerals MAY give him one hundred dollars additional for this period, but the writer has yet to find the speaker who can show that extra income during any one year from the sources named. Supposing he is paid one hundred dollars more for his services at camp meetings. This also is a large estimate for the average speaker. He will then have a grand total of four hundred dollars to show for the year's work as an occupant of the Spiritualist platform!

What a princely(?) income this is for a man who has to pay house rent, gas and water bills, fuel and other family expenses! Let him pay doctor's bills, surgical operations, clothing and unexpected items peculiar to domestic life, and his four hundred dollars are gone before his year is up. He and those dependent upon him live from hand to mouth, and he is lucky indeed if he has one decent suit in which to appear on the platform! Many of our speakers have to resort to manual labor or to business of various kinds to enable them to eke out an existence! One of our most highly cultured speakers says in a recent letter to the writer, "I receive so little for my lectures that I am forced to study well the menu cards at restaurants so as to determine NOT WHAT I LIKE TO EAT, but rather what I can AFFORD TO ORDER! When purchasing supplies for my table at home, I am obliged to adhere strictly to the same rigid rule!" This man has been a prominent lecturer on the Spiritualist platform for more than thirty years!

Conditions throughout the nation are but little, if any, better than they are in the section above considered.

Such speakers as Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Rev. A. P. Blinn, Prof. W. M. Lockwood, and a few others MAY POSSIBLY be paid more than twenty-five dollars per Sunday. They are permanently located, hence do not have to worry about extra expenses associated with travel. A well-to-do Spiritualist once asked Rev. F. A. Wiggin what his business was when at home and not engaged at conventions and camp meetings! The man was simply astounded when Mr. Wiggin told him that he was the regular speaker for a church society under the banner of Spiritualism! Perhaps this was the man who admitted that he was worth fifty thousand dollars, yet did not KNOW that any Spiritualist meetings were held in the United States outside of a few camp meetings! At this point, the writer ventures to throw in this thought: There will soon be no local Spiritualist societies worthy of the name in the United States if the camp meetings are kept up much longer! The camps have done a great deal of good in the past, but—THE HISTORY OF SPIRITUALISM CLEARLY PROVES THAT CAMP MEETINGS HAVE HELPED TO KILL LOCAL SOCIETIES!

In any city of forty thousand or more people, heated suites range from twenty to fifty dollars per month. The speaker who earns five dollars per Sunday cannot meet his rent, let alone other bills. What is he to do? Seek some other method of earning a living, or else go into the church! Since 1865, between one hundred and fifty and two hundred speakers and mediums have abandoned Spiritualism, either for church pulpits or for positions in the business world! Even the eminent orator, scholar, rationalist, and philosopher, Selden J. Finney, was obliged to leave us from lack of proper support! In politics he found a more remunerative field of action. He would have gone to Congress, perhaps to the governorship of California, had he not been so foully assassinated. There are people in the world who appreciate REAL merit, even if the Spiritualists do not!

The writer perhaps is as well paid as a speaker as is the average platform worker to-day, yet he must confess that he could not meet actual living expenses were it not for an outside income from daily labor performed in other fields. There have been times (and not one hundred years ago either) when this self-same writer had to earn his board by SAWING WOOD! The physical labor did not lower his dignity one iota. On the contrary, he was rather proud of the fact that he COULD SAW WOOD! Honest manual labor is not to be despised. The money earned by it is always clean. This case is cited as a proof of the interest the Spiritualists sometimes feel in their platform speakers!

It does not excuse them to say that the rank and file of the Spiritualists are poor in purse. This statement is a far cry, starting as a means of escape from actual duty.

The claim that the Spiritualists of America, taken as a class, are poor, IS ABSOLUTELY FALSE! Those who make that assertion know that it is false! After twenty years of travel in all of the states of the Union, the writer dares to state boldly that, taken man for man, measured with the followers of other forms of faith, the Spiritualists will exhibit EQUAL, if not GREATER wealth, in this world's goods than will the members of any and all of the churches in our land! This is not an idle boast. It is a direct statements of ABSOLUTE TRUTH!

Take the following illustrations, readers of these lines, and make your own deductions therefrom: One of the shrewdest scoundrels this land ever produced masqueraded as a medium for twenty-two years. He received large sums from hundreds of people, and finally succeeded in securing sixty thousand dollars from two of his credulous dupes at one haul! He then retired from business, wrote a book in which he confessed his knavery and boldly declared that all of his work as a so-called medium for the entire period named was ABSOLUTELY FRAUDULENT! He became wealthy by means of his counterfeit work, and the Spiritualists were the ones who supplied him with that wealth!

A degenerate, who had once been a medium possessing real power, after losing his mediumship, got into trouble at a certain place, through practicing fraud. He claimed that he was being persecuted, and appealed to the Spiritualists of America for financial aid, declaring that Spiritualism was on trial in his personality. The American Spiritualists, following the advice of The Banner of Light, in a very few days raised fifteen thousand dollars in cash for the man's defense. Costly legal talent was secured, and the trickster was freed! The writer says "trickster," and he means it! In 1902, this very counterfeiter offered to sell seventy-five thousand bogus "tests" to the one who pens these lines!

One of the cruelist, most conscienceless, wickedest and outrageously vindictive of all of the scoundrels masquerading as mediums, received the most welcome present of a house and lot worth, it is said, between five and ten thousand dollars, as "a token of love" from his "poor-as-church-mice" friends! The man confessed to a young boy, whom he deliberately led into wrong-doing, that he did not believe in a future life, much less in that which the world knows as mediumship. After his seances, he and his special cronies generally indulged in a drinking bout, in the course of which they were moved to paroxysms of wildest laughter over the fakir's "clever" imitations of the grief manifested by his heart-broken victims! Surely the people who gave this man a valuable house and lot MUST HAVE BEEN VERY POOR indeed to enable them to find so much cash!

Another clever trickster and all-around pretender was arrested at a certain point for obtaining money fraudulently in the name of mediumship. He asked to be released on bond to appear for trial at a future date. Permission was granted, and the bond he furnished, signed exlusively by Spiritualists, was reported by the Associated Press dispatches to represent between one and two millions of dollars! Surely, the Spiritualists (?) who signed a bond like that MUST HAVE BEEN POVERTY STRICKEN, with MILLIONS back of them! How RICH they were in SPIRITUALITY deponent sayeth not! In a recent trial in one of the great states of the Union, two pretended mediums turned state's evidence and confessed that they and their confederates had received fully five hundred thousand dollars from one poor Spiritualist millionaire whom they had succeeded in inveigling into two or three marriages with women posing as mediums! These two thieves escaped from the clutches of the law by confessing their villainy! They are living at their ease, surrounded by every comfort, by reason of the "poverty" of the Spiritualists!!

Now take the other side, and see how some of our noblest leaders are treated. A man whose reputation as an orator and scholar is world wide a man whom it is an honor to know, with a wife in every respect his equal in scholarship and integrity, furnishes an illustration of the interest the poor millionaire Spiritualists felt in his welfare. His wife fell ill with a violent fever. He had to abandon all of his lecture work to care for her. During her long illness he and she both were often without proper food for their bodies, and fuel to warm their apartment! This man did not receive a five or ten thousand dollar home from HIS "POOR(?)" friends! He was left to starve, or appeal to the county!

Again, another prominent worker, through prolonged illness on his own part, and that of members of his family circle, had to give up all of his engagements. He had no income whatever from any source. The poor(?) millionaire Spiritualists who bonded the trickster, and the poverty-stricken ones who made the fakirs wealthy, did not have a dollar for him, or for those depending upon him. His condition was well known and the only ones who sought to relieve his necessities were those who had little of their own. This list could be extended almost indefinitely, but these two cases must suffice. The contrast is painful! Princely gifts to self-confessed scoundrels, but nothing for those who were true and worthy!

The writer must not be misunderstood. There are many generous Spiritualists in this land of ours! They are the "salt of the earth," for they NEVER fail to respond to any worthy charity, nor do they ever begrudge what they give. The records of the past quarter of a century reveal the sad fact that it is the few noble souls who have given over and over again to the support of the Cause they loved, while the many have complacently, SELFISHLY enjoyed the fruits of this noble sacrifice. With the exception of a few like the arisen Theodore J. Mayer, men and women of means have accepted the benefits of Spiritualism, and refused to contribute one cent to its support. No one holds the TRUE SPIRITUALIST in higher esteem than does the writer. All honor to those who have sacrificed for the good of others! They have carried as heavy a cross up their Calvary as ever was carried by Jesus of Nazareth in days of old. It is often easier to endure the pain of nails through feet and hands than it is to be pierced by the rusty spikes of cold and hunger. The generous ones of our faith have carried their own burdens uncomplainingly, and have given of their little stores to relieve those of their brethren who were in need! The angels have kept a faithful record of the good deeds by those who PRACTICE as well as PREACH their Spiritualism; hence it is safe to say that the law of compensation will give them equal and exact justice, either here or hereafter.

Is it too much to say that there is a plain duty devolving upon every true Spiritualist in this land to-day? Is not that duty clear to every reader? Should not steps be taken in the direction of affording proper compensation to every worthy speaker and medium in our ranks? Should not the honest mediums be protected and cared for? The writer declares "Yes," most emphatically! Then give those mediums employment at LIVING WAGES, so that they can save a few dollars for a possible rainy day, or for support in old age! Pay them generously for their work! Remove every possible temptation to defraud or to deceive their patrons, far, FAR from them! Make them self-respecting by giving them a chance to earn their own livings. These words should also be applied to our true and worthy speakers. Do not humiliate them by pauperizing them! Do not degrade them by trying to beat down their terms! In the name of all that is just and right, GIVE THEM A CHANCE TO LIVE AS HUMAN BEINGS SHOULD LIVE!

As the first step, let all worthy speakers and mediums be employed by local societies, and paid decent salaries. The next step is—let each Spiritualist, who really loves Spiritualism for its own sake, give according to his actual means, to the support of the movement by aiding the local society of which he is a member. The third step (and perhaps THE ONE step of ALL steps) is—ENDOW THE N. S. A.! Fill its treasury to overflowing, so that the N. S. A. can do what the American Unitarian Association is doing by its speakers—what other National societies are doing by theirs—add enough to the stipends paid as salaries by weak local bodies to afford the speakers and mediums a LIVING INCOME!

Spiritualists, it seems to the writer as if the paramount issue of the hour is VERY CLEAR. It is the endowment of the N. S. A.!! If one thousand Spiritualists would give two hundred and fifty dollars each (as they can well afford to do); another thousand, one hundred dollars each (and they would not miss it); ten thousand, fifty dollars each; and others as much as they could afford without injuring themselves and families, the N. S. A. would have an endowment of $1,500,000, from which it could provide employment for the worthy, care for the needy, and do such other work as of right belongs to the Spiritualists to do! Comrades, sisters, brothers! Our duty is plain and clear! LET US DO IT BRAVELY, MANFULLY, WOMANLY! Let us make the Theodore J. Mayer Endowment Fund aggregate one and a half million of dollars, instead of twenty-five hundred, on or before October 1, 1908. Now is the time to act! Who will be the first to respond?

Yours for Spiritualism,

PROTECTING MEDIUMS.

This song explains my mission here,
And how I help my wife so dear;
She is the gate I keep ajar,
For angels from the realms afar.

Chorus—

The angels come and talk with me,
And sweet communion here have we;
They gently lead me with the hand,
For this is heaven's border land.

My gate ajar, my golden gate,
That swings from morn till very late,
I watch and guard from evil might,
For spirits come both day and night.

I work to keep my gate ajar,
And help the soul in realm afar;
I banish habits that are bad,
I welcome tho'ts that make me glad.

So let us live like angels here
To protect the psychics dear,
Protecting them from every hate
With loving words till night so late.

"INCOMPETENT" DECIDES THE SUPREME COURT OF MICHIGAN.

State Tribunal Sustains Verdict of the Jury Which Calls John F. Goff Mentally Incompetent for Disinheriting His Son.—Believers in Mediumship Lose Estate Worth $75,000.—National Association Employs Lawyers to Fight Contest, but is Decided Against in Returns from the High and Low Benches.

Cassopolis, Mich., July 14.—That a Spiritualist is mentally incompetent, is the holding of the supreme court in a decision rendered upholding the verdict of a Cass county jury, which decided that John F. Goff was unbalanced mentally on the subject of Spiritualism and, therefore, incompetent when he made his will disinheriting his only son, Leslie, in favor of Spiritualists' associations.

Goff's estate is valued at $75,000. He was a farmer, and, though always regarded as eccentric, was known as a shrewd business man. Mrs. Goff died when the son, Leslie, was born. The son is now more than 60 years old. He has been a resident of Oklahoma for a number of years and is a well-to-do business man in that state.

Takes Interest in Cult.

Late in life Mr. Goff began to take an interest in the Spiritualistic faith and allied himself with the cult to such an extent that he became a leader in a small way. He became, says the supreme court in its decision, a "Spiritualistic monomaniac" and thus was not accountable for what he did.

It was alleged that the old man was influenced by the members of the Spiritualistic cult to such an extent that he was made to believe that his son was not in fact his legitimate heir, and it is upon this supposition that the old man is believed to have acted when he made a will in favor of the association of Spiritualists and disinherited his son.

The estate was to have been used in the advancement of Spiritualism throughout the world. When the son announced that he would make a fight for the money left by his father, the National Association of Spiritualists employed lawyers and defended the action.

Case Comes Before Jury.

The case was fought out before a jury in Cass county and evidence was introduced to show that the old man was so engrossed with the subject of Spiritualism that he had no place in his mind for matters concerning his own family. The attorneys for the son claimed that his Spiritualism made the old man mentally incompetent and this theory has been accepted by the supreme court, according to the opinion rendered to-day.

The supreme court says in addition to the fact that Goff was a "Spiritualistic monomaniac" he was made so by the constant agitation of members of the cult, and that his frame of mind had reached the stage where he could no longer realize his duty toward his own flesh and blood.

Neighbors testified that Goff was so aggressive in his belief in his new religion that he often spoke of doing something substantial for the faith when he died.

Son Now Gets Property.

The son, Leslie, by the terms of the supreme court's holding, now becomes possessed of the entire estate and the National Spiritualists' Association is left out in the cold with the additional discomfort of having to pay a large attorney's fees.

The officers of the Association could not be reached to-day to make a statement of their side of the case, but it is not believed that any further effort will be made in the way of trying to gain possession of the property.—Chicago Inter-Ocean, July 15, 1908.

NASH LYCEUM ENDOWMENT FUND.

Impressive Words from Secretary Kates.

A good lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Nash, of Dillsboro, Ind., has sent to the N. S. A. a promissory note, nearly due, drawing seven per cent interest, the face value being $120, to start a Lyceum Endowment Fund in the name of her spirit son. Of course this is gladly received.

I feel free to say that the Nash Lyceum Endowment Fund is a splendid movement. I hear many say: "Well, what next?" What with the Theodore J. Mayer Endowment Fund and the Temple Fund, in order to by these accumulate permanent funds for distinctive purposes, and the several active funds of the N. S. A., the Spiritualists will think there is to be no let up in dunnings for assistance. Well, why should there be? You do not respond very excessively unto either one of these funds; and yet they comprise the greatest vital needs of the cause of Spiritualism.

You should not permit the N. S. A. to go into the next convention with the meagre showing of funds, in especially the Endowment Fund. You should be glad to make liberal contributions to the Cause by filling the General Fund with needed sinews of activity is so many needed directions. You do not respond readily to exhortations. Perhaps if you meditate silently and earnestly upon the public need for money to be placed in the N. S. A. for active effort, you would not need exhortation. This office is sending forth a coin card for remittances of coin securely, and on its face are these words: "Will you do something for the Cause of Spiritualism, for the Love of your Arisen Friends?"

If that will not entice a coin from you, what will? Send for one or more of these coin cards, and make a collection for one of the N. S. A. funds. Mrs. Eleanor Eager some time ago asked you to make a saving of 'mites" and join "The Ways and Means Club," making a remittance of these on the late July 4th. Mrs. Eager and a lady in Alaska are the only contributors so far. Are you satisfied with that report?

A young lady lately handed me a dollar for the N. S. A., and when I said: "I fear you cannot spare it," she replied, "Why, any one can occasionally give a dollar." Can you?

Secretary.

The Importance of Faith in Individual Immortality.

A Lecture by W. J. Colville, Delivered in Hamilton Hall, Oakland, Cal.

One of the burning questions of the present day is: Can we scientifically demonstrate human immortality, or has it been already scientifically demonstrated?

Two very opposite answers are constantly being given to this great query, both probably correct considering the view-point of the different answerers.

Psychical research is now receiving more and more attention over the entire civilized world, and naturally the interest taken in this mighty investigation challenges determined opposition from many well-meaning people who express fear lest so much interest being taken in the future life should tend to injuriously divert attention from the present. On Sunday, April 19, a most extraordinary lecture was delivered in San Francisco, which served as a decided counter-blast to the numerous sermons and addresses given on that Easter day in favor of learning all possible concerning the future life. The following excerpt from the San Francisco Chronicle of the following day, serves to show what peculiar notions are entertained by some speakers who are supposed to represent advanced liberal religious thought at present.

"In an address delivered before the Fellowship Circle at Corinthian hall last night, Reynold E. Blight, associate minister of the Los Angeles Fellowship, raised the question: Would the scientific proof of immortality tend to improve morality? and his lecture went to prove that it would not. He said in part:

"'A celebrated thinker once said that the belief in immortality has been the clog on the wheels of progress. Yet the question of what comes after death has always agitated the human mind, and there has never been so much investigation as at the present time. But up to date no scientific proof of personal immortality has been produced. The discussion is not on immortality in general, but immortality with respect to its effect upon morality.

"'The affirmative might urge that if we knew that life was continuous; that death was not a break, but that the same laws of birth and growth, of development, of progress, were existent beyond the grave, it would inspire hope and stimulate endeavor, because we would know that we could go on growing forever and ever. If we knew that in the life beyond the same laws of cause and effect reigned, that as we sowed so should we reap, we would be careful of our sowing, knowing that if we set in motion certain causes we would gather effects, as surely as that day follows night. If we knew for a certainty that this life was but a schoolroom where we were being educated for a larger life we would apply ourselves more assiduously to learn our lessons and master our problems. If we knew that loved ones were waiting for us beyond the mysterious river, that when we have crossed the dark torrent, we would clasp them to our hearts again, it would give a hope and a radiance to life and we would stride forward with a more buoyant step. If we knew that we could continue in that other life the work we have here begun it would give a sense of permanency to our efforts.

"'To judge this world by a hypothetical future, however, is to admit the present life a failure. The lack of definite knowledge concerning the future develops the truest trust in God. We are content to leave our loved ones who have passed beyond in the care of the great All-Father. The wish for personal immortality is pure selfishness. The belief of immortality belittles the present. The teaching of immortality has placed the emphasis on the future life and discredited the present world. This is the reason why the race has not progressed farther and faster. But the most destructive objection to a belief in immortality is the belief in rewards and punishments that has always been wrapped up in it. Possibility of eternal development, heaven and hell, meeting of our loved ones, are all more or less of this nature.

"'Life is worth living for itself, to develop character, to serve one's fellows, by a life of love and trust leave a rich legacy to posterity'."

It seems singular that any intelligent person should be able seriously to utter some of the foregoing sentiments, but it is now actually the case that quite a considerable number of professedly advanced thinkers share and express very similar ideas; it is therefore with no intention of answering one man in particular that we offer our decided protest against the specious arguments so strangely formulated in the report just quoted.

Certain of the statements made by Mr. Blight seem so self-evidently reasonable and entirely in accord with the moral welfare of any community which may endorse them that it appears to us almost incredible that any sane individual could seriously believe them to be other than beneficial quite apart from any positively scientific proof of their veracity, and it is indeed true that a very large number of liberal-minded religious and ethical teachers express a fervent hope that such views are sound and accurate if only because of the excellent moral effect they feel that these opinions are capable of producing. It surely needs very little argument to convince the unprejudiced of any denomination, or of none, that some of the views attributed to Mr. Blight by the Chronicle reporter are to a considerable extent without the slightest logical coherence seeing that he attributes to selfishness all affection for our friends provided that affection continues beyond this present physical existence, while he at the same time counsels us fervently to do all in our power to promote the welfare of our neighbors, and to live in loving fellowing with them so long as this present life continues.

The fundamental error in the philosophy of Mr. Blight, and all of his school, consists primarily in their foolish insistence upon a "future" life instead of upon a CONTINUED life, and it is greatly to the credit of very many psychical investigators of the present day, that they constantly employ the excellent word "survival" which is an obviously clear term, conveying exactly the shade of meaning we wish to enforce. A famous user of excellent English was the noted Prof. F. W. H. Myers, who entitled his two great volumes embodying the results of fully a quarter of a century's deep research into psychic problems "Human Personality; Its Survival of Bodily Death." Though some ultra-skeptical minds may even yet deny that scientific proof of the continuity of individual human existence has ever been given, it certainly looks as though prejudice, or strange mental myopia, must have a good deal to do with the very belated attitude of those who go on repeating, in the old parrot-like manner, the antique negation, "We know positively nothing of the life beyond Death, for no one has communicated from beyond the grave."

But now that the evidence is well-nigh overwhelming on behalf of demonstrated spirit-communion, and acceptable to a great many of the most highly scientific minds of the period, quite a new line of attack has been opened up by people of the school to which Mr. Blight evidently belongs, for it is now becoming fashionable to declare that the moral interests of humanity would be jeopardized, instead of benefited, should convincing proof be afforded of the continuity of personal existence beyond physical dissolution. The assertion that morality could suffer from the revelation of any important fact in nature is certainly very shallow, and it clearly betrays extreme superficiality of general thought on the part of those who make it.

Let us look at the case quite imparitally and consider what this present existence actually is to a very large number of our contemporaries, all of whom are told wisely enough, in one sense, to enjoy this life as far as possible and get the utmost good out of it.

The ancient Epicurean philosophy has many modern advocates and, taken as a whole, it is by no means a bad philosophy when rightly comprehended, for it only teaches us to get the utmost enjoyment out of our present existence, no matter what may be in store for us to-morrow. "Let us eat, drink and be merry, though we may die to-morrow," is a fair summing up of the teachings of the Epicurean school which has always been composed of Agnostics or skeptics who were willing to let the morrow take care of itself while they enjoyed the blessings of to-day. Were all people at present so situated that they had plenty of opportunity for immediate eating, drinking and general merry-making, the admonition might receive well-nigh universal acceptance, but it contains not a solitary crumb of comfort for the newly bereaved, or for any among the many whose present lot is hard and almost entirely cheerless.

It is well enough to advise people to make the best of a hard lot and not give way to repining, but no reasonable individual can possibly expect that any good work can be aided by robbing the depressed and disconsolate of what little hope may even now cheer their pathway in consequence of their semi-attachment to some encouraging view of individual immortality. Then it can be no more a sign of selfishness to wish and expect to meet one's friends beyond death and enjoy communion with them in some state of existence other than the present, than to look forward to meeting friends again in this world who are now traveling in distant countries, or who from some cause cannot now communicate with us in ordinary external ways. It must ever be the quality of life that determines its selfish, unselfish, or superselfish character quite regardless of the time and place where such life is manifested. If in this world at the present moment we care not really for our friends, but only for what we can get out of them for our personal enjoyment, we are most surely betraying excessive selfishness when we desire to keep them with us, but if on the other hand we think far more of their welfare than of our own enjoyment though their presence may contribute largely to our comfort and happiness, our relations are philanthropic and super-selfish. All amiable fellowship and all mutually profitable inter-dependence between individuals, families, communities and races must ever conduce to the well being of all concerned, and as happiness is an important element in welfare, we are always rendered happier ourselves by working with others for general good.

Mr. Blight is an associate minister of an organization called "The Fellowship," found by Benjamin Fay Mills, the motto of which is "What is the loving thing to do?" We can thoroughly appreciate the aspiration of the members of such a Fellowship to rise above selfishness, but how in the name of reason one of their public representatives can confound the natural desire for conscious re-union with our loved ones in any conceivable state of existence here or elsewhere, now or hereafter, with selfishness is beyond our capacity to conceive, unless he utterly fails to comprehend the nature of true friendship.

We advise a careful study of a very excellent book by Rev. Theodore Munger, D.D., of New Haven, Conn., entitled "An Appeal to Life' to all who entertain the ridiculous notion that there is any necessary element of selfishness in a natural desire for reunion with friends in another world or a future life. In that volume, which is made up of singularly fine sermons, preached before a number of Yale students, as well as large congregations of the general public, the author meets frankly and disposes decisively of the very statements we are now endeavoring to refute.

We have all heard a great deal about heaven and hell, and surely no one entertaining reasonable views on any subject will deny that many theories concerning heaven and hell have proved detrimental to the morals of communities in which they have been entertained, but surely it is not necessary to class all views together instead of fairly discriminating between those of widely different varieties.

Omar Khayyam, the astronomer-poet of Persia, in his famous Rubaiyat, voiced, many centuries ago, the quintessence of the wisdom of the East in the single line, "I myself am heaven; I myself am hell." This is indeed the teaching of the greatest seers and sages of all climes and periods, and it has just as much reference to our state of mind and feeling in this immediate present as in any future condition of existence, and it must also refer equally to the future as to the present.

Let us now intelligently consider some few of the evident moral bearings of a reasonable spiritual philosophy of life, should such be confidently entertained by a majority of citizens in any community, entertained and expressed by multitudes to-day if they do not know Public teachers must be strangely ignorant of the actual sentiments that a great deal of moral laxity can be fairly attributed, not to any reasonable belief in a future life, but rather to a total abstinence from all anticipation of a hereafter of any sort. Those who oppress the laborer and accumulate colossal fortunes by rascality, as a rule either entertain no belief in a future state of life, or else they base their hopes of salvation upon belief in some religious dogma apart from the development of noble character. It makes probably very little difference which of the two positions is assumed, for there is nothing in either of the aforesaid views of a morally elevating character. We fully admit that Charles Bradlaugh, and many another avowed materialist, has lived a noble life and served his fellow beings faithfully without any confidence in a future existence, but nothing can be more absurd than to say that reasonable views of a future life could in any manner conduce to a lowering of the tone of general morality wherever they might be entertained.

Mr. Blight's position is utterly indefensible either from an intellectual or an experimental standpoint, for it is self-evidently illogical when regarded rationally, and entirely out of keeping with general human experience when practically tested. We should not forget that certain varieties of old theology have long been struggling against materialism to maintain their ancient footing, and between two errors public morals may have greatly suffered. We may also allow that certain Spiritualistic views have been altogether too sentimental, for there has often been far too much gushing sentiment expressed both in prose and verse by avowed exponents of Spiritual philosophy concerning the "sweet by-and-bye" and "the bright summer-land," but in common justice to the general trend of Spiritualistic teaching during the past sixty years, we must account this too gushing utterance as unwarranted by any declaration of principles put forward at any time by any representative body of Spiritualists. A very fair summing up of the views entertained by Spiritualists in general is found in the Declaration of Principles issued by the National Association of Spiritualists of American, which contains no statement which can be fairly said to have the slightest demoralizing tendency by even the most rigid sticklers for the most heroic type of morality known to the ancient or to the modern world.

Let us now consider exactly what we mean by morality, which is a term covering an enormous territory. Morality certainly signifies, in a broad sense, all that conduces to public and private welfare.

The world is now beginning to realize that a satisfactory philosophy of life must unite all the elements necessary to appeal to humanity on all planes of development, therefore it is always unsatisfactory, in the long run, to submit for general acceptance any restricted form of scientific or religious thought which though in itself largely admirable when applied within a limited area is found decidedly lacking in many needed elements when an endeavor is made to circulate it among the general masses.

James Freeman Clarke in his still famous treatise, "Ten Great Religions," has drawn a clear line of demarcation between ethnic systems, which rarely flourish in other climes than those to which they are indigenous, and eclectic systems which seem equally well adapted to many different races of mankind. This wise discrimination is highly necessary when we are dealing with any question which appeals to sentiment as well as to intellect, and we cannot deny that even more people at the present time are swayed by their feelings than by cold logic, though it is quite true that an increasing number of intellectualists seem disposed to dispense with nearly all sentiment and treat ever subject from a purely rationalistic view-point.

Temperament has certainly much to with need, or lack of need, for certain moral incentives to present righteousness, therefore it often follows that what appears to one set of people as an all-sufficient motive for noble conduct, completely fails to meet the demands of another considerable section of the same community, and it is certainly not going too far to say that while ethical agnosticism may be all-sufficient for some highly trained intellects in the world of today, such a barren philosophy will never suffice to supply the needs of the rank and file of any average population.

With the breaking down of old incentives to virtue, there has been in many places a temporary exhibition of once suppressed vicious tendencies, and we are not justified if we fail to do the utmost we personally can to supply truthful motives for righteous conduct in all directions even though the charge be brought against us in some quarters that we are pandering to emotions lower than the highest. A more correct statement would be that we are taking people exactly where we find them and ministering, as far as we are able, to their immediate necessities, with the object steadily in view of leading them continually higher, instead of foolishly refusing to acknowledge their present estate on the plea that ethical teaching should be invariably addressed to the highest conceivable plane of human consciousness.

A great deal of demonstration regarding the nature of our state of existence immediately after death is intended only to reveal a relative degree of truth, suited to the requirements of tyros in spiritual attainment. We cannot reasonably expect those who may be called little children in understanding, to comprehend the advanced teachings adapted to maturer minds any more than we can expect children in primary schools to profit by university text-books, and it is surely not unduly pandering to adapt our instruction as far as we possibly can to the varied necessities of different groups of scholars.

A large view of Truth can never contradict a smaller view seeing that the lesser is invariably contained in the greater, but it is a matter of universal experience that multitudes of immature minds can get much benefit from the smaller statement before they have grown to grasp the significance of the larger. Applying this to the question of personal immortality, we may readily see that certain states which follow immediately upon our present mortal condition are by no means everlasting, but though transient, they are perfectly real and full of meaning for those who are prepared for them, but not yet for what lies beyond them.

A very large number of people pass out of earthly existence every day with no comprehension of any higher life than a continuation of their present interior existence, but as most people are conscious of some ideals and indulge in some day-dreams of a higher state than their present external, they can easily be brought to comprehend that as soon as they have dropped their material bodies they will realize what belongs to their aspirations, not what pertains only to their physical surroundings. Though it must be a source of much hope and glad expectancy to the majority who are struggling with more or less adverse earthly conditions while desiring to rise above them, to feel that that effort will be rewarded in the next state of existence. A needed warning can also be given to those whose inner life falls far below the standard of their accepted outward appearance. The moral aspect of this teaching is, therefore, two-fold, bringing both encouragement and serious admonition in such proportion as the one or the other is needed. Nothing can possibly aid moral development which is essentially false nor can any doctrine hinder ethical progress which is fundamentally true. The only question, therefore, left for us to solve is the trueness or the falseness of any theory which may be promulgated. As we have no right to tell falsehoods with the hope of advancing righteousness, we have equally no right to withhold any aspect of truth on the mean pretext that it may possibly in some cases lower a moral standard, for in reality a moral standard is never lowered when it has once been established. We meet many people who have not yet grasped a very high moral standard, but we never meet those who have really fallen from a genuine ethical height which they have once attained by their own mental and moral efforts; and as it must be the province of all sound ethical teaching to use every righteous means to raise the general standard of thought, feeling and conduct in every community, we shall never hesitate to affirm that while a higher motive cannot yet be appealed to, the lower, but perfectly natural, motive of self-interest must be regarded and ministered to in all lawful ways.

But far be it from us to infer that the root of the desire for conscious reunion with one's beloved friends in the spirit-world is mere interest, for in myriads of instances the prime motive is super-selfish, being in reality a desire to add to the joy of others rather than to merely increase one's own happiness, though complete unconcern for self is only felt at a spiritual altitude so far above the present earthly average that we may compare it with a lofty mountain peak in contrast with table-lands many thousand feet below such lofty eminences. However much we may admire the saintly life of the greatest philanthropists, and however much we may seek to emulate them, we cannot found a practical system of philosophy upon the isolated doctrine of unselfishness, especially if we seek to eliminate a large amount of such natural affection as must be encouraged in this world for the promotion of general human welfare. Not intellectual ice and vague moral platitudes, but a warm, spiritual philosophy of being and existence will prove the real panacea for the unmorality which at present abounds to an immense extent in all civilized society. Let us all then resolve to gather all the evidence we can which is in any degree calculated to throw true light upon the pressing problem of our life here and hereafter, resolved at all times to make the highest appeal possible to the moral instincts of all with whom we come in contact, ever beholding in prospect a far higher and fuller interpretation of the law of life than we can at present fully demonstrate.

LETTER TO A FRIEND.

An Explanation of Certain Conditions in Spirit Life.

My Dear Friend:—Being desirous to enlighten you as to the true knowledge of what the spirit-life is, having received my information from those who have passed from the earth plane to the spirit-world, and know what they say to be true, that it is a continuance of this world, and that it has its beautiful rivers, birds, flowers, animals, etc. There are many spheres in the spirit-world, and the life there is one of progression. There are schools, libraries, a large Capital where the great minds meet, to discuss what is the best to do for this planet. There is nothing done we are told, at Washington, but what has been first talked over by those in the spirit-world who are interested in the welfare of this land. There are theatres, places of amusements and everything to make life cheerful and happy, and not one with whom I have conversed say they would like to come back to this life.

There are printing offices in the spirit-world, one conducted by Benjamin Franklin and Bishop Haven (a Methodist Minister when in this life) and one by Horace Greeley, and reported for by Spirit Samuel Bowles, who was connected with the Springfield Republican when on the earth-plane. They publish what we call tracts, and they are distributed to those in the first and second spheres (so-called dark spheres) inhabited by those who passed from this life ignorant of what the spirit life was, having been taught the false teachings which are dispensed from the pulpits of the churches of to-day; therefore many of them do not fully realize they are out of the body, many denominations still holding their meetings as when in the earth life. There is no located place called heaven with a personal God sitting on a throne, nor will there be a judgment day, as taught in Revelations in the book called the Bible as we have been taught to believe, for everybody will be saved and be their own judge, and go to the place they prepare for themselves, and will there enjoy a heavenly state of mind or suffer mentally for the deeds of a misspent life.

I have had offered to me as I have passed along the street a leaflet, or what is termed a tract, being distributed by those who ought to be in better and more profitable business, the wording of which was, "Prepare to meet thy God," and knowing there will be no such a being for one to encounter, and that the only god there is is Nature's God, a spirit who is everywhere, therefore cannot be sitting on a throne, and knowing that the wording of the same was false teachings, from ignorant minds, as regards the spirit-life, it made me feel somewhat vexed to think that your mind was being filled with such reading which was sending you into the Spirit-world blindfolded. If the pulpits of the land would give you, my dear reader, the truth as to spirit-life, the fear of death would be lifted from your mind, and you would then look upon it as a pleasure to pass from this life to the spirit-life. It gives me pleasure to say that when you do reach the spirit world to which you are fast hastening, you will open your eyes and find yourself in the loving embrace of those who have gone on before you. Millions have gone into eternity believing and expecting to see Him who they were taught to believe was sitting at the right hand of a God that does not exist, and millions more will pass on as ignorant, and look back with sorrow to think they allowed themselves to listen to and believe such an erroneous doctrine. Millions of spirits are held earth-bound, having passed from this life ignorant (as I have said above) of what the spirit world was, being taught they were to play on a harp and sing to a jealous God that nobody who has passed from this life has ever seen. This is like the mythical stories which no doubt you have read of the world being made in six days, Jonah and the whale, Daniel in the lion's den, Joshua and the sun, Garden of Eden and many other of the like.

Fredricka Ehrenborg writes from spirit-world that he has visited three planets, each one had a distinct race (of people) and different one from the other, and had mostly white skin, very much like the inhabitants of the earth planet; their features are more regular and not much contrast in size. On the first planet they were small in stature, about four feet high. On the second sphere about five feet high and of uniform size and shape. On the third they were quite different from ours, but were highly educated. They eat no animal food and subsist entirely on cereals, nuts, fruit and vegetables. The day and night are of equal length and as this last named planet was most interesting to me I will speak first of it. They have a better system of astronomy than we have and understand it more perfectly. This planet has large water courses and a great deal of commerce. They have no religion, such as the Christians call religion, but are of very high morals. They know little of the immortality of the soul. They have no wars, no courts nor prison-houses, and murder is unheard of. They have no kings, no politics, no religion, consequently no wars. They live in perfect harmony; women suffer little inconvenience in bearing children; the families are large with eight or ten children; they are contented and happy. They have better painters in coloring in both landscapes and portraits. Their architechture is grand, their buildings are the most beautiful I ever beheld. The climate is genial the year round, never too hot, and never necessary to have a fire to keep warm; but little variety in temperature. This was probably the planet Mars.

What you have read is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. W. H. BEEKMAN.

of ACTINA, the Greatest

EYE REMEDY

Ever Invented.

No Cutting—No Drugging

If you have any eye disease or your eyesight is weak, you should lose no time in investigating "Actina." We can supply you with all the evidence the most skeptical persons could exact that the "Actina" instrument, invented and patented by Prof. W. O. Wilson, has cured many stubborn forms of eye disease of ten to fifteen years' standing even after prominent specialists had pronounced them as being incurable. Not only has it done this, but is has strengthened the eyesight so that spectacles in many cases have been entirely abandoned.

"Actina" is so simple in construction and so logical in application that it at once appeals to the common-sense mind as well as to the most scientific. One of our noted expert chemists states—"Actina is an up-to-date method of treatment; cannot possibly do harm but can only prove beneficial."

So confident are we that the "Actina" is capable of relieving or curing the different forms of eye disease or strengthening the eyesight so that spectacles may be abandoned, we will gladly send you one on trial with full directions which you can thoroughly test for two weeks. If at the end of that time you are willing to part with it, send it back and no charge will be made. Here is an opportunity of testing a reliable treatment, sold by a reliable concern without any cost to you, if the treatment does not appeal to you.

Permit us to send you a copy of our 64-page book, which illustrates and describes the cause and relief of diseases of the eye, ear, nose, throat and head. It will interest you and is fully worth the postal card that will bring it. Address Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342F, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. and Mrs. Warne arrived home from Portland, Oregon, a few days ago, delighted with their trip. They are both now at Lily Dale, N. Y.

Mrs. W. McCaslin, who is well known at Lake Brady and other camps, will visit Lily Dale this year, and act as agent for The Progressive Thinker.

Prof. Crocker, a healer of great power, passed through this city last week on his way to Lily Dale Camp. He has been located for some time at Spokane, Wash., where he had a large practice. Mrs. Crocker will accompany him to the camp.

Jennie E. B. Dillon writes: "The Connecticut State Spiritualist Association will hold a "State Day" at Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn., Wednesday, July 29, 1908. Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Columbus, Ohio, one of the most forceful and talented workers on the spiritual rostrum, will lecture. Morning session, 10:45; afternoon session, 2:30. Special program of music, etc. Meals can be procured at restaurant on grounds, also lodging if desired."

Mrs. N. H. Fogg writes from Niantic, Ct.: "Once more in camp, and there are lots of people and very hot weather; no rain for several weeks until a few drops this morning gives us a breeze from the ocean way. We are having this month with us, Mrs. Sadie L. Hand of Bridgeport, Ct., a lovely lady, with fine control and a good test medium. When she leaves us she will make preparations to go to Lancaster, Pa., where, after three calls she has finally decided to go as pastor of their Spiritual church."

Mrs. Jennie French writes from Seattle, Wash.: "Seattle is still working for the gospel of Spiritualism. Truly it is a glorious gospel (good tidings). It has brought light and immortality to light. Besides our two regular societies, Mrs. Eleanor Ferguson has organized a Spiritual mission that meets every Wednesday afternoon at her beautiful residence, overlooking the bay, 305 7th avenue. She is doing a wonderful work. Many come to these private mission meetings who would not go to a public hall. Here the glorious truths and beautiful phenomena of Spiritualism is given to each, and this, too, free of charge, and even a collection being taken. Everybody is allowed the privilege of speaking or giving out what of phenomena they receive. Mrs. F.'s whole soul is in the cause, and that, too, without money and without price. Many, too, here for the first time receive a test they know comes from the other side. Also many are developed and learn to receive, each in his own way, from our our loved who have gone before. We expect many things from our mission. Our hopes at first are now realities, and the light and truth are being given to many. We sincerely hope this mission will widen and widen until there will be a mission in every city. We hope many more faithful workers like Mrs. F. will rise up among us, fight the good fight without making Spiritualism seem like a 10cent or even a 25 cent show by having a price set on it, when it should be a glorious gospel not purchased with money. Best wishes for The Progressive Thinker in its efforts to purify the cause of Spiritualism."

O. Miller writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "About four years ago I had a remarkable vision of the Savior. I was working at that time in a railroad camp in Northern California. One night about midnight, lying in a trance I saw myself arise from my bed. I saw my natural body lying flat on the bed. I then had a wonderful vision. First, three crosses appeared, one was about six feet in size. The other two about three feet. All of them appeared surrounded by a mild light, and in the center appeared the Savior."

F. H. Morrill writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "We are holding our meetings only on Sunday evenings this month, and during August, will be closed altogether. We expect to resume the meeting in September, and have engaged Rev. Mr. Thompson for another year, and hope the next year may be prosperous as the present has been."

Julia L. Judd writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "Having been an interested reader of your excellent paper, The Progressive Thinker, almost from its birth, I feel acquainted with most of the efficient workers in our field, and wish to tell you that I had the pleasure last Sunday of listening to our much beloved and faithful worker, Mrs. Laura J. Fixen of Chicago. During the day she spoke in the First Baptist, the 5th avenue Methodist and First Presbyterian churches, in this city. She is indeed an impressive lecturer, seemingly having outgrown all boundary lines in good works. She is liberal and broad in her views, making her welcome alike in the Spiritual, Christian, Social or labor assemblies. We are all builders, all architects of fate working in these walls of lime. I think we ought to emulate the example of our good sister, and lay the stone at every possible opportunity."

Wm. Fetzer writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "I have the pleasure to announce that Brother Oscar A. Edgerley, having concluded a very successful engagement at Camp Lake Brady, Ohio, is with his Pittsburg friends for a few days' rest before starting to Lily Dale, N. Y., where his engagement starts July 23."

BEAR IN MIND that the Editor of The Progressive Thinker Is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are required when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on one side of the paper only, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Mrs. Mattie McCaslin, former official reporter for Lake Brady and Ashley Camps, has been appointed for this season as such at Lily Dale. She writes: "The philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism have been demonstrated so far at this camp in a manner that ought to convince an Ingersoll. Dr. Krebs, who is on the regular program, gave a most enjoyable illustrated lecture on the Psychology of Homer. He represents the Psychical Research Society, therefore did not commit himself to Spiritualism,"

Mary Drake Jennee, Secretary, writes from Monson, Me.: "One of the most successful and delightful June meetings ever held in the history of our Association has just closed at Camp Etna, Maine. Dr. Edgar W. Emerson was with us the entire session, and with his spirit helpers did most excellent work. Beautiful weather, good attendance, a rare spiritual feast. Everybody went home happy, enriched very much in mind and spirit."

Mrs. C. Bergere writes: "The next semi-monthly social of the Fraternal Daughters will be held at the home of Mrs. Surine, 226 Monticello ave., on Wednesday afternoon and evening, July 22. Take car going West to Monticello Ave. Don't fail to come and bring friends."

George Bogie writes from Milford, Mich.: "Lurenne Hovey, trumpet and test medium, has been holding seances in our town about 4 months, and has converted a good many people here with his wonderful spirit manifestations. He is willing to sit under test conditions, and will be open for engagements after August 1. His address is Grand Ledge, Mich."

Freeman W. Smith writes from Verona Park, Me.: "The date of the Camp meeting at Verona Park will be from August to August 30. The speakers engaged for this season are John Darling, Lottie J. Darling, and Albina L. Warren. The cottages here are rapidly filling up. Many improvements have been made, and more are in progress. The hotel is under excellent management. A large stable is being erected, and the future seems to promise much success. I am located here permanently."

Mrs. Alex Caird, secretary, writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club held its monthly business meeting Tuesday, July 14, with its usual good attendance. The Rummage Sale conducted by Mrs. Curtis proved an absolute success. It was voted to give the committee a rising vote of thanks. The club also decided to accept Mrs. Squire's kind invitation, that they hold a social at her home, 220 S. Western ave., Saturday evening, August 8. Friends are all invited. Ice cream will be served. The committee have plans for a fine program. Each member of the Club should consider herself a committee of one, and thus help to make the social a success. Full particulars will be given in next week's Progressive Thinker. The next Tea Party will be held Tuesday afternoon, July 28, at Lincoln Hall, 70 East Adams. Mrs. Campbell will serve tea. Let us all assist this good worker by attending the party. Good mediums as usual, will be in attendance to read the cups."

Committee of arrangements writes from Sutton, N. H.: "The Spiritualists of Sutton, N. H., held their annual meeting at Memorial hall, on July 5, both services being well attended. Our speaker for the day was Emma B. Smith, of Lawrence, Mass., who gave two beautiful and instructive lectures, followed by a seance, many hearts being comforted and blessed by messages from their arisen loved ones. The subject of the morning discourse, 'Spiritualism, Old and New, Simple and True," and the afternoon subject, "Realization, were inspiring and uplifting, and presented in that earnestness and sincerity of spirit that appeals to all who listen to this worthy speaker. May she be spared many years to minister to earth's children, is the wish of the writer."

Scribe writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "We are still on the map Spiritually, and stand for progressive thought. Prof. Lockwood closed his engagement with the Temple the last of June, but we expect to have him with us again this fall. He goes to Lily Dale this week to fill his engagement there. Harmony Circle has also closed for a vacation, and the speaker, Chas. Hulbert, will go to the Dale for rest and recreation. Mrs. Dr. M. E. Lane has returned from her trip East, and will move Aug. 1 to 124 Whitney place, where she will be pleased to see her many friends. She returned from Lily Dale Monday night, and brings a good report, everybody having a good time, and a large attendance."

"Psychic Light, or Continuity of Law and Life." By Maud Lord Drake. Price $1.50.

"Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas." By Hudson Tuttle. Price $1.25.

SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS, and How to Attain Them. By B. F. Austin. New Thought Lessons. Beautifully printed and bound in cloth. Helpful in every way. Price 50 cents.

"This Mystical Life of Ours." Selections from the writings of Ralph Waldo Trine, for every week in the year; chosen by himself. Price $1.10.

"Asphodel Blooms and Other Offerings." A choice collection of poems on everyday subjects, by Emma R. Tuttle. Price $1.00

CAST ADRIFT.

When I was young and plump and fair,
I claimed the love of one
Who seemed to think the fragrant air
And scintillating sun
Conspired to weld us—twining there,
When wooing was begun.

And oh, the touch of that soft hand,
Those words he spoke to me—
A new-found haven—heaven planned
To be, yet not to be,
Except while building, rising grand
And high, and proud and free.

Those days were sweet and seemed complete
While they were mine; how strange
That anything so good were fleet,
And soon should pass from range
Of loving mortals and retreat,
As if 'twere only change.

We had a home where oftentime
Love reigned and hast'ning days
And nights of pleasure, then sublime,
Illumined all life's ways,
And drove all dreams of grief and crime
From our great book of plays.

'Twas sweet and beauteous, and 'tis now,
When lived in silence o'er—
Those sacred days—but o'er my brow
There seems to hang some more
Of darkness, tho' I know, somehow,
My heart is never sore.

He saw another form, and face
That smiled, more sweetly, too,
Which came and took my sacred place,
Tho, mine were ever true.
I do not weep, but bow with grace;
I only want my due.

Could he come back and take his own
Within my wounded heart?
No, not until his soul has grown
Beyond the mortal part,
And to his conscience made atone
For every poisoned dart.

I love him as I used to when
He feigned to love me so,
When he beseeched me—yes, he then Seemed filled to overflow
With all the nobleness of men
Who live and love and grow.

But to my love there must respond
Attuned a love as high
And true as mine, not only donned
For gaining pleasure by,
But held on earth and out beyond
And for the soul's own cry.

I love him, though adrift alone,
Cast off to breathe no more
The sacred air of home—my own—
I will rise up before
My human heart becomes a stone
And beats my bosom sore.

I love him, and my lips a prayer
Shall ever utter true;
That all his pictures of a fair
And pleasant journey through
May be fulfilled, and everywhere
His spirit gain its due.

I love him for the honor still
He shows and does for me,
I love him with a kindly will,
Tho' set afloat and free;
And when I'm done with earth I'll kill
With pardon wrongs that be.

THE CHURCH DO MOVE!

But in Some Respects the New Methods Are Hardly to be Commended.

Here is a newspaper clipping which shows how the orthodox church has changed within the past thirty years:

"Atlantic City.—When the Rev. Sydney Goodman rose Sunday evening to deliver a sermon he faced a congregation of men who lolled back in their chairs smoking stogies and pipes and in a receptive mood to hear him. A few minutes before they had enjoyed a moving picture show.

"It is a new idea, this smoking church, and the Rev. Mr. Goodman, who is associate rector at Ascension Episcopal church, is making the idea popular. When the weather gets a bit warmer the congregation can take off coats and, if necessary, collars.

"What especially appealed to many of the men attending the services tonight was the rare ability shown by the ushers. As each person entered he received a long, black stogie, and later in the evening, when his smoke got down to the 'butt,' the watchful usher was ready to supply a fresh stogie. Of course, there were those who preferred to smoke their own cigars, but that is not making any ugly remark against the stogie.

"Then there is another unusual thing about this men's church. No collection is taken. There is an urn that stands in a conspicuous place, and those who are so inclined drop coins into it. The money is devoted to buying a fresh supply of stogies for the following week's service.

"The Rev. Mr. Goodman opens his services with instrumental music. There are views of the Holy Land, and some of the hymns are illustrated with lantern slides. The sermon comes last, and it is not a long or a dry sermon, but a hot weather sermon which pleases."

Other churches in different parts of the country have installed billiards and other games in their parlors to draw people to them, and in some places the deacons provide pretty girls who allow themselves to be kissed and hugged at ten cents an embrace, to the end that the proceeds may be put in the church treasury and the membership increased.

At the late quadrennial meeting of the Methodists at Baltimore the College of Bishops recommended that the church hereafter allow the members to dance, attend theatres and horseraces, play games of chance, etc. They also amended their laws so that the rule which has heretofore fixed probation at six months has been reduced to two weeks.

Surely the "church do move." Within a few years the attendance at church services has fallen away tremendously; but few students are entering theological colleges, and our brethren are worried at the outlook, hence the wide departure from old rules and old methods, and old style preaching. When I was in Denver last winter the Rev. Christian Reisner, D.D., pastor of the Grace Methodist church, frequently drew good audiences, but only when he used strenuous methods of advertising of band-music, trombone solos, and "concerts of sixty voices," and "a sermon not to exceed eight minutes in length." When no vaudeville exercises were advertised the attendance was very slim. Some old fogies severely criticised Dr. Reisner because of these Sunday vaudeville shows, but he went right ahead and drew the crowds.

Spiritualists all rejoice that the old hell-fire and brimstone preaching has been largely abandoned, and that church people are enjoying life better than they did a generation ago. In many church there is a "talk" of eight or ten minutes, and good music for an hour. That is about as it ought to be.

Spiritualists, however, regret that our dear brethren of the cloth have to resort to "stogies" and old strong tobacco pipes, and kissing and hugging girls, in order to get out a crowd to hear the Gospel. But even the smell of the smoke of bad tobacco is less injurious, perhaps, than the odor arising from fire and brimstone and the thought that our departed loved ones who were not baptized are being eternally roasted in the bottomless pit.

Yes the "world do move" and the church is moving with it!

WARNED BY SPECTRES.

One Person's Three Experiences With Ghosts—The Spirit of His Sister—How An Apparition From the Unseen World Aided the Brother in Deciding An Important Legal Question—The Phantom on the Grave—As Set Forth in That Great Daily, the New York Herald.

Three times in my life, each instance separated by an interval of years, have the experiences here told been mine:

I come of a family to different members of which have become visible at times those appearances which for want of a better name are known as "ghosts." It is at least possible that the superstition regarding the second sight of one born with a veil may have some foundation in scientific fact, for my uncle was thus veiled at birth, and all his life from infancy vacant space was peopled to him with forms, which he would describe so accurately in dress, appearance and manner that listeners would instantly recognize departed friends, gone over years before my uncle's birth in many instances.

It was not till he was a large boy that he realized that the forms seen by him were not visible to others. Pages could be written of his experiences, but I am not here to give hearsay evidence, but my own personal experiences, the sights seen with my own bodily vision.

The first instance was so early in my life that I do not recall it, but my mother relates the circumstances.

Our home was in Brooklyn, and we had gone for the summer in Greenfield Hill, Conn. I was so young that I still wore dresses and was in charge of a nursemaid who was in the habit of receiving visits from Annie, a girl of her own class, so that I was well acquainted with Annie.

She died suddenly and was buried in the country churchyard, but I was not told of her death, being considered too young to understand.

As I walked with my nurse past the cemetery one evening in the edge of dusk her superstitious horror can be imagined when I cried, pointing directly to Annie's grave: "Oh, Maggie, there is Annie! She is waving her hand for us to come over to her." I broke away from my nurse and ran to the cemetery fence. She caught me up and ran in a panic to the house, nor would she ever again pass the cemetery after dark.

The only idea in my mind was that of a familiar friend whom I had not seen for some time.

The second instance was at the most unromantic age possible to a boy—about thirteen. I was attending boarding-school in Dedham, Mass.

A school friend, a boy about my age, had left the school some days before for his home in the West, leaving in perfect health.

At about 9 in the evening I sat on on the edge of the bed removing my shoes when the wall of the room seemed to part and open, showing the night outside, with the dim forms of the trees gently waving in the wind. As I sat spell-bound at this strange sight in the rift of the wall against the background of the night stood my friend as I had last seen him, just as in life. He waved his hand to me in token of farewell, stood looking at me a moment, and gently the vision faded.

I said to my room-mate, who had seen nothing: "Charlie is dead. I have just seen him." The next morning a telegram to the school said that he had died the night preceding.

In the third instance I had grown to manhood—a normal, healthy man, over six feet tall and weighing nearly 200 pounds. I am a civil engineer, the hardy outdoor life being far removed from dreams and morbid imagining.

It was on the occasion necessary for me to consult a lawyer, and one evening I met the lawyer in his Boston office to talk over a matter of business. In the course of the conversation he asked me a question which I was undecided about answering. I stopped a moment before replying, for consideration, lowering my eyes, and, when I raised them, there stood behind the attorney a favorite sister dead many years.

Her eyes were fixed on mine, her fingers on her lips. I instantly absorbed the idea conveyed by her suggetive pose and did not give the lawyer the information he asked. As it afterward proved, it was greatly to my interest not to do so.

The lawyer shivered slightly as the visitant stood behind his chair and said there was a draft through the room.

He never knew that the sensation of cold conveyed to his nervous system was a breath from an unseen world.

Science has proved that light, sound and color are all results of vibration of greater or less rapidity. Some of these vibrations affect our senses and we see, hear or feel their effects. But what of the vast space filled with those vibrations which affect none of our senses, yet are unknown to science? Could our senses respond to them what secrets of the unseen might not be revealed, and who can say but the secret of these strange sights which sometimes greet the eye of mortals is hidden in this unknown range of vibrations, hiding a world that is all about us, mingling with and overlapping, surrounding and telescoping our common humdrum daily life and only in rare moments of attunement drawing the veil aside for a glimpse into the unknown.—New York Herald.

The Cause at Columbus.

To the Editor: The West Side church, Columbus, Ohio, this season is continuing services throughout the summer. Our Sunday evening service we hold on our lawn. We have been blessed with large and attentive audiences.

We find we are reaching people that would not come into the church, but who come and stand on the sidewalk and listen, but the following Sunday they can be found in the lawn occupying a chair, and so the good work goes on.

Have patience, brothers and sisters; put our teaching firmly and honestly before the world, and the truth will win.

Our Ohio convention that convened here has done great good; it created an interest that is bearing fruit; new faces are seen at our services, showing that mind activities are at work among strangers to this Cause.

The writer has been the lecturer, with Mrs. Susanna Harris as the message bearer.

We have with us at present a young Hindu student, who has lectured for us twice, great interest being manifested by the audience.

Our new Lyceum is doing nicely.

On Friday evening, July 24, we will give a Grand Lawn Fete, musical, and fire works, for the benefit of our new church fund.

Our Ladies' Auxiliary is growing nicely, with new members constantly being added.

Having been elected president of the Ohio Association, I expect to take hold of the work in earnest in the opening of the fall season, and with the aid of those on the State Board, do a good work. Each individual Spiritualist in this state, arouse and with your assistance, let us place our glorious cause in the elevated and elevating position that it should be, for it is truly the greatest truth that ever came to mortals.

H. E. BOERSTLER,
President of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, also President of the West Side church, Columbus Ohio.

THIRTY-ONE YEARS.

Beloved, "Sleep on!
No hand shall touch thy dust
This side of God and Dawn!"

The beautiful portrayal of Death by Mrs. Mary T. Longley of Washington, D. C., in the issue of June 27, calls to mind a message received from my great-grandfather, William Tenant, giving his experience while passing away at Paterson, N. J. Thirty-one years ago since the message was received by my aunt, Mrs. Clintock, a resident of Rawsonvell, Ohio. The message given through the mediumship of an uneducated blacksmith, was surprising to all concerned.

The Message.

"Death, thou grand, most glorious wonder, thy expression is life! My time had come. I was composed and calm. I realized that a separation was taking place between my body and soul. I felt no fear. My worn body was at rest. I felt the kiss of a loved one as she pressed it upon my brow. I heard her low sob of grief. I could not tell her that I still lived and loved her. I tried to arouse my energies, but could not move to embrace her. Soon a livid gleam, as though a star from its fixed center shot, trailing a fiery shaft athwart the sky, and then faded softly into silent night, so dark and dense. I thought, can this be death? When lo! there went gleaming through the gathering mist a beam of light more radiant than heaven's sunshine on the morning of life. I could still hear the attendants around my bed, and could distinctly recognize each voice as they whispered softly. A gleam of light again enshrouded me, and I beheld a landscape. A voice, sweeter than the song of the evening dews, said, "Courage," though I felt no fear. I then sank into a peace that nothing can give the tired wanderer, but death. Arms clad in the garb of living light lifted my soul to the realms of life eternal. Charming was the scene that met my gaze. I called aloud, "Is this death?" Ah! how glorious! The face of my mother bent over me, her arms entwined me, and I was led away to the soft spicy breezes of welcome, and welcome home! Remember, dear ones, the human spirit once individualized and started on its journey will be taken care of through life, and the vast eternity. If it fail of obtaining its necessary and proper measure of earthly experience it will be provided for through Nature's ample resources and love, reincarnation. Nature is gentle and impartial, and through time and eternity will give her children hppiness in the beyond. She provides for every soul and its measure will be full at last. Give not up your search for truth, O, my beloved!"

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the North-wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all—
Thou hast all seasons for thine own,
O, Death."

My great-grandfather, William Tenant, lay in a trance four days and was rescued from the grave through the persistency of a dear friend.

DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago, Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

OBITUARIES.

In the transition of Pliny S. Olds, July 1st, late of Florida, Spiritualism has lost an ardent advocate. He leaves an aged wife, one daughter Mrs. George H. Sheets of Grand Ledge, Mich., and four sons. He was at one time manager of Haslett Park camp, and assisted in establishing the Spiritualist Temple at San Diego, Cal. He was for years an active member of the association of Spiritualists in the above-named city. Funeral services were conducted at the home of his son, E. W. Olds of Lansing, by Mrs. A. E. Sheets. According to his request his remains were cremated at Detroit, Mich., Mr. Olds had, with his companion, been Spiritualists since an early day."

Passed to higher life, July 6, 1908. Elizabeth Parker, of Grand Rapids, Mich. She had many relatives to greet her on the other shore, and a niece residing in New York City, who will sadly miss her in this life.

ARZELIA C. CLAY.

Transition of Mrs. O. H. Soule at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. Getz, in Ionia, Mich., Tuesday evening, May 12, 1908, aged 72 years. She was a firm believer in the truth of Spiritualism, a true friend, a good medium, a pioneer of Haslett Park camp, and a solicitor of The Progressive Thinker, also a correspondent. She was in poor health for several years and a great sufferer, deserving to be freed from the physical and to enjoy the beauties of the spiritual. By her request Mrs. A. E. Sheets officiated at the home. Her remarks were soul-elevating, giving comfort to the children and interested those not acquainted with the grand truths of Spiritualism. The beautiful flowers that covered the casket told that Death was the Angel of Life.

Belding, Mich.

Mrs. C. B. Foster, late of Winchester, Va., passed to spirit life July 3, 1908. She has been a devoted Spiritualist for many years, as has been her husband, who survives her, although so feeble he was carried in a chair to the funeral. The services were held in the Methodist church of Winchester, and conducted by Mrs. Zaida Brown Kates, of Washington, D. C., assisted by the pastor of said church as a testimonial of the worth of the deceased.

The true gospel of life cheers the husband in his enfeebled days of waiting, as it did the beloved companion at the portal of the life beautiful. Ere long this devoted couple will be reunited in the soul land; which fact has made this occasion so resplendent with promise to all who heard the glad tidings from the lips of an inspired woman. G. Sunapee Lake Camp.

The Thirty-first Annual Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-Meeting, will be held at Blodgett's Landing, commencing August 9, continuing each day to August 30th, inclusive.

The business committee have made all arrangements for a good time generally "spiritually and socially" and desire to call the attention of those looking forward to a vacation, to the benefits derived from an outing at Blodgett's Landing.

The cool breeze sweeping across the odors of pine, hemlock, spruce and lake, bestirring the health-giving balsam; the glorious mountains in the distance; the sunset's glint of splendor as "Old Sol" departs from view; the Mineral spring, its waters ever cool and refreshing, all go to make an ideal spot to rest and recuperate the tired body.

The speakers engaged for the season's Camp-Meeting are of the best, we therefore welcome you one and all, giving the assurance of gain in all things that go to make life better and more beautiful. Excursion or Camp-Meeting tickets can be obtained from all points on the Boston-Maine R. R. at reduced rates.

A Flash-light Exposed His Fake Methods

Interesting and Suggestive Experiences With A. A. Finney, at Walla Walla, Wash.

Since writing you this "trumpeter's" methods have been exposed. We threw a flash-light on him and detected him helping the "spirits" out in their manifestations.

There are a good many Spiritualists in this city, although little more than a baker's dozen attend Sunday meetings. Mr. Finney's coming drew out many who were not even suspected of entertaining even a curiosity relative to psychic phenomena. For the first few days Finney had everything his own way, realizing some money from his exhibitions, and convincing many that he was the genuine article they were in search of.

Personally I did not examine into the merits of Finney's seances until Monday of this week, having no curiosity or desire to investigate what I felt was of mundane origin, and not from the spirit world. However, many volunteered to inform me of what they had heard and felt at his dark seances. I found that he named all conditions and selected the person to hold his hands. In questioning the latter I found that he invariably released, or attempted to release, his right hand as soon as the lights were extinguished and the singing began. When he succeeded in this coup, he would press both hands of the sitter down on his or her knees, holding them down firmly with one of his—the left one. This gave him his right hand free.

Then the spirits joined in singing through the trumpet and whispering, or subdued voices followed through the same channel. The voice or whisper would call out the name of some sitter present, and pretend to give a short message. Whenever the identity of the spirit was asked for, the spirit suddenly developed a weakness and inability to proceed.

Of course the voice could answer "father," "mother," or some deceased relative easily ascertained by Finney; but whenever names and tests of identity were requested, weakness of spirit ensued. "I am too weak; some other time," etc, etc.

If the "medium" succeeded in freeing one hand, both trumpet and guitar manifestations followed. If he did not get his hand released, only trumpet practice ensued, and limited demonstrations at that.

When no hands were released it was observable that the trumpet did not travel far from the center, or from the locality of Finney; but if the unsophisticated or bashful sitter allowed Finney to free one hand, wonders followed; the trumpet passed around, tapping people lightly on the head and shoulders; the guitar or violin floated through the air, thrumming in time to singing.

The conditions invariably imposed were compact circle, drawn as closely around medium as possible, without contact with him; total darkness, black as inside a pocket; table to one side of center of circle on which reposed trumpet and musical instruments in easy reach of medium's hand or mouth; his vis-a-vis always of his own selection; everyone in circle to keep hold of neighbor's hands so as "to preserve the conditions;" "best thoughts of all present."

Monday night, at my consent and that of my wife, he exhibited at my residence. The room and table were quite large, and the company numbered 26. This made a large circle, too large to reach from center conveniently.

The table was 4 feet by 8 feet—a sewing table. The medium did not like so large a table. He arranged chairs in close circle and dictated places of various persons present.

Results were limited by my removing trumpet and guitar to near a corner..

On extinction of the light the medium requested all to join in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." I found out at the close of the seance, after the medium had gone home, that he released his right hand immediately on commencement of singing, in his usual way, pressing both hands of his vis-a-vis firmly under his left. He held her (his vis-a-vis being a young woman) hands thus for a few seconds, or long enough to sweep the table with his right, and ascertain the state of affairs. Then he grasped her hands again in both of his, and shortly afterwards announced "some one has been monkeying with things."

The only demonstrations following were violent raising of his side of the table by the medium's right knee, the side piece, or riser of the table coming down to just the right distance to facilitate such operation.

He permitted the table to drop violently, thus jarring guitar and trumpet, and betraying their location.

Of course no usual demonstrations followed, and after three-fourths of an hour the circle broke up. He said, conditions were unfavorable—magnetism too weak.

We then made arrangements for a circle in same place for evening following. We removed large table and put in smaller one. All conditions same, including position of instruments. A Mr. Smith, a Spiritualist, held Finney's hand with a grip that could not be broken. Immediately after light was extinguished and singing began a voice joined in through trumpet, exhibiting none of the weakness peculiar to all communications. After the seance, Mr. Smith informed me that Finney had endeavored to release his right hand at the start. Failing in this he, F., leaned over the table, a performance Smith detected by the accompanying movement of arms.

Only trumpet manifestations were vouchsafed us by the "angel world" that evening, owing to the fettered right hand, and these were meager, the trumpet not having the "wandering lust" to any appreciable extent, but remaining close to center.

When trumpet whispering was in progress I flashed an electric light on the medium. I saw the trumpet in his mouth for an instand ere he could drop it. His face was turned so I got his profile, but at the flash of light he released trumpet instantly and as quickly turned his face away from the light. Everyone else turned to look at the light—a natural act. His turning away was unnatural.

He had his right elbow and upper arm raised as high as he could, and still kept hold of Mr. Smith's hand. Mr. Smith afterward declared Finney raised his hand as high as possible. The body of the trumpet rested across Finney's right elbow when I flashed the light.

At least seven testified to seeing the end of horn either in the medium's mouth or just falling from his mouth. These seven sat on the same side of circle as myself. The great bulk of sitters was so seated as to not be able to detect the cheat.

Spirits never require pocket darkness. A subdued light enables all manifestations that conditions afford or make possible.

In advising readers against similar exhibitions, I say:

1. Make the circle large, so that by no possibility can the alleged medium reach all parts with a long horn or guitar, and free arm.

2. Insist on having the instruments placed far enough from operator to preclude his reaching them with hand or mouth.

3. Instruct the person who is chosen to hold hands to not let go under any circumstances. Do this just before beginning of each seance and see that no confederate is chosen for this important office.

4. See that any strangers or persons who might by any possibility be in collusion with operator, are seated between trusty peopre who are to be cautioned to not let go their hand for an instant.

5. Bar all entrances against confederates. Do not hold seance in a house to which suspicion could possibly attach.

6. Demand common sense, intelligent answers when alleged communications are being given. If a spirit can say, "I am your father," he has strength enough to give his full name and some identification statement.

Examine horn or trumpet and you will generally find the small end pretty well chewed up. The larger end will also show tooth marks.

To prove his genuineness Finney had Mr. Skinner sit alone with him immediately following one seance, and while Mr. S. was holding both Finney's hands the horn gravitated around the former's head and shoulders and a whisper or two came therefrom. Of course the horn was grasped in the operator's teeth. He always places this instrument in a position where he can easily reach it with his mouth by bending slightly forward and sideways.

A young lady here who had witnessed Finney's performances at the Weltmer Institute, and who had been captivated with them, so interested a number of our local Spiritualists that they communicated with Finney in the East. The result was, he agreed to "come on" if his fare was paid from the East to Walla Walla. The money was sent and he came, with results as described.

He will not submit to being enveloped in a mosquito netting, nor in having horn and guitar removed beyond his reach; says a screen prevents spirits extracting physical magnetism from him and that the instruments must be in close proximity to him in order to get his magnetism.

The truth of the statement herein will be verified under oath if necessary by Wm. Van Waters, Otis Skinner, Geo. Van Waters, Mrs. Otis Skinner, Mrs. James Ramsay, and a number of others present at the seance in question and at other seances that have been held here.

Mr. Finney made virtually no defense or explanation. He simply alleged he did not know what had happened; assumed ignorance of the flash-light episode, and decamped quietly with his three true, believing disciples. In fact, seemed to take the exposure as a common occurrence.

Please note, at first seance "conditions were not right," "too weak," "inharmonious circle," etc., were his explanations for failure. But the spirits were strong enough to raise an extra heavy eight-foot by four table several inches from the floor on the medium's side, and to do this several times. Strange they could not manipulate such light articles as a trumpet and guitar.

Doctors and Relatives Declare Mrs. McNulty Was Dead—Scout Suspended Animation Theory—She Saw Her Friends on the Spirit Side of Life, and Reluctantly Came Back to Earth, as Set Forth in the Chicago Inter Ocean.

New Britain, Conn.—"She was as dead as she ever will be."

Thus Dr. Thomas Mulligan spoke this evening, shutting the door on any discussion as to the possibility of Mrs. William McNulty, 127 Kelsey street; having been only unconscious, and not a wanderer on the other side of the Styx, for an hour on Saturday last.

Just a shade less positive that Dr. Mulligan are Mrs. McNulty's husband and her daughter, Maggie.

"What Dr. Mulligan says about mother is true, every word of it," declared Maggie McNulty to-day. "She did not breathe and her heart did not move for an hour."

"Do you actually believe," she was asked, "that your mother was dead an hour on Saturday last?"

"How am I to know? I believed she was dead, yes, until the doctor restored her to consciousness. It was a trying hour, that's all I can say. You go and see Dr. Mulligan and he can tell you all that happened. It was too exciting a time for me to remember things clearly."

An attempt was made to explain suspended animation to Miss McNulty and to draw from her a comparison of her mother's condition with that of a person in whom life was apparently momentarily at an end. It was of no use; Miss McNulty had never heard of suspended animation and seemed not at all interested in hearing anything about it.

"I was in the room with my wife all the time with Dr. Mulligan," said Mr. McNulty. "I helped him hold her head while he put on the electric battery. I believed she was dead. I don't know what to make of it. My wife did not move or breathe all that time. You ask Dr. Mulligan what she said when she opened her eyes."

Story of "Quick and the Dead."

This is the story of the quick and the dead, as Dr. Mulligan told it:

"It was only a few minutes before 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon when I was called to go at once to the McNulty home. My man saw me hurrying toward the stable and hitched up my horse, so that all I had to do was to step into the rig and drive off. I covered the distance to Kelsey street in less than three minutes, so you can understand how fast I drove. I was there only a minute or two after 2 o'clock.

"I found Mrs. McNulty sitting in her chair in her room. Death was plainly there. There was no pulse, no heart action. I lifted up the eyelids and found the eyes set and dead. The lungs were still.

Death Was Expected.

"It was no surprise to me to find Mrs. McNulty dead. I had told her family three weeks ago that her condition was such that they could expect her to go at any time. The glance I took at her as I entered her room satisfied me that my prediction had come true. I have seen hundreds die, and have been with them in their last moments. I know death when I see it."

"Then why, in the face of this certainty," interrupted the reporter, "did you apply an electric battery?"

Doctor Took Last Chance.

"I have been attending the McNultys so long and know the family so well that I felt it would be a satisfaction to Maggie and the father to try to do something. So I applied the battery. I felt it was hopeless. The jaws had relaxed and the fetid odor of death came out of the mouth.

"The battery I used is an ordinary dry cell one, such as are in common use by physicians and in households. I put the current first to the extremities and after that worked it over the face and neck and touched the spinal cord with it. Three-quarters of an hour went on this way, the signs of death becoming more and more defined. Then there came a slight gasp.

Sees Signs of Life Returning.

"I took this for the escape of some air which had remained in the lungs or the expulsion of gas from the stomach. About five minute later I observed the first sign of life, a twitching of the muscles in the neck. I was astounded. I said nothing to Miss McNulty or her father. I did not want to raise false hopes.

"After that a gradual animation began. The muscles resumed life and then there was a flicker of the eyelids. We moved Mrs. McNulty to her bed and then a faint and regular breathing commenced. Perhaps five minutes later she opened her eyes and then closed them.

"As soon as I observed the first sign of breathing I spoke to her sharply. "'Now take a deep breath,' I said. 'Breathe quickly, do you hear me?'

"I kept speaking to her this way until her respiration became normal and she opened her eyes.

Woman Weeps When Awakened.

"As the Normal was reached Mrs. McNulty opened her eyes in a tired way and tears ran down her cheeks:

"'Oh,' she said, 'I have been on a long journey, so long'."

"You are positive, doctor, that Mrs. McNulty was the first to speak; this suggestion as to a journey or a long journey did not come from you or some-body else in the room?"

"Mrs. McNulty was the first to speak," answered Dr. Mulligan, testily, and then continued: "Nobody suggested anything to her. I wiped the tears from Mrs. McNulty's eyes and asked her if it had been a pleasant journey.

Saw Parents and Brother-in-Law.

"'Very pleasant,' she whispered, 'very pleasant.'

"'And did you meet anybody you knew?' I asked her.

"'Oh, yes,' she said. 'I met my mother and Tom there.'

"Mrs. McNulty's mother died twelve or fifteen years ago. I did not know who Tom was and I had to ask Mrs. McNulty later. She told me that she meant Tom Hobson, her sister's first husband, who died thirty years ago.

"'Don't any of you be afraid to die,' said Mrs. McNulty next. 'There is nothing to fear. Everybody is happy there, so happy. I would not have come back but for father and Maggie. And mother did not want me to stay. She did not ask me.'

"It was pathetic the way Mrs. McNulty referred to her mother. The fact that she had not been asked to stay seemed to worry her. She could not understand apparently why her mother had not asked her to stay with her.

When Mrs. McNulty spoke about everybody being so happy 'there' I asked her what 'there' was like. She said it was beautiful and then I tried to have her describe it. 'Beautiful,' was her one word for it."

DEAD WOMAN WAKES.

Tells of Hereafter—Declares She Talked With Deceased Relatives During Seeming Lifelessness

New Britain, Ct., July 14.—During a period of suspended animation lasting several hours, Saturday afternoon, while she lay pulseless and without breathing—to all appearances dead—Mrs. Wm. McNulty says she talked with her dead mother and another relative who died thirty years ago.

Mrs. McNulty is convinced that she visited the hereafter, and Dr. Thomas Mulligan, who attended and revived her, says that so far as his medical skill could determine, she was dead.

Saturday afternoon she was in great pain and gradually lapsed into unconsciousness. As she ceased to breathe her family called in Dr. Mulligan. He repeatedly applied a strong electric current and other resuscitating measures. At last she opened her eyes.

"O, I've been such a long way off," was her only remark before she fell into a natural sleep.

Tells of What She Saw.

Mrs. McNulty has a perfectly clear recollection of all that transpired while she "ceased to live." This is what she said about it:

"Everything was black at first. I did not seem to have any consciousness. Then gradually I began to move, or rather glide, through space. Faster and faster I went over interminable distance. I was not conscous of seeing objects pass by, as one does on a train, but moving on and on. It was the most pleasant motion I have ever experienced.

"There was no sensation of time either, so I can't say how long this seemed to continue.

"After a while a region of brightness and light appeared in front of me. It was dim at first, then brighter and brighter as I seemed to come nearer to it. It grew dazzling, a hundred times more so than the sunlight, but it was not like the light of the sun. It was not like any light I had ever seen, just a flaming brilliance that pervaded everything, but did not come from any one place in particular.

In Midst of Happy Crowd.

"When the light was at its brightest I found myself in the midst of an endless crowd of people. They were all moving, too, and oh, how happy they seemed! I would have been perfectly happy to stay there forever myself. Suddnly I saw my mother, and beside her a distant relative who died thirty years ago. I was talking to them when the light seemed to go out again and everything was in darkness, and I lost consciousness. When I opened my eyes I saw Dr. Mulligan.

"The crowds of people didn't seem to be in any place in particular—that is, they were not confined by any walls or buildings, and there was nothing that might be called land. They just seemed to move to and fro at will."

Mrs. McNulty is a church member, but in no sense a religious fanatic, and has never been given to illusions or visions.

Dr. Mulligan states that her mind is perfectly clear and that she will in time recover her health.

"When I was called in," he said to-day, "Mrs. McNulty was apparently lifeless. It was not a trance she was in, but a condition of absolutely suspended animation. To my mind she was as dead as she ever will be."
—Chicago Examiner.

SHE DID NOT VISIT THE ORTHODOX HEAVEN.

In regard to Mrs. McNulty's experience, as related on the 7th page, a Spiritualist writes from Worcester, Mass., as follows:

Aside from its bearing on the mistakes of M. D.s, it has a spiritual side; even the M. D. had a "premonition" which proved a better guide than his professional training.

The two thousand years' visions of the bible are accepted as eternal truth, but this living witness can not be believed. Why?

She did not climb a ladder nor golden stairs. She did not enter heaven by the prescribed methods.

She mentions no golden streets or great white throne.

It is evident she did not enter the orthodox heaven, and she also escaped the other place, for the beautiful objects seen and beautiful experiences and sensations do not harmonize with the orthodox hell.

Here we have a living witness telling of what she saw, all of which we should accept as true, if she were speaking of some remote section of earth.

Where shall we draw the line between the credible and the incredible? Mrs. McNulty will be backed in her statement by thousands now living, and in the words of the old campmeeting song—"Millions more are on the road."

Experimental Evidence.

Slate-Writing Experience at a Seance with Pierre L. O. A. Keeler.

In December, 1904, the writer went from home near Toledo, O., to Washington City to accompany a blind veteran of the civil war, who desired to visit the Pension Department regarding his claim for pension. Wanting advice and being an earnest believer in the ability of the departed to communicate with the people of earth-life, he asked to be taken to consult the slate-writing medium, Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, then living at H. 918 N. W. Washington, D. C.(

There were four in the reception room when we arrived, and during the time of waiting we conversed with two of them very guardedly, lest we give some clue as to our affairs. The only woman among them, said to me' "I do not place implicit confidence in what I obtain from my friends in spirit life, for several reasons: They are no longer personally interested in affairs of earth life excepting as in our interest, and are liable to be mistaken. They do not become authority on all subjects because they are promoted to a higher existence, and sometimes I think they say kind things that are not true, to encourage us and keep us hopeful."

Finally Mr. Keeler came to the door and summoned the next in order of waiting. He was a pleasant looking blonde gentleman, apparently well cared for, and lacking the accepted long-haired, cadaverous appearance attributed to those who deal with ethereal spirits.

The lady who had noted the feeble condition of my companion, kindly gave us her place. Thanking her, we arose, when Mr. Keeler said to us "Only one at a time." I replied, this man is blind and it is necessary that I should accompany him."

"Indeed! well, the reason is that I cannot distinguish your friends apart." To which I replied: "They who are friends to one are friends to both."

"Then it will be all right I think, come"

We followed Mr. Keeler through to the end of the hall to what appeared to be a combination of dining and sitting room about eighteen by twenty-six feet in size. A desk was in the corner opposite the door, a plain extension table covered with a red damask cloth stood at the farther end of the room about six feet from the wall. There were several common chairs, one upholtered arm chair and a lounge at the right as we entered the room. As it was during the coal famine the room, though warmer than the one we had been sitting in, was barely comfortable. Mr. Keeler seeing my companion was evidently chilled, seated him in the large warm chair, and taking a woolen cover from the lounge, wrapped it about him after he was seated, saying, "That is the best we can do—they say that Senator Foraker had only three bushels of coal this morning, so I don't know what the rest of us can expect."

Being very incredulous about mediumship, I carefully noted Mr. Keeler's movements, determined to give him no opportunity to deceive us. The best I expected would be such generalities as would apply to all cases—the "Father, Mother, John, and Mary" type of communications.

Meanwhile, I seated myself in a chair at the farther side of the table, between which and the wall was ranged a pile of fifty or more small slates. They appeared to have just been unpacked, as they were dusty with slate grit and fine bits of the packing. Mr. Keeler asked me if I had brought slates with me, to which I laughingly said: "No, I thought I would prefer some of your prepared ones."

"Well," said he, pointing to the pile near me, "there they are, take as many as you please, but first wash and dry them and put a bit of the slate pencil between each pair."

On the table was a small dish containing pieces of broken slate pencil of the wood-covered size, also a pan of water and sponge.

I carefully selected and examined ten slates, and did not let them pass from my possession after I had prepared them as directed. While I was busy with the slates, Mr. Keeler went to the desk at the farther corner from me, and apparently sorted some letters and made preparation for answering them. When I told him the slates were ready he returned with a tablet of note paper in one hand. Opening it he tore out a leaf and folded in half and tore it apart. Taking one of the pieces, he folded it in half, tore it apart and laid the pieces on the table, telling me to write the name of a spirit friend and the questions I wanted answered on one piece of that size.

"How many?" said I.

"As many as you please, but all may not reply. When you are ready, tell me," he said, and returned to his desk and began writing with pen and ink on paper larger than that I was using. I consulted with my companion in whispers, carefully using language that would be no clue if heard by Mr. Keeler. There were two of the list with whom we had wished to communicate, that we decided to omit. We referred to them as "Dave," and "Miller," the latter a veteran who had been wounded in the right wrist, so he was obliged to write with his left hand a very distinct "back-hand."

I wrote the names and questions, folded each as directed and held them in my left hand on the slates in my lap. Just as I was about to call Mr. Keeler he arose from the desk and came toward us, saying "They are ready to write." There is a tall old man with long white beard, bald head and blue eyes. He looks like Mr. Scott, and says his name is William and his Father. Is he "

"Yes;" I replied, for the description was undeniably correct.

"There are two ladies, one a tall, elderly woman, with a sad but kind face, and a smaller dark-haired one with her, who says she is your sister."

I assented.

"There is a heavy set, bald-headed old preacher and a lot more of them. Where are your questions"

I held them up in my left hand.

"Let me touch them," he said.

"You may, but I will not let go of them," said I, for now I thought the trickery is to come. He smiled and answered, "I do not want them," and as I held them toward him he held his hand over them a moment, but did not touch them. He stepped back at least six feet from the table, where I had sat down, and told me to lay the papers on the table before me, and pick up one at a time. "Take the one to Mr. Scott's father first and keep it in your hand."

I said, I did not know which it was, as I had not numbered them, and he pleasantly said, "Well, try, they will tell you." And I picked up one at random. To my surprise upon partly unfolding it I discovered it was the one to Wm. Scott. This was done four times, each time proving to be the name addressed.

"Get your slates," said he. I had carefully guarded them in my lap while I wrote the names and questions with lead pencil, so I took up the pile of slates in my lap and arising laid them on the table before me, because I wanted to keep them in my sight, and I feared some trick beneath the table. As he directed, I grasped one pair and held them, standing in contact with the other slates and table.

"Do you hear anything?" said Mr. Keeler.

I shook my head for No. We waited a few minutes, but heard no sound of writing. Mr. Keeler then said, "It might hasten some if you would allow me to touch them." He stood on the opposite side of the table at quite a distance from it, but came nearer as I reached the pair of slates toward him, saying, "You can touch them, but not take them out of my hands;" and grasped them very firmly, but he only placed his thumb on the upper one and forefinger beneath the lower one Instantly there was the sound of rapid scribbling across the slates, and in less than three minutes Mr. Keeler said "turn them over, that side is full." He removed his fingers until I again held the slates toward him, when he touched them as before with thumb and forefinger. I watched carefully for muscular action of both hands and wrists, but discovered none. Very soon he told me to get another pair, which I did, after I had deposited the first pair on the chair I had arisen from and put my knee on them for safe keeping, as I did all the rest after that pair.

This was repeated until Mr. Keeler said, "They are done, but there was one question directed to no one in particular, was there not?" I assented, and he said, There is an answer to it," and that proved to be true.

Within fifteen minutes from the first sound of writing, I opened the slates. The first was a characteristic message from "Your Father, Wm. Scott," in a perfect fac simile of his quaint handwriting, done with a quill pen—and the peculiar flourish always a part of his signature.

One was from Elizabeth Scott, in fine old style ladies' hand, but the name was not known to either of us. Later we learned that it was that of Wm. Scott's own mother, he having a step-mother from early childhood.

All of the other messages were in the exact chirography of those persons addressed and the following were of special significance. The crippled soldier wrote in the familiar "back-hand" of the past. "There are many of the old boys here now, and they are coming fast. I wish you were all here free from mortal care and strife."

WM. M. HALLER.

This from one whose name we did not write, and whom we would have addressed as "Miller Haller," the familiar one in the neighborhood, although he always wrote it as between the slate.

The message from "Rosella" referred to matters unknown to Mr. Keeler, and unthought of at the time, and was very characteristic.

An amusing "test" was an odd caricature of a rose, such as she had drawn on the margin of a letter to me many years before to show me how she could (not) draw, and the writing is the same hand as her letters. Apparently written in red keel such as he had used in hardware business were the words, "I salute you, David Garver."

Another full name where only the given name had been whispered and not written on the slip of paper

The most strikingly convincing to us was the following, but it is necsary to return to the incident to which it is a sequel. The "heavy-set bald-headed old preacher" Mr. Keeler had said was present, represented to us our neighbor, a minister (Congregational) a good man of refinement and ability. In conversation with us some five years previous to this occasion and three years before his death, the subject of future life was considered when he remarked in closing: "I do not doubt it. I can not; but sometimes I fear we lose our identity when we leave this life—that we become one with the whole, merged into the spirit, a sort of dreamy existence. I do not like the thought, for I have been active and desire to continue my work, take up where I left off, and those things I have failed to accomplish here; and I want to be myself. A. P. J—." As he stood a moment in the door at parting, he said, sadly: "Well, anyway, it will be rest and peace."

When informed of his last illness I visited him from another town to which we had moved. He was calm and anxious to depart, as he knew his disease was incurable. In parting I said, "You will soon know how it is there. Will you tell me if you can?"

"I will if I can," were his last words to me.

How gratified I was to read on the slate, "It is not as I expected it—much more real. I have found my rest and peace. I am not "Rev.," but simply A. P. J—."

The name was given in full, but in consideration of others, I do not give it, but I yet have the slate and much of his writing previous to his passing, to which it can be compared. The writing and signature is a perfect fac simile.

In conclusion, not one message was misleading, and all predictions but one have been fulfilled. Those not of special significance I have omitted.

None of the papers I wrote upon passed out of my hands, and I brought them home with the slates, which also never passed out of my possession during the interview.

The bits of pencil between some of the slates were entirely used, but of the largest piece a bit remained worn smooth at an angle.

The account given above is our own personal experience and is true in every essential particular.

THE WONDERFUL POTENCY OF SUGGESTION

Spank Young Children by Mental Suggestion if You Want to be Up to Date.

What, O what would our great-grandmothers, or even our grandmothers, say to the new theory of spanking your baby by mental suggestion? In all probability the dear old ladies would hold up their hands in horror, say it was bosh, and that to spare the rod would certainly spoil the best of children.

Nevertheless, this new form of governing children recently has been advanced in New York and other large cities by able physicians, who have made hypnotism and auto-suggestion a life study.

That every mother of intelligence should be able of controlling her child through a mental rather than a corporal channel is the theory successfully advanced by Dr. Eugenie R. Eliscu, who for the last fifteen years has been practicing among children of all nationalities and classes until she has proved the theory practical. Dr. Eliscu not only treats children by mental suggestion or hypnotism but has given instructions in the work to mothers who say truthfully that they have never found it necessary to spank or severely correct the little ones.

Crime Not Controlled by Hypnotism.

"Hypnotism," said Dr. Eliscu, "is a greatly misunderstood science. The psychic force that gives one mind control of another has been greatly abused, not in practice but by the comments of the unenlightened on a subject not yet common enough to be comprehended by the masses.

"For instance, the average person believes most thoroughly that under hypnotic influence one may be led into crime and induced to commit acts which, when not hypnotized, would be perfectly foreign to his or her nature. This is absurd, because utterly impossible.

"If a man or woman is good in mind and intent it is absolutely impossible to induce them, while in a psychic state, to commit an act that runs in opposition to their nature. Wickedness in children is but a deformed little mind, which, if taken in the right way and soon enough, can be straightened out. The mind of a child must be studied as that of a grown person. To administer a spanking of severe or even moderate character to a child every time he is disobedient will surely and certainly develop, to an abnormal degree, the animal instinct of retaliation. The child will have that portion of the mind which plans revenge in miniature so thoroughly developed by the time the age of 15 or 16 is reached it will be termed bad, vicious, and incorrigible. Why? Because all of the combative instincts that go to make up the well-balanced person have been over-developed.

Thrashing Makes Child a Coward.

"If this is not the result, the child will conceive a hatred for the parents, and what could possibly be more tragic than that? The old law of 'Honor thy father and thy mother,' will be hard to maintain where cruelty and the rod rule. To find a child cowed and broken spirited, in a condition that some term that of a coward, is fearful, but as sure as fate one or the other condition is bound to result as long as thrashing of children continues.

"I have had it suggested to me many, many times that the stronger mind of the mature person would throw a shadow over the child's younger mind and prevent a natural and healthy development.

"This is not possible, especially when psychic suggestion and auto treatment are employed. It is not well to place a child in a hypnotic sleep every day. This is unnecessary, the training of a child's mind and the governing of its conduct by suggestion does not mean that absolute hypnotism be employed. This would be an absurdity to expect from the busy mother of this country. The study of hypnotism demands much time; this the mothers cannot give, for their other duties would not permit it. Even if a hypnotic sleep were induced every day and the child's mind pruned and trained properly while in this psychic state, the treatment would stimulate rather than depress.

"I know mothers who are constantly a mental stimulus to their children. I know mothers capable of helping their children who have been backward in school simply through this mental channel, and in homes where mental suggestion rather than physical chastisement is the rule there is happiness and harmony.

"A child when a baby has a mind: It is greatly undeveloped, but it is there to work with. Let the mother who is interested in the welfare of her child begin to work with it when a mere infant in arms. But first of all begin to work with herself. Go into a room, quiet and secluded. Sit down, concentrate your mind on the mind of some other person. Work to hold your mind steady, unswerving from your point. At first this will be more than difficult, for almost unconsciously little chimeric flittings of foreign ideas will run through your mind. Concentration of the mind is one of the most difficult things to learn, it will take weeks, perhaps months, perhaps a year, but persevere and no matter what your work in life and about your home you will suddenly discover a wonderful improvement and change.

"Working in this way the rough edges of confusion are rounded off and you may think clearly and directly to the point. The inability to do this causes irritability and nervousness in mothers and women. It is not their nervous system only that is weak, but the mental powers that govern these conditions must be strengthened and taught to work clearly and without hitches.

Don't Feed the Petulant Baby.

When your child is a baby begin to work with suggestion. When it cries, instead of calming it, when the cause for the crying is but petulance, by giving it something to eat, don't upset the little stomach by ill-timed indulgence, but calmly and quietly hold that little one in your arms, and by the exertion of the concentration of your mind, which you have practiced and learned a bit about, 'think' that child into calmness. You can do it, and in doing this you will soothe the little nerves, calm the baby mind, and bring that peace to the child which will help to build up a strong, healthy mind and body.

"It would be next to impossible for one who has never tried the power of auto-suggestion over a child until late in life, and until the child has formed habits and arrived at the age of 15 years or more, to think of working with the mental suggestion. At that age the child must be put into the hands of one who has long made psychology a study. If you begin with a young child, say 1 or 2 years old, you will be successful if you are persistent.

"Every day, when your baby lies down for her afternoon nap, sit by her. Give up an hour's time to the improvement of the little one. If she has been naughty, work with her mind. If she has any little bad habits, work with her. Your work can be done while she is asleep, and gently placing your hands, one on each temple, repeat rhythmically in your mind the precepts you wish to instill in her.

Many Ways to Correct Children.

"There are ways and ways of correcting a child, mentally as well as physically. For instance, never under any circumstances say to a child, 'You are certainly a bad girl.' What effect would be produced in you if a person for whom you had a great affection should speak harshly, irritably, expressing that same opinion of some action of yours? It would not be pleasant and undoubtedly instead of having a soothing effect it would arouse you to worse things and you would work, unconsciously perhaps, on the principle that to have the name you might just as well have the game.

"That's what happens to a child more frequently than it does to a grown person, for the child, unable to reason deeply, easily receives the impression of badness and proceeds to greater mischief. When you desire to correct a child through suggestion take the little one into a room where you will be uninterrupted. Sit down opposite the child and take his hands in yours, and remember that you are to throw out good, not evil thoughts.

Never Argue That Child is Bad.

Never for a moment argue that the little girl is bad because she does this or that and only bad girls behave so. This is a wrong and cross-eyed method of accomplishing good; never tell the child she is bad, but create the impression that good children do so and so.

"If you do this you will create a cheerful, sunny sort of mind; if you work in the other way as you are born the child will take the wrong side of the question and conclude that she is bad and might as well be worse.

"When a child tells a falsehood reason with him. Explain the virtue of truth, not the ugliness of a lie; he cannot but help see that for himself; it gives his mind exercise. Then work through suggestion. When he is asleep work with him, five minutes, or if you are just taking up the work, say half an hour before you wake him; when he wakes, place him opposite you and work with him for fifteen minutes longer. You will see that you get results."—Chicago Tribune.

IN ISAAC B. RICH.

The Funeral Obsequies in the First Unitarian Church, Boston, Mass.

To the Editor:—I have just read Mary T. Longley's article in the current issue of The Progressive Thinker and have expected someone to write about Mr. Rich's funeral.

I had the privilegeof attending Mr. Rich's funeral, which was held in the First Unitarian Church in Copley Square, Boston, Mass.

The large edifice was so crowded many had to stand, and it was almost impossible to find room for the many floral pieces, many of which came from the prominent stars of the theatrical profession. Rev. Edward A. Horton delivered a grand eulogy, (having been a person friend of Mr. Rich sixty years) and Rev. C. W. Wiggin also officiated. The Howard Quartette gave musical selections, among which was that grand inspirational selection, "Some day—Somewhere."

Mr. Rich having been a theatrical manager in Boston so many years, naturally drew many of that profession. And having been one of the proprietors of The Banner of Light, Many Spiritualists, and others of liberal faiths, were in attendance.

There were so many floral pieces that many were sent to the hospitals after the funeral.

Mr. Horton said that so many of Mr. Rich's charitable acts were done in such a quiet way that they were never known outside.

DELPHOS (KANSAS) CAMP.

The thirtieth annual camp meeting of this notable camp begins Aug. 7, closing on the 23rd.

For thirty consecutive years this this camp, without a single omission, traversing onward through adversity, obstacles of almost unsurmountable magnitude frequently besetting its pathway, yet, never faltering, it has climbed to an eminence seldom reached, under like circumstances and conditions.

Our program while not advertised in detail, consists of the highest and most pleasing arrangement for the entertainment of camp visitors. Our constant aim has been to secure the very best talent obtainable. Very few camps throughout the country have had the honor and pleasure of the most notable men and women speakers appearing upon its rostrum, as has this camp.

Our list of speakers and mediums engaged for this camp are: Will J. Erwood, Battle Creek, Mich.; W. D. Noyes and wife, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mrs. Bessie Bellmuh, Winfield, Kans., president of Kansas State Association of Spiritualists; Mrs. Nora E. Hill, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Inez Wagner, Kansas City, Mo., with negotiations in progress for further talent.

To all lovers of a free and hospitable people, where you are made to feel that you are one with the many, Delphos camp is incomparable. It offers to the languid, pent-up, tired soul, hedged in by worry and city strife, a panacea that will refresh and invigorat as no other remedy. Come to Delphos camp. Come where worlds touch worlds, where no "twilight zones" divide the realm of spirits in and out of the earthly forms.

For further information in detail, write to the secretary,

I. N. RICHARDSON.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, Lily Dale, N. Y.

The Southern Cassadaga opens February 7, and closes March 21, 1909. For particulars address Mrs. A. M. Spencer, Corresponding Secretary, Lake Helen, Fla.

MEN AND BOYS AIDED BY A CHURCH CLUB.

Social Christianity Expresses Work Being Done by the Grace Episcopal, Wabash Avenue.—Parish House Is Fitted Up.—Billiard and Reading Room, Gymnasium and Shower Baths Form Part of the Equipment.

To the Editor:—According to the Chicago Post, social Christianity nearly expresses the idea actuating the work carried on among men and boys by Grace Episcopal Church at 1439 Wabash avenue, and to facilitate this work a large suite of rooms, which have been fitted up in the parish house adjoining the church, will be opened on April 20.

"The work is fundamentally of a religious character," said Rev. George McKay, assistant to the rector, Rev. W. O. Waters, who has active charge of the social work. "We never lose sight of the fact that these clubs are a part of the church work, but we do not use them as a lever to force people into the church as by saying: 'You cannot use the shower-bath if you do not go to church or Sunday school.' As a result of the clubs many boys and young men have come voluntarily into the Sunday school and church who were not before interested."

In fitting up the rooms Mr. McKay has borne in mind the dingy quarters most of the members come from, and has sought to satisfy the innate love of the beautiful. There is a large billiard-room in warm Indian yellow, with weathered oak wainscoting and furniture.

Through a large arch with grill work of arts and crafts design, one enters the reading-room, where there is a cheerful red brick fireplace and ample book shelves. The same color scheme prevails here as in the billiard-room.

From the reading-room immense doors open into a spacious gymnasium in yellow and brown. At the rear are shower baths, which will be constantly used, since cleanliness is one of the cardinal principles to be instilled into the youngsters.

On the third floor of the building there is a large kindergarten, where about fifty children assemble daily for the ordinary primary instruction. There also are baths in connection with this department, and the children are to be scrubbed as well as instructed. Every morning at 10 o'clock breakfast is served to the children, many of whom are so poorly nourished that they are unable to do the work without this meal.

Among the men and boys of the congregation a number of clubs have been in existence for 10 years. At the present time the work is being reorganized by Mr. McKay, whose enthusiasm is stimulating it into new activity. New clubs are to be organized and interest awakened in several directions. At present there is a basket-ball team which plays the teams of the various schools and settlements.

Two of the largest boys' clubs are the Clinton Locke Club and William P. Wright Club. Here also are several similar organizations among the girls of the neighborhood. A large proportion of the members of these clubs are Bohemians.

In speaking of the purposes of their work, Mr. McKay said:

"We are in sympathy with every movement to better the conditions of this neighborhood, and it is our purpose to co-operate heartily with all such civic or philanthropic movement. We feel that mere economic betterments is not sufficient, however, since that affects only our material life. We can never find solutions for improving our material condition and starving our spiritual side. I do not believe that any social work can be an entire success which leaves out the religious element of our nature."

Here we have an angelic work—one to be commended. Spiritualists, can you do any better? Have you done as well? Can you point to any humanitarian work that is superior, and this in a Christian church.

DEACON.

NUGGETS.

Temperance.

Sometimes, perhaps, 'twill do to "take
A little wine for your stomach's sake,"
But if too much, you'll take your bed
And wake next morn with an aching head

A Short Memory.

Full many a man will soon forget
He owes a friend a borrow debt;
Unless a paper he has signed,
'Tis "out of sight" and "out of mind."

Precept and Example.

Great sinners often preach and pray,
And tell us what the Scriptures say,
But, though good precepts they may teach,
They do not practice what they preach.

Anger.

Fierce anger fills the breasts of fools
And fouls their mouths until it cools;
But he who has a level head,
Will hold his tongue till wrath is dead.

Industry.

How doth the little toiling ant
Still put to shame the sluggard's "can't;"
It runs about while it can see
And is as busy as a bee;
So should it be with girl and boy
When they the hand or brain employ,
Just hold them steady at the work
And give no time for them to shirk.

Christian Science.

That "All is mind, there is no matter,"
Is not of science e'en a smatter;
Where such a fad full credence gains,
The lack of matter is of brains.

DEAN CLARKE.

When a Catholic Candidate is on the ticket and his opponent is a non-Catholic, let the Catholic candidate have the vote, no matter what he represents.—Catholic Review

Tom Watson's Opinion.

It is Lucidly Expressed and Presents a Vivid Picture of the Catholic Church.—Coming from a Candidate for the Presidency, It Makes Impressive Reading, and Should be Carefully Perused by Every Spiritualist in the Land.

Tom Watson, the Populist presidential candidate a few years ago, wrote the following and printed it in his paper April 23, 1897:

"We think we state the exact truth when we say we are free from bigotry upon the subject of religion.

"We have no prejudice whatever against a citizen because he is a Methodist, Episcopalian or Catholic—we being of the Baptist faith.

"But the difference between one church organization and another may be a matter of extreme political importance, and we cannot understand how any student conversant with political history can be indifferent to the peculiar hierachy of the Catholic church.

"No other church organization claims and exercises the right to say what books its members shall read; no other church openly takes part in political affairs; no other church sends and receives ambassadors; no other church holds a court at which royal ceremonial is observed, embassies from foreign governments received, and far-reaching questions of international policy debated and decided.

"There is not a government of the civilized world at whose capital the Catholic church is not represented by a resident representative. No question of national policy, which may directly or indirectly affect the Catholic church is decided until the Pope has been heard from.

"Throughout the civilized world run the threads of papal diplomacy, and the most prominent feature of recent political progress has been the wonderful success of Catholic statesmanship.

"Spain, Portugal, France, Italy, and Austria are as loyally Catholic now as in the days when the Jesuits and the Inquisition met and turned back the Reformation of Huss, Wycliffe, Calvin and Luther.

"Not only has the Catholic church held its own ground, but it is invading Protestant territory and stamping out Protestant influence.

We state this without passion and without malice; we state it simply as a remarkable fact which challenges attention.

"Protestant Prussia under Bismarck's lead expelled the Jesuits in 1870. The Catholics have patiently struggled to reverse that policy and they have succeeded. The law of expulsion has been repealed, and the Jesuits have re-entered Protestant Prussia.

"In Protestant England, the Catholic church is now the power behind the throne. The most powerful members of the aristocracy are devoted Catholics. In social and political influence the cardinals of Rome wield vast power. When Bayard, the United States ambassador, gave his grand feast to the nobility of Great Britain, not a single Protestant divine was invited. Catholic cardinals were there upon equal footing with the Prince of Wales, but no man of God, tainted with the touch of the Reformation, was present.

"In Protestant America the strides of the Catholic church to political power are not less gigantic.

"Time and again Congress has bent before that invisible and invincible force. Our politicians are so mortally afraid of angering the priest-led vote of the large cities that they dared not instruct the state of New Mexico to teach the English language in the public schools. The English language would carry with it the English Bible; and the Catholic church did not want any Protestant Bibles in New Mexico. By teaching Spanish in New Mexico, the Catholic church preserves its monopoly; and our cowardly statesmen voted as the priests demanded.

"McKinley's cabinet was partly Catholic, and the influence which the Pope exerted during the administration (through Mr. Odell) is shown by the way in which the war department hastened to grant to the Catholics a portion of the national domain at West Point. The Catholics asked for some of the government land to build a church on—and they got it. Other denominations outnumbered the Catholics at West Point, but these other denominations have not been able to get any of the national property.

"Wherever the Catholic church controls it persecutes. No Protestant can preach or sell Bibles in Spain, Italy, Portugal, South America or even in Cuba, except at the risk of his life.

"In the Philippine Islands, not many months ago, the priests tortured some captives in the same manner as millions of Protestants were tortured in the Middle Ages.

"The Literary Digest (N. Y.) copied last year an article from a leading Catholic paper in South America in which the Inquisition was eulogized, and the holy work of the rack, the wheel, and the stake was hysterically praised.

"In Canada, within the last three months, the Catholic priests became so enraged at a liberal Catholic newspaper, which opposed the church policy on the school question, that they compelled the local postal authorities to throw the offending newspaper out of the mails. The government did not dare to punish the priests who had thus violated its laws and destroyed its mail.

"In this growth of power in the Catholic church (of which we have given a few instances) it is to be noticed that the radical Catholic is crowding out the liberal Catholic. The extremists are in control, and these extremists have secured the Pope's endorsement to the doctrine that the Protestant religion is not better than no religion at all. The orthodox Catholic doctrine is that Protestantism must be uprooted and cast out as wholly damnable heresy.

"What we have stated is truth—plain, unvarnished truth. It seems to us that these things are deserving of serious attention.

"Where a church claims and exercises the right to exert political influence, it behooves good citizens to study the history of that church and the tendency of its teachings.

"To judge a tree by its fruits is a fair rule. Now that the Catholic church is likely to take such a controlling part in our national affairs, it is well that we should ask ourselves a few questions.

"When and where has the Roman Catholic church done anything for the masses of the people—for the sacred cause of freedom, of labor, freedom of vote, freedom of speech, freedom of thought, or freedom of conscience?

"When has it ever failed to side with enthroned tyranny as against reform—from the days of Philip II., when it burnt one hundred thousand men who dared to think for themselves, down to the day in 1806 when the Pope's blessing was breathed upon the Spanish flag and his prayers went with the troops who were to burn Cuban houses and fields, torture and slay Cuban patriots, insult and outrage Cuban maids and matrons, and make a smoking hell of a country whose people demanded no more than the Catholics of Ireland demanded of Protestant England, and upon far better grounds.

To the very last the Catholic church stood by the institution of slavery, and was the last to give up her slaves. To the very last the Catholic church opposed freedom of conscience and worship. To the very last it opposed the separation of church and state. To the very last it opposed the general education of the masses, and is to-day the mortal enemy of the public schools. To the very last it opposed self-government by the people, and is to-day the stanch defender of the divine rights of kings.

"A particular reason why the people of this country should be concerned about the startling growth of Catholic power is that the Catholic church boasts that it never changes. The good Catholic claims to-day that the Pope is infallible and that all the popes have been true and worthy vicegerents of Christ.

"He claims that the Protestant is a heretic, and he believes that it would be a mercy to said Protestant to bind him upon a jagged iron wheel, and beat said heresy out of him with a club.

"He believes that his priest can pardon sin, and that the money liberally spent in buying prayers can lift the sinner out of hell.

"He believes that the wine of the sacrament is the actual blood of Christ, and the bread the actual body.

"We are all prone to believe that which is constantly said and never denied. The profound policy of the Catholic church is to cut off its converts from the world and keep them from hearing, reading, or thinking anything which might encourage doubt.

The Catholic church wants its converts to have faith—blind, unreasoning faith in the Catholic statement of every case.

"To reach this result, the Pope dictates the books which shall be read, what newspapers shall be patronized, and what pictures shall be used.

"Pope Leo XIII. has just revised the list of 'forbidden books.' He says that the new rules on the subject are so mildly formulated that it will be easy for good Catholics to obey the new rules.

"What are these new rules which a good Catholic must observe in choosing his reading matter?

1. 'All those writings which were prohibited previous to the year 1600, except where special decrees have since made exceptions, are prohibited now.'

"What books were published previous to the year 1600, and which of those books have been acquitted of blame during the 397 years since 1609?

"2. 'All books written by apostates, heretics, schismatics,' are forbidden.

"Away goes your Milton and your Shakespeare, your Burns and your Byron, your Cowper and your Wordsworth, your Tennyson and your Scott! They were all heretics.

"Macaulay must not be read, nor Hume, nor Gibbon, nor Hallam, nor Froude, nor Carlyle.

"They were all heretics.

"The good Catholic must not drink the pure delight of Goldsmith's 'Deserted Village,' nor must he ever hang enraptured over 'The Grecian Urn' of Keats, nor must his eye ever grow dim as he reads Byron's verses to his sister. He must never walk the rich fields of Charles Reade and Charles Dickens—never laugh with Thackeray nor sigh with Hood; never soar with Shelley, dream with Coleridge, nor view the gems of Walter Savage Landor.

All the golden fruits of genius, choicest apples of literature's Gardens of the Hesperides, is fruit forbidden to a good Catholic—for when God lit the lamp of Genius in the minds of those wonderfully-gifted heretics and touched their soul into celestial music, he forgot that the Pope would measure all the mental universe with the contemptible little tape-line of denominational intolerance.

"To be a good Catholic all the eloquence, wit, wisdom and patriotism of American history is lost land, for the deadly brand of heresy lays upon the whole of it. Excepting Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and a baker's dozen besides, the whole outfit, from Washington, the Episcopalian, to Jefferson, the infidel, and Thomas Paine, the Deist, were rank heretics, deserving to be burned.

"What sort of intelligence would a good Catholic have if he should obey the rules which the Pope Leo says are so mildly framed?

"What sort of knowledge does any man have when he is forbidden to read on both sides of the case?

"What better scheme could be devised for putting power into the hands of the priests?

"How could a good Catholic ever be anything mentally, but a child if he is denied the privilege of reading, thinking, comparing and judging?

"But the rules which Pope Leo XIII. has so mildly framed, do not stop here. They forbid the Good Catholics to read any book on religion except those written by Catholics. They forbid good Catholics to read any edition of the Bible except the Catholic edition. Books which criticise the popes, cardinals, priests, church doctrines and usages, are forbidden. The amiable Leo does not wish that his people shall be told a great many things which they ought to know. He wants them to know nothing beyond what the priests see fit to tell them.

"No good Catholic must read any book or other publication, which treats of religious subjects, without submitting said book or publication to the judgment of the priests.

"Such rules as these sound strangely out of place in this age of progress and of research.

"Conscious error could not possibly show more guilty timidity in screening itself from honest inquiry than the Catholic church displays in these rules which command good Catholics to read no books excepting those which have been inspected, tagged and branded by the Pope.

"Of all the slavery in this world the most degrading is mental and spiritual slavery; and we look upon the huge growth of the Catholic church in political power as an ominous fact, because the natural tendency of its creed is to make the people superstitious, intolerant and priest-ridden.

"But while our politicians continue to be cowards, and our Protestant ministers continue to be dupes, Catholic diplomacy will march onward triumphantly, until the day will come when Protestantism will have to fight for dear life in a land which its blind devotees believe is dedicated forever to free speech, free thought, and free worship."

Spiritualist Camp Meetings.

Harrison D. Barrett Presents Some Suggestive Data, That Will Be Read with Interest.

My attention has been called to the articles by Prof. W. F. Peck and Mr. Will M. Kellogg, that recently appeared in the columns of your paper in reference to the above-named subject. I take no exception to what these worthy brothers have said in review of my opinions, relative to the same topic. I freely admit that there was a time when camp meetings rendered our cause good service through the interest created by them in the minds of thinking people. The lectures then and now, were of a high order of excellence, but every well informed Spiritualist will have to admit that there is a wide difference between the effect of the lectures presented forty years ago and those given to-day. People go to campmeetings to-day, remain a week, ten days, a month, or possibly three months, then go home, and never take a particle of interest in Spiritualism until the next camp meeting. They spend all their money during their vacation at the camp, and have none to support the local societies when they get home. The old figure relative to "Bruin" denning up in winter and sucking his paws until spring comes again, applies literally to this class of Spiritualists. Spiritually speaking they do the very same thing.

Forty years ago, the phenomena presented at the camps were widely different from those given at the present time. They were not so numerous, and I am presumptuous enough to believe that they were of far better quality than are some of those that we have to-day. As a matter of fact, however, phenomenal work did not enter very largely into the early camp meeting economy.

The philosophical and religious appeal of Spiritualism were what the people wanted and what they received. This is true of the camp meeting established at Cape Cod, Mass., in 1866, also of the one at New Era, Oregon, established in 1874. Phenomena came in at all of these places, also at all other camps some years after they were organized. They have had a very prominent place at all of these centers for the past 25 years. Camps organized within the past five years have resorted to phenomena from their very inception.

In 1880 not more than ten camps were in existence in the United States. Their opportunity seemed to come with the downfall of our first National Association in 1873. At that time only two camps were in existence, viz.: Cape Cod, Mass., and New Era, Oregon. From the rise of the camp-meetings in America, every impartial reader of history will be forced to note the downfall of our local and State Associations. In 1871, there were 28 State Associations in existence, and in round numbers, 450 local societies. In 1890, there were two State Associations in existence, and 334 local societies. More than half of these had been organized between 1886 and 1890. These figures are not based upon guess-work. They are hard, cold facts. Camp meetings kill our local societies, and in killing the local societies they deprive our speakers and mediums of employment for almost a full year.

In 1893, camp meetings were at their height, in the point of numbers, in America. Some fifty-five of them were then operating. To-day there are 34. The N. S. A. was organized in 1893. There are now 23 State Associations, and, in round numbers, 760 local societies. My readers will please note this fact that there has been a decrease of 21 camps in the past fifteen years, an increase of 21 State Associations, and over 400 local societies have been organized in the same period. I cannot get away from the conclusion, that with the decline and overthrow of the camps, there assuredly comes in an increase of local and state organizations. The Spiritualists of America are indebted to the N. S. A. through its missionary work for the re-organization of State Associations, and for the re-establishment of several hundred local societies.

I cannot get away from the conclusion that local and state organizations do far more good than camp meetings. It is true that able lectures are yet given at all of our camp centers. It is also true that many reliable mediums spend their vacations there. It is further true that many genuine phenomena are produced at those places by the honest mediums. Another fact is likewise true—no record is made of these phenomena, no scientist analyzes them, no one reduces them to orderly form or has a history of their production published for the instruction of the world. Individual Spiritualists spend all of their money in pursuit of entertainment, and take in the instructive lectures as incidentals only to their summer outing. The presence of so many mediums at these camps does attract a great many curious as well as some information-seeking people.

May I ask at this point how many people build those phenomena into better lives, into nobler characters, into clearer concepts of right and justice when they resume their ordinary duties at their homes? How many of them have carefully differentiated between genuine phenomena and their wicked counterfeits? Some camps have within the last ten years reported from 50 to 300 mediums on their grounds in a single season! I have one camp in mind at which some half dozen mediums in the year 1895, and again in 1904 vied with one another in an endeavor to present "the greatest show on earth" to their patrons! On man held eight shows per day, charging $1.00 per head admission fee. From forty to one hundred persons were present at each performance. Let the average be fifty, the "medium's" income would then be only $400 per day. Neither of my good brothers, Peck and Kellogg, would for one moment contend that there was one thing genuine presented at these performances. I therefore hold that Spiritualism is injured whenever such shows are held forth in its name.

It is true that just such shows would continue to be held if there were no camp meetings. If they were, however, there would soon be just such ordinances as are now in force in Chicago, Illinois, and Portland, Oregon, to deal with the showmen. In other words, the police power of the city and state can better reach malefactors when they are settled in their homes than they can when they are in attendance upon meetings or summer Chautauquas. The genuine phenomena that are produced at our camp meetings would be of equal value were they produced in our home cities and towns, in connection with some true seeking scientist, or in the quiet of the home circle, or in a sacred communion service.

Both Brothers Peck and Kellogg, cannot deny that thousands of dollars have been wasted in the support given to counterfeit mediums at the camp meetings, which sums they would not have received had they remained in their own homes. May it not likewise be true that the "tricksters" and "charlatans" have largely increased in numbers by reason of the demand from certain camp centers for the marvels they are supposed to produce?

A few years ago I attended a camp in one of the Eastern states, arriving there on what was known as "Medium's Day". Some six or eight mediums were occupying the platform in the afternoon. Each one gave from ten to fifteen alleged "spirit messages." That night a gentleman took me one side, drew a small memorandum book from his pocket and showed me every medium's name at the head of a separate page, underneath which were the messages that that special medium had given at the afternoon service. I innocently asked him if he had written them down as the names had fallen from the lips of the mediums. (?) He looked at me with a smile and said, "well you are easy. I was present last night at a certain place where these messages were divided among the mediums who were to appear this afternoon!"

I looked my astonishment. Noting the same he added, hastily, "I know this is post mortem testimony, but if you will meet me to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock in secret I will show you a list of the messages that will be presented to-morrow afternoon." I agreed to it. I met him the next morning at 10 o'clock, carefully noted his list of alleged messages, and in the afternoon heard the mediums who appeared on the platform reel off the names of certain spirits and the messages they had to give, which I had seen and copied in the morning of the same day

Let it be remembered that this occurred at a camp meeting. No one will assume for a minute, who is at all well informed, that that camp meeting stands alone in this essential particular. What is true of one camp, in a greater or less degree, must of necessity apply to other camps, especially to those at which phenomena are unduly emphasized. I have repeatedly stated in your columns, Mr. Editor, that I had one friend who spent $2500 in six weeks, witnessing alleged marvels at one of our great camps. He had to send to his son for money with which to return home. I do not accuse camp managements of inefficiency or of being in collusion with counterfeit mediums. I do feel that many of them are so anxious to make their camps financial successes that they fail to note the signs of fraud and dishonesty that abound on all sides of them. It is not enough to say that people like to be humbugged. It is a confession of weakness to quote the trite old adage "A fool and his money are soon parted." It is criminal to claim that broken-hearted, innocent men and women deserve the experiences for which they pay so dear, gained by them through their contact with bogus mediums. True Spiritualism and honest mediumship deserve wiser and more logical arguments than are those just stated.

I admit the social side of camp life to which both Brothers Peck and Kellogg refer. It is more than agreeable to meet old friends at these centers and to form new friendships, as the case may be.

Could not old friends meet and new friendships be formed at county, state and national conventions? Why not attend such conclaves as these, held at various points that would be of the most importance to our movement as a whole? Of course I shall be met at this point with the remark that people cannot afford to attend the conventions. They can afford to attend camp meetings sometimes for a period of ninety days, and occasionally, some of them spend $2000 for the privilege of dabbling with phenomena, beside their other expenses that are incident upon camp life. Why not divide these expenses proportionately among our various conventions and attend them instead? The people would meet the same friends, would come into contact with many new and agreeable acquaintances, would have opportunities to meet quietly and properly many reliable mediums, and would add much to the sum total of their knowledge by reason of the outings in question.

It will be argued on the other side that people do not like to remain at home during the hot summer months, and that it is nobody's business how they spend their money. Let us grant both premises for the sake of argument. The question immediately arises, "has any man a right to give moral and financial support to that which he knows to be wrong or fraudulent?" Has any man a moral right to uphold those whose business it is to rob his unsuspecting sister and brother? Supposing the man does so innocently; should he and his friends complain when the trick that deceived him is exposed and people are placed on guard against the "trickster"? Let us have our Chautauqua movements at which people can be given instruction in scientific, philosophical, religious and sociological lines of thought. If phenomena MUST Come In, let them be so safe-guarded and so under control that people cannot be deceived by conscienceless pretenders and "tricksters." I would not overthrow all camp meetings at the present moment if I could. I believe that ten or twelve of them would be amply sufficient for the needs of the Spiritualists of America at the present writing. I deem it a helpful and healthful sign to find our camps on the decrease.

There is something of greater value than pleasure in this world of ours. That something is truth. Let us grant that "happiness is man's being, end and aim." He can never attain that happiness through fraud and dishonesty. It must come to him through the mediumship of truth. If it be true, as Carlyle says, "That there is another higher than Happiness, and that is Blessedness", then that Blessedness must needs eventuate from truth and honesty. Pleasure is desirable, but integrity is of greater value. Knowledge is power, while wisdom is supreme attainment. "Reata est potentes, sed veritas est potentiores!" Let all Spiritualists remember this great truth.

Yours for Spiritualism,
HARRISON D. BARRETT.

BELIEVES PROVIDENCE SAVED BOYS FROM DEATH BY FIRE.

Real Estate Man at Camp Meeting Tells of Strange Impulse Which Led Him to the Rescue.—Said Impulse Originated from a Friendly Spirit, and Not From God.

The moving power of the spirit and the protecting influence of Providence are credited with the saving of lives in the family of an attendant at the Desplaines Methodist camp meeting. The beneficiary of these forces is George Harberer, a real estate dealer at 95 Washington street, and a resident of Mayfair.

One evening at the camp meeting was one of old-fashioned shouting Methodism, led by the Rev. Thomas Harrison. A story was told at the meeting of Mr. Haberer's experience. He and Mrs. Haberer had been seated in the main camp auditorium the night before while the Rev. T. S. Henderson was exhorting.

Two of the younger boys of Haberer's large family, it appears, had gone to bed in the room on the upper floor of their cottage. The roof slants from a point within easy reach of the boys, who placed a lighed candle upon the scantling which runs the length of the building. Tired by a day in the open air, the boys fell asleep leaving the candle burning.

Mr. Haberer in some way, as he related it afterward, felt a strong impulse to go his cottage without having any definite cause to worry.

When he reached the cottage he immediately climbed the stairs, still in ignorance of any possible harm. To his astonishment and horror when he reach the bedroom he found the roof ablaze just over the bed where the boys were asleep. The room was filled with smoke,

With a bucket of water he quickly extinguished the flames, but not until they had burned a considerable hole in the shingles. The children were unharmed, but the timeliness of the appearance of Mr. Haberer was all that prevented possible loss of life.

"What else," said Mr. Haberer last evening, "could have prompted my action unless it was the prompting of Providence, for I am not in the habit of leaving church while a sermon is being preached. It must have been God's care for the household and the good of the camp meeting."

Instead of God inspiring the impulse it came from a kindly guardian spirit

Religion of the Aztecs, Its Parallels in Roman Catholicism

"Judge Ladd of California turned the light of legal evidence on Christian Origins, and found no reliable proof that such a person as the ecclesiastical Jesus ever lived."—Progressive Thinker, March 21, 1908.

But an edict was isued that the name of Quetzalcoatl was not to be used by anyone. It was to be entirely obliterated from the memory of the people, and the name of Jesus substituted. Says Kingsborough: "It is very remarkable that Bernal Diaz, who wrote a circumstantial account of the conquest of New Spain (Mexico) and whose memory seems scarcely to have failed him, should, in describing the city of Cholula and its famous temple, have declared that he had forgotten the name of the idol (Quetzalcoatl), to whom it was dedicated; although it appears from what he says a few chapters afterward, that he had not forgotten the number of steps of which the staircase leading to the upper area of the temple consisted."

Several years' residence in South America enables me to corroborate this testimony about the suppression of one name and the substitution of another. In very many families the eldest son is named Jesus; and I have met many a pretty girl who delighted in the euphonious title of "Jesucita" (little female Jesus).

Says Prescott: "The business of conversion went on prosperously. It was not difficult to pass from the feasts and festivals of one religion to the feasts and festivals of the other." But the Inquisition also helped in its usual humane manner, and its convincing arguments won the battle for for Holy Church. It caught an Aztec named Ixtlilxochitl, and no one will blame him for allowing himself to be christened Fernando de Alva. He wrote a book under the directions of the Dominicians, which proved all the Holy Church claimed.

In the meantime the Council of Seventy had determined that the Aztecs were the "ten lost tribes of Israel." This "Jew craze" lasted till about 1830. Kingsborough wrote to prove that theory.

In their early days, the Aztecs were a nomadic tribe, and their wanderings were compared with those of the Jews. Their "migration" and where they rested on their march were found to correspond exactly with those of the Jews. "Mexico" was identical with the Hebrew for "Messiah." Quetzalcoatl was turned into Adam. As there was an Aztec prayer commencing "O, Sun and Earth," another holy man insisted that he was Moses, because in Deuteronomy XXX. he is reported to have said, "I call the heavens and earth to record this day."

Kingsborough maintains the same same opinion and that the Aztec Bible, called "Teoamoxtli" was the Pentateuch, for, says he, "Teo means divine and amoit is a book, and moxtli MUST MEAN Moses; therefore the true meaning is 'divine book of Moses'." Dr. McCulloch bring many labored and equally sane arguments to prove that he was Noah. Another laughs the rest to scorn. He was sure it was Job, "for the Mexicans having a great predilection for sculpturing figures," Quetzalcoatl must have been Job as it is plainly set forth in chapter 19 of his book, "were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever." As one of their paintings represented a bone with grass growing out of it, Isaiah loomed up, because in chapter LXVI. it says, "Your bones shall flourish like an herb."

The symbol of Cholula, one of their principal cities, was "a deer's foot," so it was decided that he was Solomon. Cholula sounds like Churula, which, in turn, sounds very much like Jerusalem. And did not Solomon compose a song: "The voice of my beloved! Behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. My beloved is like a roe or young hart." Poor Quetzalcoatl, saddled with 300 wives and 700 concubines! But Boturini got him out of his trouble, by declaring him to be Bar Chocoba, the Jewish Messiah.

He argued that the Aztecs divided their time into cycles of 52 years, which was nearly the age at which Jesus suffered. Bar Chocoba came exactly 52 years thereafter, and the Aztecs had thus divided their time in his honor. There is question as to the truth of this statement, for the authorized representive of the Dominicans, Friar Tomas Ortizius, in addressing the council of the Indies, urged it as the principal reason for enslaving the Aztecs.

After awhile it dawned upon the consciousness of a holy man, who knew something about history, that the so-called "lost tribes" were conquered by Shalmaneser and carried away captives in 721 B. C. So how could they be so well acquainted with all the sacred mysteries of "our holy faith?" Then hell was let loose.

Garcia comes out boldly and says: "There are not wanting those who affirm that the Mexicans feigned their own early history after having heard the early history of the Jews." So the council decided that as all the knowledge of the Aztecs had evidently been imparted to them by the devil, and as it was not within the providence of God that the evil one should be allowed to utilize true Christians, the hellish work must have been performed by some heretic. After considerable silent prayer and meditation it was decreed that in some unaccountable manner the devil managed to transport some of the early heretical Manicheans over to Mexico and thus a perverted knowledge of the truth was spread. All of the holy men conceded the power of levitation to the devil, for, said one, "did he not levitate Jesus up to the pinnacle of the Temple." But, unfortunately the levitated Manicheans would have equal rights for recognition with Spain's greatest female saint, Teresa a Jesu.

So the council made a bold plunge, and the Aztec God was declared to be none other than our Divine Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

One painting described Quetzalcoatl as rather homely; Isaiah in speaking of some fellow says: "His visage was so marred more than any man." As both Quetzlcoatl and Jesus were homely, they must be the same man. And as Isaiah says that "Butter and honey shall be eat," so the Aztecs ate butter and honey on the birthday of the God. But to clinch it all one of the favorite Aztec dishes was "fish and honey." In my mind's eye I can see that truly holy man as he turned to Luke and triumphantly quoted the passage where Jesus ate fish and honey after the resurrection.

Of course no Spanish can have any theological argument, without bringing in the Virgin, so one enthusiast having found an Aztec writing with the following: "Behold the king himself present whose words thou shouldst receive and store up in thine heart" triumphantly quotes them in favor of the Jesus theory, "for" says he, "the Virgin Mary, is said in Luke 11:51 to have kept the sayings of her Son IN HER HEART."

Notwithstanding the unquestionable sanity of these writers and their thoroughly conclusive arguments, everybody was not suited. So another ingenious holy man discovered that the Aztec language did not have the letters B, D, F, G, R and S, and then concentrating his gigantic intellect on the subject, gravely informed his admiring hearers that "the approximation in sound of Jesus Christ and Quetzalcoatl will appear as a near attempt at the assimilation of these two proper names. For J, they would use Qu, the vowel E necessarily following, and the letter S, by an easy transition, becomes tz, and we then have Quetz for Jes; the latin termination "us" being changed into al, as better adapted to the Mexican language; we then have Jesus transformed by this easy and simple method, into Quetzal. Now, as Christ said to his disciples, 'Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves,' therefore the saints who converted the Mexicans, called themselves SERPENTS, which is the meaning of the word 'coatl'."

Kingsborough does not agree, in toto, with the above. He leans more to the Jew theory, and he cannot help wondering at the accurate details of the daily actions of the Aztec God, so like what little is known about Jesus, and I could almost hear him sigh as he admitted that "deducting the three last Gospels, which are simply a repetition of Matthew, his (Jesus') biography is reduced to a few pages. But possibly the four evangelists were the only primitive Christians acquainted with the art of writing."

This should have settled the Jesus Question for time and eternity, and we might make pilgrimages to Mexico instead of Jerusalem or Rome. But those unfortunate Dominicians stepped in and upset the whole program. They stated that their missionaries insisted that Quetzalcoatl was an Irishman, because he was called Cuculan in Yucatan, "wore a hood and vest covered with red crosses and ate raw meat." Poor Quetzalcoatl! What a fall! From Jesus down to an Irishman eating raw meat.

So the war broke out anew. Dr. Siguenza, who wrote his history about 1675, insists that the Aztec God is no other than the doubting St. Thomas. He pitches into the Irish theory and many learned and holy men sustained him. He says: "The Mexican God was named Topiltzin Quetzalcoatl, and that of the saint was Thomas Didymus." The "To" in the Mexican name was an abbreviation of Thomas (spelled in Spanish, Tomas); piltzin, means son or disciple. Quetzalcoatl corresponds with Didymus, and means "a twin." Therefore as Quetzalcoatl was a twin, and St. Thomas also, they must be the same person. The only real objection to this argument is, that the only way I can see for a modest, retiring man to avoid canonization, would be to bring evidence that he was a triplet.

But God loves the Irish even if he gives all the money to the Jews, and a very learned man, no doubt inspired, came to the rescue of the Emerald Isle. He claims that when in Palenque he saw an idol with three heads (evidently a symbol of their Trinity). Now, says this very learned man, "this was St. Patrick's emblem, for he had converted Ireland by exhibiting three-leafed clover." This shrewd exhibit of the first recorded patent, seems to have carried the day, and St. Patrick is entitled to be considered the Patron Saint of Mexico.

Just one more quotation out of a remaining score. Clavigero wrote a history of Mexico in three volumes. He accepts their account of the Deluge and the total destruction of life on this continent. Then he tries to account for the present animal life, and enters into an exhaustive argument to prove that though a sloth can move only about seventy feet a day, yet, by the assistance of divine providence he could arrive in time. He is not so sure about the other animals either swimming over or coming via Alaska. So he intimates that possibly the angels assisted in the transportations. But he is careful not to assign any particular angel to any specific part, but leaves to the vivid imagination of his readers the enchanting sight of Gabriel or Michael flying toward the American shore with a skunk under either wing.

The testimony I have offered is derived from what may be truly called "eminent Christian authority." The quotations are as exact as a translation from one language to another may be made. The inferences are my own and as I give them as natural deductions, they have simply the weight of an individual opinion. A part of it may appear somewhat jocular, but I could hardly restrain my risibility as I was reviewing my notes and a MS. I wrote some 25 years ago.

I think the antiquity of the Aztec has been proven; that they were gentle, kind and refined; that they had a thorough knowledge of what is called the Christian religion and practised it thousands of years before the advent of Jesus. That they were annihilated needs no further testimony. Each reader is entitled to his or her opinion. I have given mine.

To the student of comparative mythology the history of Quetzalcoatl is of fthe greatest importance. It will enable him, in a measure, to trace the course of the Great Trinitarian myth, regardless of whether it originated with the Aztecs or in the East, and thence spread over the world. He will also be able to demonstrate that this Aztec God, like all of similar religion, loses personal existence and becmes a creation of that primitive religious sentiment which clothed "the uncomprehended powers of nature with the attributes of divinity."

Some may feel satisfied with the "devil theory;" others, that he was "the type of Jesus Christ;" but few, I hope, will believe him to be an Irishman eating raw meat" or "a twin." The many will say:

"'Tis strange such difference should be,
'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee,"

If there be any others who really believe that either our civilization or the great spiritual movement, called Modern Spiritualism, needs a distinguishing and qualifying adjective, then I respectfully call their attention to the claims of the Aztec God. He was a virgin-born crucified Savior and Christ; he was born ages before the Jewish Jehovah turned tailor, and he comes to us with a clean record, bringing peace to his people; not a sword. Moreover, he is, so to speak, "to the manor born," as he was a native of this continent.

MRS. FOLKS IS SPIRIT MEDIUM.

Spiritualists Investigate the "Haunted House" in Argenta and Declare the Phenomena Are Genuine—She Will Probably Give Sittings Soon.

The so-called "haunted house" at 218 Cedar street has been explained. It has been investigated by Little Rock Spiritualists, who have pronounced the strange phenomena genuine spirit manifestations, and that Mrs. Alice Folks, who lives there, is a most successful medium. It is stated that she is likely to give public sittings soon.

W. Q. Sayers, of 408 Rock street, a traveling salesman, has sent to The Progressive Thinker, the organ of the Spiritualists in the United States, the article appearing recently in the Democrat giving an account of the manifestations, accompanying it with the following account of the investigations made by him, his wife and Mrs. Elmo.

"After reading the above account my wife (formerly Minnie M. Malone, who was secretary of the Texas State Spiritualist Asociation three successive years) and I decided to go over to Argenta and have an interview with Mrs. Folks and impart such information to her as her spirit friends desired her to have. Mrs. Folks invited us into the room (which had remained closed), where most of the phenomena had occurred, where, in the middle of the room on the floor, was evidence of the phenomena in part,, viz.: a dishpan containing some dishes surrounded with two glass lamps containing oil, with chimneys attached; a gallon can of coal oil, which was brought from the adjoining room; a slate, on which legible writing had been placed by the spirit forces, indicating wonderful physical manifestations.

"The first spiritual manifestation observed by the medium, Mrs. Sayers, was the form of a very tall Indian warrior wearing a buckskin suit and arrayed with feathers, and with a coarse masculine voice said, 'Hello there, squaw,' and, on inquiry, gave his name as Kiwaska. He was accompanied by several other Indians.

"Three spirits then appeared and gave their names, which were identified as father, brother and husband, all of which had passed to the spirit world several years prior, and were identified by the test given, since the sitters had never seen or heard of each other.

"The father stated he was the instigator of this extraordinary phenomena, hoping it would lead to an investigation whereby the daughter would be admonished to develop her mediumship, and, through their guidance, receive information of a lost child, which could, after all tangible means accessible had failed, be located by spirit guidance, again uniting mother and daughter, who have long been separated.

"On the following night Mrs. May Elmo, a well-known Chicago medium, who is doing some very proficient work here in demonstrating the truth with the object of organizing a local society, now located at 908 High street; J. W. Moon of the same address, and Miss Sayers and I of Little Rock, went to Mrs. Folks', and, with the immediate family and a friend or two, assembled in the room where the manifestations were formerly given.

"Mrs. Elmo, acting as message bearer, delivered the messages from the spirit friends, who came with messages similar to the night before, and especially admonished Mrs. Folks to sit and develop slate writing as her special phase of mediumship.

"Some admonitions were given to other members of the family, and they were well pleased with the satisfactory explanation of the strange phenomena which had created such a sensation."—Democrat, Little Rock, Ark.

To the Spiritualists at Large.

The ladies of the "Colby Luther Bazar" will thankfully receive any articles (fancy or otherwise), books, etc., that the friends in the Cause may donate. We would also like to add as many new members as possible to our list this season. Membership fee, 25 cents per year. This is a noble work and we hope all who can will respond. Address all donations to Mrs. F. C. Moore, 2102 Central avenue, Anderson, Ind., until July 22, after that date, Chesterfield, Ind. MRS. F. C. MOORE,

Commercial Mediumship.

Difficulties in the Way of a Satisfactory Solution.

"Clearly, to my mind, the only consistent course for Spiritualists to pursue is to proclaim Spiritualism as a religion and claim the liberty guaranteed by the constitution in its exercise. Salary our mediums as exponents of the faith, eliminate everything of a secular nature from their professions, proclaim them as instruments of spiritual intelligence whose purpose is to bring immortality to light, message bearers to the sorrowing and the doubting. Let it be understood that whatever may come of advice and counsel upon worldly affairs shall be purely incidental and of minor importance compared with the great truth which Spiritualism came to reveal."

I have followed with much interest the discussion of the question of "Commercial Mediumship" in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, and regard it as not only important, but absolutely vital to the well being of Spiritualism, a matter which is absolutely forced upon our consideration by the exigencies of the case and which we could not ignore if we would. I note, however, a tendency in some cases to indulge in considerable heat and acrimony in the discussion.

The difficulties in the way of a satisfactory solution of the problem are many and they are not lessened by intemperate language or unkind imputations. And we should all seek in the most fraternal spirit to reach a satisfactory agreement and clear a path through the jungle of perplexities that beset us.

One of the first and greatest of the difficulties which face us is to draw the line of demarkation between "commercial" mediumship and mediumship which is not commercial. Mediums must eat, wear clothes and have a place to sleep, all of which cost money. In order to procure them mediums must be paid for services rendered. I think no one will deny this. While I heartily endorse the sentiments of Brother Love as expressed in a late number of The Progressive Thinker, I hope he will excuse me if I say that it appeared to me that he was trying to knock the stuffing out of a straw man. In my wide acquaintance with active workers in the Cause I have never known a speaker who claimed pay for his or her services and denied that right to mediums. If Brother Love knows of any such he ought to pillory them by publishing their names.

The question is not shall mediums be paid for their services, but how shall they be paid? Shall these peculiar sensitives continue to be subjected to the vicious, dog-eat-dog competitive system which prevails in the commercial and industrial world and which is the parent of the dishonesty, hypocrisy and sham which dominates and honeycombs business of every kind? If so, what right have we to expect any more honesty in mediumship than there is in trade and traffic? Is it not notoriously true that scarcely an article of food or clothing is what it purports to be? Adulteration and sham is the rule, purity the rare exception; 99 out of every 100 merchants and manufacturers misrepresent their goods; they must do so—they say—in order to compete with their rivals. Can we expect any better of the dealers in mediumistic products subjected to the same conditions and operating under the same system? Certainly not.

WE MUST EITHER RECONCILE OURSELVES TO THE CONTINUATION OF FRAUD, OR CHANGE THE SYSTEM WHICH PRODUCES IT. In our anxiety to have a free religion we have encouraged the go-as-you please methods until we don't know "where we are at." Let us clip the wings of our self-conceit a little and consent to take a leaf out of some one else's experience book. The Society for Psychical Research has set us an example in system that would be profitable for us to follow in a number of things. Let our mediums be paid a salary, as theirs are. We have a thousand mediums as good and better than Mrs. Piper. Furnish them equally favorable conditions and the results will be equally satisfactory.

This reform cannot be accomplished in a day, but encouraging results will follow every effort toward that end. The Missouri State Association has adopted a plan which, while not perfect, is a step in the right direction. Even if this plan were not the best, the enactment of unjust laws by the various municipalities would force us to adopt it as the only safety for our mediums.

Most of the ordinances relating to the matter class mediums, clairvoyants and fortune-tellers in one order, making no distinction whatever. Any one who predicts the future for a fee is a fortune-teller. Our average law-maker is generally a believer in the Christian religion. Yet he is so obtuse that he does not see that his whole religion is founded upon fortune-telling—prophecy—and, regarding it as an evil, he seeks to discourage it by a heavy license tax. Here is manifest the inconsistency of the average legislator. If fortune-telling is an evil what right has he to legalize it by a license? If it is not an evil, why burden it beyond other professions? The whole principle is wrong. The person who is able—as we know many are—to predict the future should have the free and untrammeled liberty to exercise the gift. To guard against the abuse of that right every one who makes a business of it should be held legally responsible from failure to perform in accordance with his contract, should be subject to punishment for obtaining money without rendering an equivalent. His patron should have the same recourse in law that the lawyer's client, the doctor's patient or the merchant's patrons have. I am confident that nothing would be more efficacious in driving fakers out of business than putting them under a financial bond to honestly fulfill their contracts.

Our mediums indignantly protest against being classed as fortune-tellers, but where is the line to be drawn?. What is the difference between the medium who advertises "business sittings a specialty" or gives tips on stocks, grain or cotton for a fee, and the one who discovers gold mines, reunites lovers, or "gives advice on personal affairs and IS PROPHETIC?"—predicts the future.

Now these things have all been done without doubt and there is nothing intrinsically wrong in them UNLESS THE OBJECT SOUGHT WAS WRONG. If gambling in stocks is wrong, giving tips thereon is wrong. If prospecting for gold is right, assisting the prospector is right. If the advice of a psychic or of a spirit can rsetore harmony and reunite the sundered ties of love or friendship—something which has been done in thousands of cases as every medium of experience can testify—by what possible course of reasoning can such a service be pronounced wrong? The wrong consists in promising to do and taking pay for doing, what there is neither the ability nor intention of doing.

Yet, while holding fast to the above views, I am compelled to take issue somewhat with my Sister Longley in her vigorous defense of her method of advertising. It was quite natural that she should manifest some heat in replying to her critic, even though he meant no offense, and her statement that her ministry has brought comfort to many sorrowing hearts will be endorsed by hundreds of witnesses. Only a few days ago I received a letter from an old friend in California, a woman 82 years of age, in which she expresses her love for and gratitude to Mrs. Longley for the many comforting messages received through her instrumentality. I treasure as one of my possessions a prettly little poem given me by one of Mrs. Longley's guides and which has been a source of much encouragement to me. It would be hard indeed to name the theory of evil that would make wrong out of her advertisement; but to quote a famous saying of the late Mr. Cleveland: "It is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us."

In many places the law decrees that all who practice foretelling the future must pay for a license to do so. If Sister Longley were in St. Louis that ad would result in her paying $25 per quarter or going to jail. Our St. Louis mediums have been "up against it" hard and strong and we have sought diligently to secure to them freedom from this arduous and unjust tax. And we have found that the only possible relief was the plea of RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. But, under that plea, the exercise of mediumship must be purely religious and entirely divorced from business and secular affairs generally.

In my intercourse with the tax officers I have found them courteous, reasonable and tolerant, but they also express their inability to distinguish between the mediums and the fortune-tellers. Said the license commissioner to me during one of our interviews, "You admit that mediums sometimes predict the future and that fortune-tellers are sometimes mediums. Now, if an expert like yourself cannot draw the line how can you expect me to do so?" He had me there, didn't he?

It may be that the Chicago and Portland ordinances will, in a measure, remedy some of the evils. Yet, while I favor them as an experiment, they seem too much of an infringement of personal liberty and may, I fear, breed other abuses.

Clearly, to my mind, the only consistent course for Spiritualists to pursue is to proclaim Spiritualism as a religion and claim the liberty guaranteed by the constitution in its exercise. Salary our mediums as exponents of the faith, eliminate everything of a secular nature from their professions, proclaim them as instruments of spiritual intelligences whose purpose is to bring immortality to light, message bearers to the sorrowing and the doubting. Let it be understood that whatever may come of advice and counsel upon worldly affairs shall be purely incidental and of minor importance compared with the great truth which Spiritualism came to reveal.

THE TWIN ANGELS.

The beautiful, restful angel of sleep
Draws near at the close of the day,
And taking the weary ones in his arms
He bears them away and away;
Far away to that land where dreams are made,
Where the shadows bring quiet rest.
We all gladly go with this angel fair,
With our tired head on his breast.
We patiently wait for the soft footfall,
All alone in our darkened room,
And drowsily murmur, as he draws near,
"Our dear Angel of Sleep has come."

Another fair Angel will come for us,
When the shadows are soft and gray,
And gadly we'll reach weary arms to him,
And he'll bear us away, away—
Away to the sunlit land of flowers,
Where the rose has never a thorn;
Where the dark-earth-shadows all flee away
In the glow of celestial morn.
He'll gaze in our face with a beaming smile,
And we all will forget to weep,
But we'll softly whisper, "He's very like
Our beautiful Angel of Sleep."

REASON AND ITS PROVINCE.

To Decide Upon the Merits and Truthfulness of Things.

'Tis reason crowns the manly brow,
And helps one know the why and how
Of great and small of sea and land,
And gather in with knowing hand,
The wealth of knowledge in demand
That helps one live and understand,
Yet more and more the Infinite All,
One's self and Universe withal.

Let Reason have her perfect sway,
And errors old will pass away,
And creeds be gone with prejudice,
And melt away with narrowness;
And then Free thought will rule the day,
And Reason's might and God obey.

Reason is the power by which we discover the relation of things and are able to reach conclusions, discover right from wrong, truth from error, and pass judgment upon whatever comes within the range of our senses or of our observation, or in any way commands our attention. It enables us to understand cause and effect as antecedent and consequent; and how that as one exists so must the other; the one causative, the other resultant; so that if one be known the other may be discovered, and both perceived in their true relation. The power by which this knowledge is attained is the human reason, and the possibilities of the human understanding are in proportion to its development, and a Universe invites its activity with the reward of knowledge that makes for wisdom and happiness.

Reason is the Divine consummation that distinguishes and entitles man to pre-eminence, and to the crown of Sovereign, before whom the heavens bow; and the stars honor him with messages; great and small are his servants, and the mighty unseen forces of Nature yield him obedience and profit. Such is the endowment and heritage of Man, to be his guide and interpreter of all truth and justice; and it is the power that directs the life and intelligence of the Infinite in law and government throughout immensity, and the mandates and decisions of its court are manifest in every conceivable purpose, life, and being, so that, true enough, "there is reason in all things."

It seems to appear as the Logos in the philosophy of Plato, and perhaps was conceived and individualized in the mind of Saint John; who can tell? At any rate it is a sublime idea and affords ample play for the most brilliant imagination. And as it is the crowning gift of God to Man, so it becmes our bounden duty to use it in search of all truth and knowledge whatsoever, whether material or spiritual. It is the one reliable guide that may open the door to the wealth of the present and of the future. It is the Infinite in man from which come infinite possibilities and progress, along with the successful study and comprehension of cause and effect.

Newton, reclining under the tree observing an apple fall to the ground, in search of cause, discovered the law of gravity, and every science consists of systemized facts gathered by reasoning minds, and man's wonderful advancement in learning and civilization must be credited to his powers of observation and reason, and what, indeed, is more reliable and ennobling? Imagination may indulge in happy flights, only as Reason plumes its wings; only reason can lay hold of truth and its blessings and separate the wheat from the tares.

And its province, what of it? Clearly unlimited and its use is as its name implies, viz.: to reason out the reality of things; to decide upon the merits and truthfulness of things, or upon whatever comes before the attention of its court. Nothing is too holy or sacred for its examination and disposal. Whether the claim be dogmatic or scientific, or whatever its nature, let it come before the bar of Reason and be received or rejected according to the evidence, law, and testimony given or appearing; for only in this way can truth be ascertained and error perceived. In Reason then, let me rest my faith and see to it that my religion tallies with its judgment; for then it will bear the light of knowledge and the test of time, because founded in the Infinite Reason.

Every faith, opinion, or belief is necessarily founded either on truth, error, or a mixture of both. Therefore in the investigation of any claim or theory whatsoever set forth, in order to arrive at its soundness or truthfulness, we must commence first of all at the very foundation upon which the superstructure rests, and and depends for its strength and perpetuity; for, however seeming the edifice, if the foundation fail it must fall and be washed away as was the house built upon sand. Only truth can withstand the searching waves of thought and be better seen for its washing. DR. WM. J. HILL.

What a Nurse Saw at a Grave.

Sir,—Dr. A., of Manchester, tells me of an interesting case met with recently in his practice. Mrs. B., who had never previously been very strong, was confined of a male child five months ago. At first the mother and child did apparently well, but shortly afterwards the mother developed consumption, signs of which very soon srowed themselves in the child. The mother eventually died, the child being expected to follow its mother in perhaps a week or two; the funeral party included the nurse who had attended Mrs. B. at her confinement, but had not been in attendance since. While at the cemetery the baby who had been left at home in charge of an aunt, was seized with hemorrhage of the lungs and died within a minute or two. The nurse while standing at the graveside suddenly turned pale, and on being asked the reason, said she had seen the form of the baby pass over the grave. On close inquiry as to the probable times as to the two events, the doctor finds that if not simultaneous they must have been within a few minutes of each other, and what impressed the doctor greatly was that the nurse told her story before she could in any way have had direct knowledge of the child's death.—C. G. Reckards, in the Two Worlds.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth.

Religion of the Aztecs, Its Parallels in Roman Catholicism

"Judge Ladd of California turned the light of legal evidence on Christian Origins, and found no reliable proof that such a person as the ecclesiastical Jesus ever lived."—Progressive Thinker, March 21, 1908.

But an edict was isued that the name of Quetzalcoatl was not to be used by anyone. It was to be entirely obliterated from the memory of the people, and the name of Jesus substituted. Says Kingsborough: "It is very remarkable that Bernal Diaz, who wrote a circumstantial account of the conquest of New Spain (Mexico) and whose memory seems scarcely to have failed him, should, in describing the city of Cholula and its famous temple, have declared that he had forgotten the name of the idol (Quetzalcoatl), to whom it was dedicated; although it appears from what he says a few chapters afterward, that he had not forgotten the number of steps of which the staircase leading to the upper area of the temple consisted."

Several years' residence in South America enables me to corroborate this testimony about the suppression of one name and the substitution of another. In very many families the eldest son is named Jesus; and I have met many a pretty girl who delighted in the euphonious title of "Jesucita" (little female Jesus).

Says Prescott: "The business of conversion went on prosperously. It was not difficult to pass from the feasts and festivals of one religion to the feasts and festivals of the other." But the Inquisition also helped in its usual humane manner, and its convincing arguments won the battle for for Holy Church. It caught an Aztec named Ixtlilxochitl, and no one will blame him for allowing himself to be christened Fernando de Alva. He wrote a book under the directions of the Dominicians, which proved all the Holy Church claimed.

In the meantime the Council of Seventy had determined that the Aztecs were the "ten lost tribes of Israel." This "Jew craze" lasted till about 1830. Kingsborough wrote to prove that theory.

In their early days, the Aztecs were a nomadic tribe, and their wanderings were compared with those of the Jews. Their "migration" and where they rested on their march were found to correspond exactly with those of the Jews. "Mexico" was identical with the Hebrew for "Messiah." Quetzalcoatl was turned into Adam. As there was an Aztec prayer commencing "O, Sun and Earth," another holy man insisted that he was Moses, because in Deuteronomy XXX. he is reported to have said, "I call the heavens and earth to record this day."

Kingsborough maintains the same same opinion and that the Aztec Bible, called "Teoamoxtli" was the Pentateuch, for, says he, "Teo means divine and amoit is a book, and moxtli MUST MEAN Moses; therefore the true meaning is 'divine book of Moses'." Dr. McCulloch bring many labored and equally sane arguments to prove that he was Noah. Another laughs the rest to scorn. He was sure it was Job, "for the Mexicans having a great predilection for sculpturing figures," Quetzalcoatl must have been Job as it is plainly set forth in chapter 19 of his book, "were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever." As one of their paintings represented a bone with grass growing out of it, Isaiah loomed up, because in chapter LXVI. it says, "Your bones shall flourish like an herb."

The symbol of Cholula, one of their principal cities, was "a deer's foot," so it was decided that he was Solomon. Cholula sounds like Churula, which, in turn, sounds very much like Jerusalem. And did not Solomon compose a song: "The voice of my beloved! Behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. My beloved is like a roe or young hart." Poor Quetzalcoatl, saddled with 300 wives and 700 concubines! But Boturini got him out of his trouble, by declaring him to be Bar Chocoba, the Jewish Messiah.

He argued that the Aztecs divided their time into cycles of 52 years, which was nearly the age at which Jesus suffered. Bar Chocoba came exactly 52 years thereafter, and the Aztecs had thus divided their time in his honor. There is question as to the truth of this statement, for the authorized representive of the Dominicans, Friar Tomas Ortizius, in addressing the council of the Indies, urged it as the principal reason for enslaving the Aztecs.

After awhile it dawned upon the consciousness of a holy man, who knew something about history, that the so-called "lost tribes" were conquered by Shalmaneser and carried away captives in 721 B. C. So how could they be so well acquainted with all the sacred mysteries of "our holy faith?" Then hell was let loose.

Garcia comes out boldly and says: "There are not wanting those who affirm that the Mexicans feigned their own early history after having heard the early history of the Jews." So the council decided that as all the knowledge of the Aztecs had evidently been imparted to them by the devil, and as it was not within the providence of God that the evil one should be allowed to utilize true Christians, the hellish work must have been performed by some heretic. After considerable silent prayer and meditation it was decreed that in some unaccountable manner the devil managed to transport some of the early heretical Manicheans over to Mexico and thus a perverted knowledge of the truth was spread. All of the holy men conceded the power of levitation to the devil, for, said one, "did he not levitate Jesus up to the pinnacle of the Temple." But, unfortunately the levitated Manicheans would have equal rights for recognition with Spain's greatest female saint, Teresa a Jesu.

So the council made a bold plunge, and the Aztec God was declared to be none other than our Divine Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

One painting described Quetzalcoatl as rather homely; Isaiah in speaking of some fellow says: "His visage was so marred more than any man." As both Quetzlcoatl and Jesus were homely, they must be the same man. And as Isaiah says that "Butter and honey shall be eat," so the Aztecs ate butter and honey on the birthday of the God. But to clinch it all one of the favorite Aztec dishes was "fish and honey." In my mind's eye I can see that truly holy man as he turned to Luke and triumphantly quoted the passage where Jesus ate fish and honey after the resurrection.

Of course no Spanish can have any theological argument, without bringing in the Virgin, so one enthusiast having found an Aztec writing with the following: "Behold the king himself present whose words thou shouldst receive and store up in thine heart" triumphantly quotes them in favor of the Jesus theory, "for" says he, "the Virgin Mary, is said in Luke 11:51 to have kept the sayings of her Son IN HER HEART."

Notwithstanding the unquestionable sanity of these writers and their thoroughly conclusive arguments, everybody was not suited. So another ingenious holy man discovered that the Aztec language did not have the letters B, D, F, G, R and S, and then concentrating his gigantic intellect on the subject, gravely informed his admiring hearers that "the approximation in sound of Jesus Christ and Quetzalcoatl will appear as a near attempt at the assimilation of these two proper names. For J, they would use Qu, the vowel E necessarily following, and the letter S, by an easy transition, becomes tz, and we then have Quetz for Jes; the latin termination "us" being changed into al, as better adapted to the Mexican language; we then have Jesus transformed by this easy and simple method, into Quetzal. Now, as Christ said to his disciples, 'Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves,' therefore the saints who converted the Mexicans, called themselves SERPENTS, which is the meaning of the word 'coatl'."

Kingsboroug does not agree, in toto, with the above. He leans more to the Jew theory, and he cannot help wondering at the accurate details of the daily actions of the Aztec God, so like what little is known about Jesus, and I could almost hear him sigh as he admitted that "deducting the three last Gospels, which are simply a repetition of Matthew, his (Jesus') biography is reduced to a few pages. But possibly the four evangelists were the only primitive Christians acquainted with the art of writing."

This should have settled the Jesus Question for time and eternity, and we might make pilgrimages to Mexico instead of Jerusalem or Rome. But those unfortunate Dominicians stepped in and upset the whole program. They stated that their missionaries insisted that Quetzalcoatl was an Irishman, because he was called Cuculan in Yucatan, "wore a hood and vest covered with red crosses and ate raw meat." Poor Quetzalcoatl! What a fall! From Jesus down to an Irishman eating raw meat.

So the war broke out anew. Dr. Siguenza, who wrote his history about 1675, insists that the Aztec God is no other than the doubting St. Thomas. He pitches into the Irish theory and many learned and holy men sustained him. He says: "The Mexican God was named Topiltzin Quetzalcoatl, and that of the saint was Thomas Didymus." The "To" in the Mexican name was an abbreviation of Thomas (spelled in Spanish, Tomas); piltzin, means son or disciple. Quetzalcoatl corresponds with Didymus, and means "a twin." Therefore as Quetzalcoatl was a twin, and St. Thomas also, they must be the same person. The only real objection to this argument is, that the only way I can see for a modest, retiring man to avoid canonization, would be to bring evidence that he was a triplet.

But God loves the Irish even if he gives all the money to the Jews, and a very learned man, no doubt inspired, came to the rescue of the Emerald Isle. He claims that when in Palenque he saw an idol with three heads (evidently a symbol of their Trinity). Now, says this very learned man, "this was St. Patrick's emblem, for he had converted Ireland by exhibiting three-leafed clover." This shrewd exhibit of the first recorded patent, seems to have carried the day, and St. Patrick is entitled to be considered the Patron Saint of Mexico.

Just one more quotation out of a remaining score. Clavigero wrote a history of Mexico in three volumes. He accepts their account of the Deluge and the total destruction of life on this continent. Then he tries to account for the present animal life, and enters into an exhaustive argument to prove that though a sloth can move only about seventy feet a day, yet, by the assistance of divine providence he could arrive in time. He is not so sure about the other animals either swimming over or coming via Alaska. So he intimates that possibly the angels assisted in the transportations. But he is careful not to assign any particular angel to any specific part, but leaves to the vivid imagination of his readers the enchanting sight of Gabriel or Michael flying toward the American shore with a skunk under either wing.

The testimony I have offered is derived from what may be truly called "eminent Christian authority." The quotations are as exact as a translation from one language to another may be made. The inferences are my own and as I give them as natural deductions, they have simply the weight of an individual opinion. A part of it may appear somewhat jocular, but I could hardly restrain my risibility as I was reviewing my notes and a MS. I wrote some 25 years ago.

I think the antiquity of the Aztec has been proven; that they were gentle, kind and refined; that they had a thorough knowledge of what is called the Christian religion and practised it thousands of years before the advent of Jesus. That they were annihilated needs no further testimony. Each reader is entitled to his or her opinion. I have given mine.

To the student of comparative mythology the history of Quetzalcoatl is of fthe greatest importance. It will enable him, in a measure, to trace the course of the Great Trinitarian myth, regardless of whether it originated with the Aztecs or in the East, and thence spread over the world. He will also be able to demonstrate that this Aztec God, like all of similar religion, loses personal existence and becmes a creation of that primitive religious sentiment which clothed "the uncomprehended powers of nature with the attributes of divinity."

Some may feel satisfied with the "devil theory;" others, that he was "the type of Jesus Christ;" but few, I hope, will believe him to be an Irishman eating raw meat" or "a twin." The many will say:

"'Tis strange such difference should be,
'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee,"

If there be any others who really believe that either our civilization or the great spiritual movement, called Modern Spiritualism, needs a distinguishing and qualifying adjective, then I respectfully call their attention to the claims of the Aztec God. He was a virgin-born crucified Savior and Christ; he was born ages before the Jewish Jehovah turned tailor, and he comes to us with a clean record, bringing peace to his people; not a sword. Moreover, he is, so to speak, "to the manor born," as he was a native of this continent.

MRS. FOLKS IS SPIRIT MEDIUM.

Spiritualists Investigate the "Haunted House" in Argenta and Declare the Phenomena Are Genuine—She Will Probably Give Sittings Soon.

The so-called "haunted house" at 218 Cedar street has been explained. It has been investigated by Little Rock Spiritualists, who have pronounced the strange phenomena genuine spirit manifestations, and that Mrs. Alice Folks, who lives there, is a most successful medium. It is stated that she is likely to give public sittings soon.

W. Q. Sayers, of 408 Rock street, a traveling salesman, has sent to The Progressive Thinker, the organ of the Spiritualists in the United States, the article appearing recently in the Democrat giving an account of the manifestations, accompanying it with the following account of the investigations made by him, his wife and Mrs. Elmo.

"After reading the above account my wife (formerly Minnie M. Malone, who was secretary of the Texas State Spiritualist Association three successive years) and I decided to go over to Argenta and have an interview with Mrs. Folks and impart such information to her as her spirit friends desired her to have. Mrs. Folks invited us into the room (which had remained closed), where most of the phenomena had occurred, where, in the middle of the room on the floor, was evidence of the phenomena in part,, viz.: a dishpan containing some dishes surrounded with two glass lamps containing oil, with chimneys attached; a gallon can of coal oil, which was brought from the adjoining room; a slate, on which legible writing had been placed by the spirit forces, indicating wonderful physical manifestations.

"The first spiritual manifestation observed by the medium, Mrs. Sayers, was the form of a very tall Indian warrior wearing a buckskin suit and arrayed with feathers, and with a coarse masculine voice said, 'Hello there, squaw,' and, on inquiry, gave his name as Kiwaska. He was accompanied by several other Indians.

"Three spirits then appeared and gave their names, which were identified as father, brother and husband, all of which had passed to the spirit world several years prior, and were identified by the test given, since the sitters had never seen or heard of each other.

"The father stated he was the instigator of this extraordinary phenomena, hoping it would lead to an investigation whereby the daughter would be admonished to develop her mediumship, and, through their guidance, receive information of a lost child, which could, after all tangible means accessible had failed, be located by spirit guidance, again uniting mother and daughter, who have long been separated.

"On the following night Mrs. May Elmo, a well-known Chicago medium, who is doing some very proficient work here in demonstrating the truth with the object of organizing a local society, now located at 908 High street; J. W. Moon of the same address, and Miss Sayers and Tof Little Rock, went to Mrs. Folks', and, with the immediate family and a friend or two, assembled in the room where the manifestations were formerly given.

"Mrs. Elmo, acting as message bearer, delivered the messages from the spirit friends, who came with messages similar to the night before, and especially admonished Mrs. Folks to sit and develop slate writing as her special phase of mediumship.

"Some admonitions were given to other members of the family, and they were well pleased with the satisfactory explanation of the strange phenomena which had created such a sensation."—Democrat, Little Rock, Ark.

To the Spiritualists at Large.

The ladies of the "Colby Luther Bazar" will thankfully receive any articles (fancy or otherwise), books, etc., that the friends in the Cause may donate. We would also like to add as many new members as possible to our list this season. Membership fee, 25 cents per year. This is a noble work and we hope all who can will respond. Address all donations to Mrs. F. C. Moore, 2102 Central avenue, Anderson, Ind., until July 28, after that date, Chesterfield, Ind.

Difficulties in the Way of a Satisfactory Solution.

"Clearly, to my mind, the only consistent course for Spiritualists to pursue is to proclaim Spiritualism as a religion and claim the liberty guaranteed by the constitution in its exercise. Salary our mediums as exponents of the faith, eliminate everything of a secular nature from their professions, proclaim them as instruments of spiritual intelligences whose purpose is to bring immortality to light, message bearers to the sorrowing and the doubting. Let it be understood that whatever may come of advice and counsel upon worldly affairs shall be purely incidental and of minor importance compared with the great truth which Spiritualism came to reveal."

I have followed with much interest the discussion of the question of "Commercial Mediumship" in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, and regard it as not only important, but absolutely vital to the well being of Spiritualism, a matter which is absolutely forced upon our consideration by the exigencies of the case and which we could not ignore if we would. I note, however, a tendency in some cases to indulge in considerable heat and acrimony in the discussion.

The difficulties in the way of a satisfactory solution of the problem are many and they are not lessened by intemperate language or unkind imputations. And we should all seek in the most fraternal spirit to reach a satisfactory agreement and clear a path through the jungle of perplexities that beset us.

One of the first and greatest of the difficulties which face us is to draw the line of demarkation between "commercial" mediumship and mediumship which is not commercial. Mediums must eat, wear clothes and have a place to sleep, all of which cost money. In order to procure them mediums must be paid for services rendered. I think no one will deny this. While I heartily endorse the sentiments of Brother Love as expressed in a late number of The Progressive Thinker, I hope he will excuse me if I say that it appeared to me that he was trying to knock the stuffing out of a straw man. In my wide acquaintance with active workers in the Cause I have never known a speaker who claimed pay for his or her services and denied that right to mediums. If Brother Love knows of any such he ought to pillory them by publishing their names.

The question is not shall mediums be paid for their services, but how shall they be paid? Shall these peculiar sensitives continue to be subjected to the vicious, dog-eat-dog competitive system which prevails in the commercial and industrial world and which is the parent of the dishonesty, hypocrisy and sham which dominates and honeycombs business of every kind? If so, what right have we to expect any more honesty in mediumship than there is in trade and traffic? Is it not notoriously true that scarcely an article of food or clothing is what it purports to be? Adulteration and sham is the rule, purity the rare exception; 99 out of every 100 merchants and manufacturers misrepresent their goods; they must do so—they say—in order to compete with their rivals. Can we expect any better of the dealers in mediumistic products subjected to the same conditions and operating under the same system? Certainly not.

WE MUST EITHER RECONCILE OURSELVES TO THE CONTINUATION OF FRAUD, OR CHANGE THE SYSTEM WHICH PRODUCES IT. In our anxiety to have a free religion we have encouraged the go-as-you please methods until we don't know "where we are at." Let us clip the wings of our self-conceit a little and consent to take a leaf out of some one else's experience book. The Society for Psychical Research has set us an example in system that would be profitable for us to follow in a number of things. Let our mediums be paid a salary, as theirs are. We have a thousand mediums as good and better than Mrs. Piper. Furnish them equally favorable conditions and the results will be equally satisfactory.

This reform cannot be accomplished in a day, but encouraging results will follow every effort toward that end. The Missouri State Association has adopted a plan which, while not perfect, is a step in the right direction. Even if this plan were not the best, the enactment of unjust laws by the various municipalities would force us to adopt it as the only safety for our mediums.

Most of the ordinances relating to the matter class mediums, clairvoyants and fortune-tellers in one order, making no distinction whatever. Any one who predicts the future for a fee is a fortune-teller. Our average law-maker is generally a believer in the Christian religion. Yet he is so obtuse that he does not see that his whole religion is founded upon fortune-telling—prophecy—and, regarding it as an evil, he seeks to discourage it by a heavy license tax. Here is manifest the inconsistency of the average legislator. If fortune-telling is an evil what right has he to legalize it by a license? If it is not an evil, why burden it beyond other professions? The whole principle is wrong. The person who is able—as we know many are—to predict the future should have the free and untrammeled liberty to exercise the gift. To guard against the abuse of that right every one who makes a business of it should be held legally responsible from failure to perform in accordance with his contract, should be subject to punishment for obtaining money without rendering an equivalent. His patron should have the same recourse in law that the lawyer's client, the doctor's patient or the merchant's patrons have. I am confident that nothing would be more efficacious in driving fakers out of business than putting them under a financial bond to honestly fulfill their contracts.

Our mediums indignantly protest against being classed as fortune-tellers, but where is the line to be drawn? What is the difference between the medium who advertises "business sittings a specialty" or gives tips on stocks, grain or cotton for a fee, and the one who discovers gold mines, reunites lovers, or "gives advice on personal affairs and IS PROPHETIC?"—predicts the future.

Now these things have all been done without doubt and there is nothing intrinsically wrong in them UNLESS THE OBJECT SOUGHT WAS WRONG. If gambling in stocks is wrong, giving tips thereon is wrong. If prospecting for gold is right, assisting the prospector is right. If the advice of a psychic or of a spirit can rsetore harmony and reunite the sundered ties of love or friendship—something which has been done in thousands of cases as every medium of experience can testify—by what possible course of reasoning can such a service be pronounced wrong? The wrong consists in promising to do and taking pay for doing, what there is neither the ability nor intention of doing.

Yet, while holding fast to the above views, I am compelled to take issue somewhat with my Sister Longley in her vigorous defense of her method of advertising. It was quite natural that she should manifest some heat in replying to her critic, even though he meant no offense, and her statement that her ministry has brought comfort to many sorrowing hearts will be endorsed by hundreds of witnesses. Only a few days ago I received a letter from an old friend in California, a woman 82 years of age, in which she expresses her love for and gratitude to Mrs. Longley for the many comforting messages received through her instrumentality. I treasure as one of my possessions a prettly little poem given me by one of Mrs. Longley's guides and which has been a source of much encouragement to me. It would be hard indeed to name the theory of evil that would make wrong out of her advertisement; but to quote a famous saying of the late Mr. Cleveland: "It is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us."

In many places the law decrees that all who practice foretelling the future must pay for a license to do so. If Sister Longley were in St. Louis that ad would result in her paying $25 per quarter or going to jail. Our St. Louis mediums have been "up against it" hard and strong and we have sought diligently to secure to them freedom from this arduous and unjust tax. And we have found that the only possible relief was the plea of RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. But, under that plea, the exercise of mediumship must be purely religious and entirely divorced from business and secular affairs generally.

In my intercourse with the tax officers I have found them courteous, reasonable and tolerant, but they also express their inability to distinguish between the mediums and the fortune-tellers. Said the license commissioner to me during one of our interviews, "You admit that mediums sometimes predict the future and that fortune-tellers are sometimes mediums. Now, if an expert like yourself cannot draw the line how can you expect me to do so?" He had me there, didn't he?

It may be that the Chicago and Portland ordinances will, in a measure, remedy some of the evils. Yet, while I favor them as an experiment, they seem too much of an infringement of personal liberty and may, I fear, breed other abuses.

Clearly, to my mind, the only consistent course for Spiritualists to pursue is to proclaim Spiritualism as a religion and claim the liberty guaranteed by the constitution in its exercise. Salary our mediums as exponents of the faith, eliminate everything of a secular nature from their professions, proclaim them as instruments of spiritual intelligences whose purpose is to bring immortality to light, message bearers to the sorrowing and the doubting. Let it be understood that whatever may come of advice and counsel upon worldly affairs shall be purely incidental and of minor importance compared with the great truth which Spiritualism came to reveal.

THE TWIN ANGELS.

The beautiful, restful angel of sleep
Draws near at the close of the day,
And taking the weary ones in his arms
He bears them away and away;
Far away to that land where dreams are made,
Where the shadows bring quiet rest.
We all gladly go with this angel fair,
With our tired head on his breast.
We patiently wait for the soft footfall,
All alone in our darkened room,
And drowsily murmur, as he draws near,
"Our dear Angel of Sleep has come."

Another fair Angel will come for us,
When the shadows are soft and gray,
And gadly we'll reach weary arms to him,
And he'll bear us away, away—
Away to the sunlit land of flowers,
Where the rose has never a thorn;
Where the dark-earth-shadows all flee away
In the glow of celestial morn.
He'll gaze in our face with a beaming smile,
And we all will forget to weep,
But we'll softly whisper, "He's very like
Our beautiful Angel of Sleep."

REASON AND ITS PROVINCE.

To Decide Upon the Merits and Truthfulness of Things.

'Tis reason crowns the manly brow,
And helps one know the why and how
Of great and small of sea and land,
And gather in with knowing hand,
The wealth of knowledge in demand
That helps one live and understand,
Yet more and more the Infinite All,
One's self and Universe withal.

Let Reason have her perfect sway,
And errors old will pass away,
And creeds be gone with prejudice,
And melt away with narrowness;
And then Free thought will rule the day,
And Reason's might and God obey.

Reason is the power by which we discover the relation of things and are able to reach conclusions, discover right from wrong, truth from error, and pass judgment upon whatever comes within the range of our senses or of our observation, or in any way commands our attention. It enables us to understand cause and effect as antecedent and consequent; and how that as one exists so must the other; the one causative, the other resultant; so that if one be known the other may be discovered, and both perceived in their true relation. The power by which this knowledge is attained is the human reason, and the possibilities of the human understanding are in proportion to its development, and a Universe invites its activity with the reward of knowledge that makes for wisdom and happiness.

Reason is the Divine consummation that distinguishes and entitles man to pre-eminence, and to the crown of Sovereign, before whom the heavens bow; and the stars honor him with messages; great and small are his servants, and the mighty unseen forces of Nature yield him obedience and profit. Such is the endowment and heritage of Man, to be his guide and interpreter of all truth and justice; and it is the power that directs the life and intelligence of the Infinite in law and government throughout immensity, and the mandates and decisions of its court are manifest in every conceivable purpose, life, and being, so that, true enough, "there is reason in all things."

It seems to appear as the Logos in the philosophy of Plato, and perhaps was conceived and individualized in the mind of Saint John; who can tell? At any rate it is a sublime idea and affords ample play for the most brilliant imagination. And as it is the crowning gift of God to Man, so it becomes our bounden duty to use it in search of all truth and knowledge whatsoever, whether material or spiritual. It is the one reliable guide that may open the door to the wealth of the present and of the future. It is the Infinite in man from which come infinite possibilities and progress, along with the successful study and comprehension of cause and effect.

Newton, reclining under the tree observing an apple fall to the ground, in search of cause, discovered the law of gravity, and every science consists of systemized facts gathered by reasoning minds, and man's wonderful advancement in learning and civilization must be credited to his powers of observation and reason, and what, indeed, is more reliable and ennobling? Imagination may indulge in happy flights, only as Reason plumes its wings; only reason can lay hold of truth and its blessings and separate the wheat from the tares.

And its province, what of it? Clearly unlimited and its use is as its name implies, viz.: to reason out the reality of things; to decide upon the merits and truthfulness of things, or upon whatever comes before the attention of its court. Nothing is too holy or sacred for its examination and disposal. Whether the claim be dogmatic or scientific, or whatever its nature, let it come before the bar of Reason and be received or rejected according to the evidence, law, and testimony given or appearing; for only in this way can truth be ascertained and error perceived. In Reason, then, let me rest my faith and see to it that my religion tallies with its judgment; for then it will bear the light of knowledge and the test of time, because founded in the Infinite Reason.

Every faith, opinion, or belief is necessarily founded either on truth, error, or a mixture of both. Therefore in the investigation of any claim or theory whatsoever set forth, in order to arrive at its soundness or truthfulness, we must commence first of all at the very foundation upon which the superstructure rests, and and depends for its strength and perpetuity; for, however seeming the edifice. if the foundation fail it must fall and be washed away as was the house built upon sand. Only truth can withstand the searching waves of thought and be better seen for its washing.

What a Nurse Saw at a Grave.

Sir,—Dr. A., of Manchester, tells me of an interesting case met with recently in his practice. Mrs. B., who had never previously been very strong, was confined of a male child five months ago. At first the mother and child did apparently well, but shortly afterwards the mother developed consumption, signs of which very soon crowed themselves in the child. The mother eventually died, the child being expected to follow its mother in perhaps a week or two; the funeral party included the nurse who had attended Mrs. B. at her confinement, but had not been in attendance since. While at the cemetery the baby who had been left at home in charge of an aunt, was seized with hemorrhage of the lungs and died within a minute or two. The nurse while standing at the graveside suddenly turned pale, and on being asked the reason, said she had seen the form of the baby pass over the grave. On close inquiry as to the probable times as to the two events, the doctor finds that if not simultaneous they must have been within a few minutes of each other, and what impressed the doctor greatly was that the nurse told her story before she could in any way have had direct knowledge of the child's death.—C. THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Letters Concerning Supernatural Disturbances at the House of Mr. Samuel Wesley, Senior, at Epworth, in Lincolnshire, in 1716

Introductory.

The letters that follow originally appeared in the Arminian Magazine in 1784, and at other dates selections from the general account, as compiled by the Rev. John Wesley, have appeared in various "Lives" of Wesley and other Wesleyan publications, while on another and later occasion, the materials here collected were included in a work bearing the same general title as that selected from this pamphlet, published in Yorkshire, and devoted to a remarkable series of supernatural narrations. It is from this work, now long since out of print, that these letters have been taken, virtually rescued, it might be truly said, from oblivion, for the Wesleyan body have for a long time past rigorously excluded these narrations from their public prints.

As concerns the whyfor of this pamphlet, much more could be written than the limits of these prefatory lines permit.

First, it may be noted in this connection that all things that pertain to the honored name of Wesley are abundantly worthy of being preserved, for that name represents much that is associated with all that is noble and praiseworthy in the rise and progress of religious freedom in this country. With much, too, that has touched millions of human hearts with a new life, and kindled many a soul into a divine enthusiasm that was sleeping by the wayside, oblivious alike of life and beauty. And, as the Wesleys were so largely associated with helping their fellows to prepare for that "invisble world" about which we all desire to know something positive, these "letters," recording certain experiences in the household of this noted family, are alike instructive and suggestive in such connection. In this age preaching is often cast aside by those who demand proof. It is an age of doubt and skepticism, and many an anxious soul asks with pathetic despair: "Is there no proof that death does not end all?"

To such, the fact that in a family of such known probity and veracity there has occurred incidents that undeniably point to the manifestation of supernatural, or spiritual presences, comes as a beacon light, for it at least argues that, if true in these instances, may it not also be true in others. That such a thing occurred is something to ponder over, that it was in such a household adds to its importance, and that the testimony has not been invalidated, is more than satisfactory, all of which gives some reason why this publication is sent forth.

Still further, let it be noted, that undoubtedly the younger body of Wesleyans, not knowing much, if anything, of these curious experiences in the family of the founder of their body, are entitled to be informed thereon for their own advantage. For one of the missing elements, it might almost be said, in the religious professions of the times, is the absence, to a large extent—to a much greater degree than is usually confessed—of a consciousness of an actual, real, personal life after death for the individual, and of a real world in which the departed exist. Aught, then, that can help to establish, or re-establish if lost, such a consciousness will surely be welcome to those who do not wish to see religion dwindle into dry formalism, or a belief in futurity become a nerveless and indefinite spiritual agnosticism. These words from Wesley may, then, be of help to all who are willing to heed their import. Indeed, the young Wesleyanism might greatly to its advantage not only peruse the present pages, but also pause to consider if, in these days, there may not be other evidences, possessed by people as credible, pure-minded, and honorable as the Wesleys, that prove the presence of spiritual beings in our midst.

To Spiritualists, the record now published is mainly of corroborative value, since they are not only familiar with experiences similar to the special facts narrated, but they have had even more remarkable events occur in the course of their forty-five years' investigations of the modern revival of intercourse between the natural and spiritual worlds. But, to even them, a record such as is contained in the following pages, has a value none the less real, even though its facts are not the equals of those known to Spiritualists to-day.

Thus, then, the reader is now briefly possessed of the how and the why of the present issue, the why being summed up in a desire to rescue from oblivion a narration of experiences that shall not only appeal to Wesleyans as a body, but to the members of the great family of Christendom at large, irrespective of sect or party, so that attention may be arrested and interest stimulated upon the question now raised on every side: "Is it possible for the departed to return?"

The Letters.

The letters themselves now claim our attention. The whole story was published by Rev. John Wesley over sixty years after the facts occurred, and as the narrative is confirmed by letters written during the time the events took place, and now published in this pamphlet, there is no room to cavil at the evidence presented.

The Facts

are comparatively in a small compass. On Dec. 1, 1715-16, strange noises, groans, knockings(?), "rappings," were heard at the Epworth parsonage. These things continued more or less for four months. At times a sound as if of a great sum of coin falling, then as if a man was planing wood; again, as of bottles being smashed, or of a large piece of coal being broken upon the floor, and the splinters flying all about, when actually none of these things took place. Once a presence was felt pushing against the person of one of the family. On one occasion the unseen intruder was said to have assumed some sort of animal form, but it evidently was able to understand not only what it was about itself, but what was said to it by others. It apparently had Jacobite leanings, as will be noted, and seemingly a sort of affection, or interest, in Miss Hetty Wesley. All this, and more besides, will be found stated in the ensuing pages.

The Import of It All.

Of course, our old friend, the inevitable cui bono, crops up again. What is the good of it all, even if true? At the first blush there may not appear much good in reviving an old and almost forgotten history of the kind embodied in these letters, but a careful consideration of the series leads almost irresistibly to the conclusion that these phenomena in the Wesley family, in 1716, were

A Prophecy of Modern Spiritualism, as it afterwards manifested itself in the Fox family, in Hydesville, in the state of New York, U. S. To any who have read Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill's remarkable work, "The Missing Link," which, as one of the three noted Fox sisters, she wrote, giving therein a full history of the beginnings of the modern spiritual movement, the parallels and similarities in the nature of the phenomena occurring in each case are so obvious and striking that one is amazed at the virtually abortive result in the one case, and the marvellous consequences in the other. In each case the families questioned their ghostly visitor, but the Fox family pressed the questions home with that persistence that ultimately led to the fact being established that the haunting in their house was done by a veritable being who had once existed as a man here, on earth. It, too, showed an intimate knowledge of the affairs and histories of many deceased persons, whose friends flocked to hear the strange sounds.

Had the Wesleys been fortunate enough to have cultivated their unseen visitor, he might have enabled them to establish in the quiet Lincolnshire parsonage the beginning of that marvellous upheaval of thought known as Modern Spiritualism. But presumably it was not so destined.

A Serious Question.

Do the departed ever return to earth? It is a serious question, this. History—sacred and profane alike—tradition, among tribes, families, and nations, all assert they do! It is no exaggeration to add also, that millions of sound, sane-minded people throughout the civilized world are willing to assert that they KNOW the departed do return. And you who may read these lines may, if you do not already possess that knowledge, also obtain it for yourself, for the path that others have trodden you may tread as well. But the main purpose of the present writer is to direct your attention to the fact that one of the most noted, pious, and pure-living families our land can boast of knew beyond a doubt, by practical experience, that the spirit-world did intervene in our world, and having such a sanction before you, we, as Spiritualists—the writer is a worker in the Cause for nearly forty years past, blest by the knowledge and comfort obtained—invites you to enquire into the matter and find that proof that shall vindicate your faith in a life hereafter, bring back the departed to your aching and empty heart, sustain you in the hour of bereavement, and give you a deeper trust in God, life, and immortality. Reader, John Wesley speaks; though dead, he liveth still! Read, mark, learn and inwardly digest what follows, and perchance you will in the end be willing to admit after all that Modern Spiritualism has a higher sanction and a greater use than you have hitherto believed. The sanction of truth, and the use of demonstrating faith, converting it into knowledge and blessing humanity by, in every truth, proving there is no death, but only life, for ever and for ever, for us all.

J. J. MORSE.

Letter I.—To Mr. Samuel Wesley, Jr., from His Mother.

Jan. 12, 1716-7.

Dear Sir: This evening we were agreeably surprised with your packet which brought the welcome news of your being alive, after we had been in the greatest panic imaginable, almost a month, thinking either you were dead, or one of your brothers by some misfortune had been killed.

The reason of our fears was as follows: On the first of December, our maid heard, at the door of the dining room, several dismal groans, like a person in extremes at the point of death. We gave little heed to her relation, and endeavored to laugh her out of her fears. Some nights (two or three) after, several of the family heard a strange knocking in divers places, usually three or four knocks at a time, and then stayed a little. This continued every night for a fortnight; sometimes it was in the garret, but most commonly in the nursery, or green chamber. We all heard it but your father, and I was not willing he should be informed of it lest he should fancy it was against his own death, which, indeed, we all apprehended. But when it began to be so troublesome, both day and night, that few or none of the family durst be alone, I resolved to tell him of it, being minded he should speak to it. At first he would not believe but somebody did it to alarm us; but the night after, as soon as he was in bed, it knocked loudly nine times, just by his bedside. He rose, and went to see if he could find out what it was, but could see nothing. Afterwards he heard it as the rest.

One night it made such a noise in the room over our heads, as if several persons were walking, then run up and down stairs, and was so outrageous that we thought the children would be frightened, so your father and I rose and went down in the dark to light a candle. Just as we came to the bottom of the broad stairs, having hold of each other, on my side there seemed as if somebody had emptied a bag of money at my feet; and on his, as if all the bottles under the stairs (which were many) had been dashed in a thousand pieces. We passed through the hall into the kitchen, and got a candle, and went to see the children, whom we found asleep.

The next night your father would get Mr. Hoole to lie at our house, and we all sat together till one or two o'clock in the morning, and heard the knocking as usual. Sometimes it made a noise like the winding up of a jack, at other times, as that night Mr. Hoole was with us, like a carpenter planing deals; but most commonly it knocked thrice and stopped, and then thrice again, and so many hours together. We persuaded your father to speak, and try if any voice would be heard. One night about six o'clock he went into the nursery in the dark, and at first heard several deep groans, then knocking. He adjured it to speak if it had the power, and tell him why it troubled his house, but no voice was heard, but it knocked thrice aloud. Then he questioned if it were Sammy, and bid it, if it were, and could not speak, knock again; but it knocked no more that night, which made us hope it was not against your death.

Thus it continued till the 28th of December, when it loudly knocked (as your father used to do at the gate) in the nursery, and departed. We have various conjectures what this may mean. For my own part I fear nothing now you are safe at London hitherto, and I hope God will still preserve you. Though sometimes I am inclined to think my brother is dead. Let me know your thoughts on it.

SUSANNAH WESLEY.

Letter II.—To My Father.

Saturday, Jan. 30, 1716-7.

Hon. Sir: My mother tells me a very strange story of disturbance in your house. I wish I could have some more particulars from you. I would thank Mr. Hoole if he would favor me with a letter concerning it. Not that I want to be confirmed myself in the belief of it, but for any other person's satisfaction. My mother sends to me to know my thoughts of it, and I cannot think at all of any interpretation. Wit, I fancy, may find many, but wisdom none.

Your dutiful and loving son, S. WESLEY, JR.

Letter III.—From Mr. S. Wesley, Jr., to His Mother.

Jan. 19. 1716-7.

Dear Mother: Those who are so wise as not to believe any supernatural occurrences, though ever so well attested, could find a hundred questions to ask about those strange noises you wrote me an account of; but for my part I know not what question to put, which, if answered, would confirm me more in the belief of what you tell me. Two or three have heard from others. Was there never a new maid or man in the house that might play tricks? Was there nobody above in the garrets when the walking was there? Did all the family hear it together when they were in one room, or at one time? Did it seem to be all in the same place at the same time? Could not cats, or rats, or dogs be the sprights? Was the whole family asleep when my father and mother went down stairs? Such doubts as these being replied to, though they could not, as God Himself assures, convince them who believe not in Moses and the prophets, yet would strengthen such as do believe. As to my particular opinion concerning the events foreboded by these noises, I cannot, I must confess, form any—I think, since it was not permitted to speak, all gueses must be vain. The end of spirits' action is yet more hidden than that of men, and even this latter puzzles the most subtle politicians. That we may be struck so as to prepare seriously for any ill, may, it is possible, be one design of providence. It is surely our duty and wisdom to do so.

Dear mother, I beg your blessing on your dutiful and affectionate son, S. WESLEY, JR.

I expect a particular account from everyone.

Letter IV.—From Mrs. Wesley to Her Son, Samuel.

Jan. 25 or 27, 1716-7.

Dear Sam: Though I am not one of those that will believe nothing supernatural, but am rather inclined to think there would be frequent intercourse between good spirits and us, did not our deep lapse into sensuality prevent it; yet I was a great while ere I could credit anything of what the children and servants reported concerning the noises they heard in several parts of our house. Nay, after I had heard myself, I was willing to persuade myself and them that it was only rats and weasels that disturbed us, and having been formerly troubled with rats, which were frightened away by sounding a horn, I caused a horn to be procured, and made them blow it all over the house. But from that night they began to blow, the noises were more loud and distinct, both day and night, than before, and that night we rose and went down. I was entirely convinced that it was beyond the power of any human creature to make such strange and various noises.

As to your questions, I will answer them particularly, but withal, I desire my answer may satisfy none but yourself, for I would not have the matter imparted to any. We had both man and maid new this Martinmas, yet I do not believe either of them occasioned the disturbance, both for the reason above mentioned, and because they were more affrighted than anybody else. Besides, we have often heard the noises when they were in the room by us; and the maid particularly was in such a panic that she was almost incapable of all business, nor durst ever go from one room to another, or stay by herself a minute after it began to be dark.

The man, Robert Brown, whom you well know, was most visited by it lying in garret, and has often been frighted down bare foot, and almost naked, not daring to stay alone to put on his clothes, nor do I think if he had the power he would be guilty of such villainy. When the walking was heard in the garret, Robert was in bed in the next room, in a sleep so sound that he never heard your father and me walk up and down, though we walked not softly, I am sure. All the family has heard it together, in the same room at the same time, particularly at family prayers. It always seemed to all present in the same place at the same time, though often before any could say it is here, it would remove to another place.

All the family, as well as Robin, were asleep when your father and I went down stairs, nor did they awake in the nursery when we held the candle close by them, only we observed that Hetty trembled exceedingly in her sleep, as she always did, before the noise awaked her. It was commonly nearer her than the rest, which she took notice of, and was much frightened, because she thought it had a particular spite at her. I could multiply particular instances, but I forbear. I believe your father will write to you about it shortly. Whatever may be the design of Providence in permitting these things, I cannot say. Secret things belong to God; but I entirely agree with you that it is our wisdom and duty to prepare seriously for all events.

SUSANNAH WESLEY.

Letter V.—Miss Susannah Wesley to Her Brother, Samuel.

Epworth, Jan. 24, 1716-7.

Dear Brother: About the first day of December a most terrible and astonishing noise was heard by a maid-servant, as at the dining-room door, which caused the up-starting of her hair, and made her ears prick forth at an unusual rate. She said it was like the groan of one expiring. These so frighted her, that for a great while she durst not go out of one room into another after it began to be dark without company. But to lay aside jesting, which should not be done in serious matters, I assure you that, from the first to the last a lunar month, the groans, squeaks, tinglings, and knockings were frightful enough.

Though it is needless for me to send you an account of what we all heard, my father himself having a larger account of the matter than I am able to give, which he designs to send you, yet, in compliance with your desire, I will tell you as briefly as I can what I heard of it. The first night I ever heard it, my sister, Nancy, and I were sat in the dining-room. We heard something rush on the outside of the doors that opened into the garden, then three loud knocks, immediately after another three, and in half a minute after another three, and in half a minute the same number over our heads. We inquired whether anybody had been in the garden, or in the room above us, but there was nobody. Soon after my sister, Molly, and I were up after all the family were a-bed, except sister Nancy, about some business. We heard three bouncing thumps under our feet, which soon made us throw away our work, and tumble into bed. Afterwards the tingling of the latch and warming-pan, and so it took its leave that night.

Soon after the above mentioned, we heard a noise as if a great piece of sounding metal was thrown down on the outside of our chamber. We, lying in the quietest part of the house, heard less than the rest for a pretty while; but the latter end of the night Mr. Hoole sat up, I lay in the nursery, where it was very violent. I then heard frequent knocks over and under the room where I lay, and at the children's bed-head, which was made of boards. It seemed to rap against it very hard and loud, so that the bed shook under them. I heard something walk to my bedside, like a man in a long night-gown. The knocks were so loud that Mr. Hoole came out of his chamber to us. It still continued. My father spoke, but nothing answered. It ended that night with my father's particular knock, very fierce.

It is now pretty quiet, only at our repeating the prayers for the king and prince, when it usually begins, especially when my father says, "Our most gracious Sovereign Lord," etc. This my father is angry at, and designs to say three instead of two for the royal family. We all heard the same noise, and at the same time, and as coming from the same place. To conclude this, it now makes its personal appearance; but of this more hereafter. Do not say one word of this to our folks, nor give the least hint.

I am your sincere friend and affectionate sister,

SUSANNAH WESLEY.

UNITY CAMP, WONEWOC, WIS.

Work of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and Others at the Camp.

To the Editor:—Mrs. Richmond, accompanied by her husband, left Chicago one week ago yesterday, July 11, the hottest day of the season. The railway train was crowded, the aisles of the cars were crowded with standing passengers, all the windows were open so the passengers had all the cinders and dust that they could get, with the mercury about 110, they all thought. Mrs. Richmond thought she had never had so much experience in the way of heat and dirt on so short a railway ride, six hours, before.

Arriving at Wonewoc, nestling in the Baraboo valley, about 3 p. m., she found the heat there nearly as oppressive as in the train. Just two blocks east of the railway station, the eastern limit of the town, there rises a perpendicular bluff of rocks 200 or more feet in height, and upon that height is situated Unity Camp in a grove of spruce, pine, oak and other trees. The height is a level plateau stretching eastward several miles. The camp is at the westward limit of the height. So one there looks right down upon the town of Wonewoc, across the Baraboo valley to hills away toward the setting sun. It is certainly an enchanting scene, often enhanced by unobscured views of glorious sunsets.

When Mrs. Richmond arrived at the camp she found it much cooler there, and the air was exquisitely delightful. She was met at the railroad station by Mrs. Spooner, of Wonewoc, Secretary of the Camp Association, who accompanied her to the camp grounds, where she was met by Mr. L. L. Pratt, the vice-president, and his wife, of Baraboo—called the father and mother of the camp, for their ceaseless work in making the visitors to camp comfortable and happy in every way. The president of the camp, Dr. C. W. Sanderson, a most genial gentleman, and indefatigable worker, was also present to welcome Mrs. Richmond, as was Mr. Frank T. Ripley, the chairman of the camp meeting, also one of its speakers and public message bearers. While he is full of fun and pleasantry, he is an efficient and dignified chairman. His lectures are all good and his messages bring comfort and conviction to all to whom they are given.

Mrs. Whitwell of St. Paul, Minn., was upon the grounds during the week and I think expects to remain during the camp. She is one of the speakers; she is a very charming lady, her lectures are very good, and full of the spirit of loving kindness. Last Sunday, Dr. Temple, of Chicago, arrived upon the grounds. Dr. Temple is a very fine test medium, all those whom I met who had had sittings with him were loud in his praise. On a number of occasions he gave public messages from the platform, which were recognized by their recipients and most convincing to the audience. Mrs. Niver, teacher of elocution at the Morris Pratt Institute, with her husband and mother, were upon the grounds. Everybody who knows anything about Mrs. Niver, knows of her ability as a teacher of elocution and oratory. She will stay upon the grounds during the camp meeting and arrange theatrical performances held in the auditorium each Friday evening.

Mrs. Niver is able to find more talent, mostly upon the grounds, as to give the audience a most splendd entertainment.

Arriving upon the grounds at the same time that Mrs. Richmond did were Dr. Russell and his wife, from Minneapolis. Dr. Russell is a unique personality, combining deep spiritual perceptions with a wide range of external knowledge and experience. His profession is some kind of a healer, although he is a graduate of a regular medical college; but he has gifts many. He is a splendid orator, and entertainer incomparable. It is worth a visit to Wonewoc just to meet Dr. Russell.

Dr. Manning, from Chicago, Psycho-Vital Healer, is also upon the ground. He is a young man with a beaming countenance, and his very presence is full of healing.

Later in the week "Auntie Hampton," of St. Louis, arrived with her guitar. All who attend the Spiritualistic camp meetings know Mrs. Hampton. She is one of the jolliest persons in the world, although well along in years, and her singing of negro melodies affords a rare entertainment to those who are privileged to listen to them. She entertained Wonewoc camp on several occasions the past week.

The dining room or "meal station" is clean and flyless. This very necessary department of the camp is conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Mattesen, who serve by far the best meals I have ever found at any camp dining room. The camp the past week here has been like a large and most harmonious family, not the least discord anywhere, and everybody present happy as can be from morning until night.

Mrs. Richmond found most appreciative audiences, which I consider great praise to them. It is needless to speak of Mrs. Richmond's addresses; all Spiritualists know more or less what they are, but to those who never heard her before they created a most profound impression. She gave six public addresses, assisted at the conferences and ministered to the people at several impromptu gatherings. Al the people here, feeling so uplifted by Mrs. Richmond's inspiration, insist upon her coming here next year.

Last evening Mrs. DeWolf-Kiser arrived upon the grounds. I think she is to stay during the rest of the meeting. Long live Unity Camp at Wonewoc. CORRESPONDENT.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Made for the Priesthood.

People should remember the Bible was never made for the populace, neither was it designed to be placed in their hands. It was too sacred for the vulgar eye. Luther, until 21, had never seen a copy, though qualifying for the priesthood. God had declared his will, and had placed his book in the hands of his servants, the clergy, whose duty consisted in expounding its teachings to the people.

The Protestant reformers succeeded after protracted strife, in wresting the fetish from Catholic hands, and it became still more sacred with them, and it has continued such to the present time.

Catholic prelates have discovered in late years the Bible can be used with advantage in propagating their faith, so have withdrawn their hostility to its general circulation.

At first it was supposed the special texts introduced to foster Popedom, such at Matthew 16:18, 19, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee [Peter] the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

In these texts are found full support for all the infamous claims the Inquisition set up. Protestants, in accepting the book as inerrant and divine have indorsed to the letter all the damnable claims of Popedom; not only the Inquisitorial fires and the sale of criminal indulgences, but the confessional and every other infernal device bad men could concoct to retain power.

A Theocratic Government.

Old Testament literature introduces its readers to a theocracy, a government by God. The priest is his earthly representative, and directs its policy. When in full swing Moses was God's vicegerent, and Joshua was his mouth-piece.

The church which labored so hard a few years ago to get God in the American constitution and so far succeeded as to stamp him on the coin, were trying to substitute a theocracy in place of a government by the people. Should they succeed everything would be run in the interest of the church. Not only would their places of worship be exempt from taxation, but the salaries of the preachers would be paid out of the public treasury. Only churchmen would be elected to office, serve on juries, or allowed to testify in courts of justice. What was true throughout Christendom 200 years ago would be revived, and, doubtless the Inquisition, with all its horrors would be revived.

Impossible, says the reader. Just what the priesthood are contending for under false pretenses. Their success is contingent on their ability to colonize this country with "undesirable citizens" of Southern Europe.

Spiritualism Opened the Door.

Death, viewed from a natural standpoint, is a closed door, beyond which all is sorrow, gloom and doubt. That door, opened wide, reveals sunny skies, the loved and lost, with visions of eternal hope. Spiritualism opened that door.

The Exterminated Phenicians,

(No. 4.)

Originally, so far as authoritative history furnishes information, the Penicians occupied all that country east of the Mediterranean to the Libanian mountains, on the south to Arabia-Petrea, and north to a not well-defined locality above Sidon. Its length north and south was about 200 miles, and its average width was some 35 miles. Little can be learned of its original inhabitants; but historians find the Phenicians were in possession from 2,600 to 2,700 years before our era. The native habitat of the intruders was the elevated plateau east of the Persian Gulf, of which the present Shiraz was the probable center. Akkad, Chaldea, Persia, Babylonia, Assyria and Egypt, all of the black-haired family, were remotely connected with the same race. We may resume this subject again.

The Phenicians were a remarkable people. Beside having the credit of inventing letters, and being the founders of commerce, and the pioneer miners, they seem to have led all other countries in establishing colonies, traces of whose labors remain to our time. The islands of the Great Sea, with Carthage, Hippo, Marseilles and Utica were peopled from Phenicia, while they were a large intermixture with Iberians of Spain. Without a compass the circumnavigated Africa, and had populous mining colonies in the Central South of Africa, whose wonderful ruins still remain and have been explored within the last few years.

Full of adventure these people coasted along the Northern Atlantic, explored Sicily islands west of the British channel, were the first to discover the British islands, opened the tin mines of Cornwall, and left their features, wit, and a portion of their language in Wales and Ireland. The latter was colonized from Carthage.

As before stated, the Phenicians used the same language, employed the same characters in writing and practiced the same customs credited to the Jews, even to exercising with the sling. Mothers, we are told, hung their son's breakfast on trees and would not allow them to eat until brought down by use of the national weapon.

Says Prof. Rawlinson in his Story of Phenicia, pages 28, 29:

"The Temple was the center of attraction in each city of Phenicia, and the piety of the inhabitants adorned each Temple with abundance and costly offerings. The kings were zealous in maintaining the honor of the gods, repaired and beautified the sacred buildings, and not unfrequently discharged the office of High Priest. Both they, and their subjects, bore, for the most part religious names [a peculiarity of the so-called Jews], names which were regarded as placing them under the protection of some deity. Wherever they went they carried with them their religion and worship, and were careful to erect in each colony a Temple or Temples, similar to those which adorned the cities of their own country. * * * Originally the Phenicians would seem to have been monotheists, and to have possessed a lofty idea of the Great Power which had created and ruled the world. * * * They regarded Him as wholly distinct from matter, and believed Him to have brought into existence all other beings, and all material things."

Rawlinson goes on to say that at a later period other gods were invented or imported into Phenicia, "ONE OF WHOM WAS REPRESENTED AS THE SON OF EL." [God.]

El was the Hebrew name used throughout the Old Testament for God. It enters everywhere into proper names as Elihu, God-Jehovah, Elijah, the same; Elisha, God, the Deliverer; Ezekiel, the strength of God, and thus on as a prefix or suffix to hundreds of names; but the astonishing fact that El, the Great God, in Phenicia, had a Son! This fact is omitted in the Old Testament. The truth is apparent that the monks, in adapting Phenician history to their needs as a history of the mythical Jews, everywhere doctored it as far as they were capable.

On page 37 Rawlinson tells us the Phenicians, as the Jews are represented to have done, "offered human sacrifices in time of public calamity." He says: "On one grave-stone do we find a hope of a future existence in the curt phrase, "After rain the sun shines."

We are unwilling to conclude these quotations from Rev. Geo. Rawlinson, professor of Ancient History in the University of Oxford, without adding from page 38:

"The Phenicians were the first systematic traders, the first miners, and metallurgists, the greatest colonizers —while elsewhere despotism overshadowed as with a pall the whole Eastern world, they could boast of a form of government approaching to constitutionalism."

This was probably the period in which pseudo Israel was pretendedly under rule of the Judges.

Rawlinson, continuing:— "Of all the nations of their time the Phenicians stood the highest in practical arts and science. They were masons, carpenters, shipbuilders, weavers, dyers, glass-blowers, workers in metal, navigators, discoverers beyond all others. If not actually the first inventors of letters, they so improved on the mode of writing that their system has been adopted, with suffixes, and a few additions, for the whole civilized world; they were the first to confront the dangers of the open ocean in their strong-built ships, the first to steer by the polar star, the first to make known to civilized nations the remoter regions of Asia, Africa, and Europe; they surpassed the Greeks in enterprise, in perseverence, and in industry; at a time when brute force was worshiped as the main source of power and only basis of national repute. They succeeded in showing that as much fame might be won, as much glory obtained, as real a power constructed by arts as by arms, by the peaceful means of manufacture, trade and commerce, as by the violent and bloody ones of war, massacre and conquest."

The truth is, Phenicia, her colonies and commerce were in the way of Rome. The latter was ambitious to rule the world by force, and could not succeed which such an active, energetic and industrious people occupied nearly all the islands of the Mediterranean, and many of the great cities bordering thereon. Her destruction was determined upon.

We strongly suspicion the war of Titus on the Jews was in fact waged on Phenicia insead of Jerusalem. The Punic wars were prosecuted much of the time for more than a century, the purpose to crush the Phenician colony of Carthage and wrest from them Sicily. Cato, in the Roman senate, declared Carthage the most formidable rival of the empire, and without regard to the subject under discussion, he never closed an address without adding: "It is my opinion Carthage must be destroyed."

The Romans had the mean habit of belittling a power with which she was at war. We might illustrate with many examples, but we hasten.

When the Council of Nice had decided the teachings of Arius—that "There was a time when Jesus was not; that by his freedom of will he was capable of virtue or of vice, and that he was a created being," was a heresy, the Emperor Constantine, credited with presiding at that Council, to demean Arius, issued an edict declaring persons holding such views shall be called Porphyrians, that Arius should cease to be known. He was afterwards assassinated. Were not the Phenicians similarly ignored, and the insignificant Jews, if there were such a people, substituted in their place? To debase them the more they are designated by vulgar Christians as "God-killers."

Though the world is largely indebted to the Phenicians for its enlightenment, yet, deceived by monkish historians, they are positively ignorant of their own early history, and are bearing a reproachful name, which by worthy lives they have ennobled; while Christians in turn, through all the period of their own existence, have made these worthy and exemplary people the target of hate, persecution, and, in some countries, of slaughter.

Better Than a Mythical Hell.

A resolution was introduced at the recent session of the Wisconsin Federation of Labor, at Fond du Lac, that Harry Orchard, the multiple murderer, recently sentenced to imprisonment for life, "be transported to the world of Hades, so no more foul plots can be contemplated as have stained the grounds of Idaho and Colorado."

The Progressive Thinker protests. Orchard deserves a more substantial punishment than confinement in a mythical hell If it can be determined by any process the wretch has a conscience, then shut him up in a solitary cell one day each week during the residue of his mortal life, to contemplate his crime. As he is a believer in an orthodox hell, furnish him a Tract Society's publication, of upwards of sixty years ago, telling of "The Eternity of Hell Torments." Believed, and absolved from church teaching that "Jesus paid it all," then the assassin will get all the hell he needs, if favored with a long life

A Glorious Opportunity.

The New York Sun lately reported, "Outside a second-hand bookstore, not far from the old building of the College of the City of New York, there is a large three-shelved case, full of shabby-looking volumes. Above it this sign is displayed: 'CLEARANCE SALE OF THEOLOGY—5 cents each; 6 for 25 cents'."

There is a chance of a life-time for the clergy who preach "what the church instructs them to teach, not what they believe," to stock up on good Christian literature. The Progressive Thinker, inspired by its knowledge of the past, can make a good catalogue of the books there advertised, "5 cents, 6 for 25 cents."

In some localities such books are sold by the yard, cartage thrown in.

Ye moss-backs: Now is your time to stock up in genuine Christian literature.

Everybody Posted.

"I'se been a sinnah,' vouchsafed a recently converted brother during an experience meeting in Ebenezer chapel. "A heenyus, low-down, contaminated sinnah for lo dese many yeahs, and never knowed it."

"Don' let dat molest yo', Brudder Newcome," spoke up a sympathetically inclined deacon. "De rest of us knowed it all de time."

Absorbing Spiritualism.

The secular press and magazines throughout the whole of this country are gradually absorbing Spiritualism. There is not a magazine of any prominence but has articles occasionally on Occult and Spiritualistic subjects. While the secular press and monthlies are discussing these questions, the various religious sects are feeling the influence of Spirit Return, and within thirty-five years will have completely absorbed all that now exists of true Spiritualism, leaving no further necessity for taking care of the same as a distinct body. The following from the scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, in Harper's Magazine for August, shows the drift of the current:

When it comes to proof of surviving existence and of memory beyond the tomb, we are bound to discount the witness of anything that is in our own minds; or, as some think, in the mind of any living person.

Thus is the difficulty of incontrovertible proof of identity enormously increased. Even when the evidence enables a hidden thing to be discovered, of which no one living possessed the secret,—as in Swedenborg's discovery of the dead burgomaster's private papers—deferred telepathy is sometimes adduced as preferable to what must then seem to most, as it did to Swedenborg, the only rational explanation.

How then can we ever, by any means, hope to prove identity? I reply:

(a). By cross-correspondence.

(b) By information or criteria characteristic of the supposed intelligence, and if possible in some sense new to the world.

Cross-correspondence—that is, the reception of part of a message through one medium and part through another—is good evidence of one intelligence dominating both automatists. And if the message is characteristic of some one particular deceased person, and is received through people to whom he was not intimately known, then it is fair proof of the continued intellectual activity of that personality. If further we get from him a piece of literary criticism which is eminently in his vein and has not occurred to ordinary people—not to either of the mediums, and not even to the literary world,—but which on consideration is appreciated as sound as well as characteristic criticism, showing a familiar and wide knowledge of the poetry of many ages, and unifying apparently disconnected passages in some definite way, —then I say the proof, already striking, would tend to become crucial.

These, then, are the kinds of proof at which the society is aiming.

So long as communications consisted of general conversations with what purported to be the surviving intelligence of certain friends and investigators, we were by no means convinced of their identity, even though the talk was of a friendly and intimate character—such as in normal cases would be considered amply and overwhelmingly sufficient for the identification of friends speaking, let us say, through a telephone or a typewriter. We required definite and crucial proof—a proof difficult even to imagine, as well as difficult to supply.

The ostensible communicators realize the need of such proof just as fully as we do, and are doing their best to satisfy the rational demand. Some of us think they have already succeeded; others are still doubtful.

On the whole, I am of those who, though they would like to see further and still stronger and more continued proofs, are of opinion that a good case has been made out, and that as the best working hypothesis at the present time it is legitimate to grant that lucid moments of intercourse with deceased persons may in the best cases supervene; amid a mass of supplementary material, quite natural under the circumstances, but mostly of a presumably subliminal and less evident kind. * * * Puzzling and weird occurrences have been vouched for among all nations and in every age. It is possible to relegate a good many asserted occurrences to the domain of superstition, but it is not possible thus to eliminate all. Nor is it likely that in the present stage of natural knowledge we are acquainted with all the workings of the human spirit and have reduced them to such commonplace that everything capable of happening in the mortal and psychical region is of a nature readily and familiarly to be understood by all. Yet there are many who seem practically to believe in this improbability, and although they are constrained from time to time to accept novel and surprising discoveries in biology, in chemistry, and in physical science generally, they seem tacitly to assume that these are the only parts of the universe in which discovery is possible, all the rest being already too well known.

It is simple faith, and does credit to their own capacity for belief—belief not only unfounded upon knowledge, but belief tenable only in the teeth of a great mass of evidence to the contrary.

It is always a pity to unsettle minds thus fortified against the intrusion of unwelcome facts, for their strong faith is probably a salutary safeguard against that unbalanced and comparatively dangerous condition called "open-mindedness," which is ready to learn and investigate anything not manifestly self-contradictory and absurd. Without people of the solid, assured, self-satisfied order, the practical work of the world would not so efficiently be done.

But few such people will take the trouble to read this article, and I may therefore safely ignore them; for it is intended to indicate the possibility that discoveries of the very first magnitude can still be made—are indeed in process of being made—by strictly scientific methods, in the region of psychology; discoveries quite comparable in importance with those which have been made during the last century in physics and biology, but discoveries whose opportunities for practical application and usefulness will similarly have to remain for some time in the hands of experts, since they cannot be miscellaneously absorbed or even apprehended by the multitude without danger.

A GERMAN LUTHERAN MEDIUM.

Many Remarkable Manifestations of Spirit Power.

To the Editor:—As leader of the Washington Union Spiritual Society, and teacher of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism, I would like to give to the reader of your paper a few experiences we have enjoyed in the developing class I am conducting in this city.

While I have had in my class a number of highly sensitive mediums through whom many fine messages of a very convincing nature have been given, and many physical manifestations of a very high order, there is one sensitive in particular that I wish to mention.

The lady I am going to tell you about is a German Lutheran; her husband a Catholic. They first became interested through messages given over the Ouija Board. The first seance they sat in, no manifestations, but the third, the lady, Mrs. R.—saw clairvoyantly, her father, and a niece. She was very much exercised. They had never seen anything of the kind before, and as it was so wonderful to them, they could not understand why or how she saw them. Her husband had been troubled with stomach trouble for twenty years, and could get no relief whatever. A message from the niece saying, "If you continue to sit we will cure you and make you well and happy," encouraged them to come again. The third sitting Mrs. R.—became frightened and said a big Indian stood by her husband, and she was afraid of Indians, so I explained to her that Indian spirits made very good conditions, especially for those who were ill, and were often instrumental in helping to throw off the disturbing conditions. She said, "Yes, he is down on his knees now, looking into my husband's stomach."

I then said, "Watch him, and he will give you directions how to heal the stomach.

She then saw him drinking and to show her it was cold water, he stood by a pump and she said she saw as plain as life the water pouring out of the pump into the cup.

After that they sat for the Indian, and through his directions Mr. R.—was completely cured of stomach trouble he had had for twenty years.

The fourth night she sat, while our hands were on the table, Mrs. R—said, "Some one is trying to pull my chair from the table," and then she was pulled back three feet from the table by invisible hands, and then we asked them to bring her back and in trying to do so they tipped her off the chair.

Then they called for a cabinet for her to sit in. We arranged one in my seance room, and to do away with holding hands I used a copper wire, passing it around the circle and each end into the cabinet, to the medium. After sitting for awhile I asked the guide to bring her medium out of the cabinet. Her little guide, who gave her name as Fairy Face, said, "I Can't, Mrs. Smith." Then the medium came out of the trance and said: "Mrs. Smith, I am all wound up in the wire."

We turned on the lights, opened the cabinet, and there she was, hands tied together and tied to the chair so tight we could not untie her without cutting the wire, so the spirit guide said, "Drop the curtain and we will untie her."

We did so, and in less than thirty seconds she was untied. I afterwards took the lady on my platform, and with a black cloth over her they tied her so tight with a copper wire there wasn't a man in the hall that would try to untie her, so we threw the cloth over her again, and with a black ribbon across her lap we asked them to tie it while she was still bound with the wire. In three minutes she threw the curtain off, still tied, and the black ribbon was tied in a bow around her neck, with her ring on it, and in six minutes she was up with the ends of the wire in her hands, the ribbon off her neck, and the ring on her finger.

Mrs. R.—, myself and another lady that sat in my class, went to a photographer to have our pictures taken together. The lady that took our pictures was a Scandinavian, did not even know we were mediums or Spiritualists. When I got the picture, after it was finished I looked at it very closely, thinking perhaps, one of our loved ones might have gotten their face on the card, but could distinguish nothing. The picture had sat on my piano for over a month, when a strange lady, not a Spiritualist, who was looking at the picture, said: Mrs. Smith, did you notice the face here by Mrs. R.? I said I had not, so she lined it out for me, and there as plain as our faces was the dear little Indian face, that had figured so conspicuously in our cabinet. Hundreds have looked at the picture since, and all are convinced it is a spirit face. There are also other spirit faces, but none so plain as this one.

I afterwards went to the photographer, and she said she had not noticed it, so we got the plate and there was the face on the plate. Now this is perfect spirit photography and it is plain to see.

I have many other fine mediums sitting in my class, but this one has outrivaled them all.

Spiritualism is gaining ground in Spokane, and many brilliant minds are investigating the beautiful truth.

Of course we have several working here under the name of Spiritualism that are certainly detrimental to the cause. One lady in particular, who claims to be a spirit healer or clairvoyant, and when the sick go to her to be healed, she tells them they are covered with snakes, and proceeds to pull the snakes off of them, and throw them out of the window. She also claims Jesus Christ is her control, but at one of her Sunday night meetings, when she became very angry at certain members of her class, she used language that would not look well in print, so several of her followers concluded Jesus had changed wonderfully since his journey on earth during the Bible times. Such conditions as these tend to cast a dark reflection on the cause.

The Transition from Earth to Spirit Life.

As Viewed by a Spirit Who Has Passed Through the Change.

The following message was written by the spirit of Hiram Witkop, a brakeman on the G. R. & I. R. R., who was killed in a collision near Cadillac, on Sept. 23, 1901. It was given through the mediumship of Miss Dollie Williams, of Walton, Traverse county, Michigan, Oct. 7, 1901.

The Message.

My passing out of the body was an easy matter. I realized it. I wanted to speak, but something seemed to seal my lips until almost the last. Mother and father and many other dear ones were in the room and helped me out into a more clear atmosphere as soon as I was free, although I was drawn back three times before becoming absolutely free from my body. Every time I heard your sobs. Each time I saw a small cord or thread still fastened to the body I was trying to get away from. The third time I was drawn to my body I took hold of the thread with both hands to break it. It broke so easily one would think it made of ether. Yet there was sufficient strength to almost hold me a prisoner for a time. When my own will power destroyed those conditions, I could go where father and mother led. It seemed as though I never wanted to leave them. There was something so peaceful in their presence, and everywhere they led seemed filled with light and illumination. We must have gone many miles, yet there seemed but little time consumed in our journeys. We came to an arch-like opening and on passing through it I was dazed by the brilliancy which confronted me. We have heard and sung of the stories of paradise, and I began to feel I had found one. Overcome by such magnificence, I could do nothing but stand and wonder—no desire to move forward—spellbound by the beauty surrounding me. I drank in and absorbed strength and peacefulness from all about me.

Had I ever suffered? No. Had I ever known pain or sorrow? No. All the years of the past were swallowed in the indescribable pleasure of the present. Those moments of exhilarating can never be forgotten. They have paid for all earthly pain and grief ever mine.

Standing there I watched a happy throng moving quietly around, all faces wreathed in perfect peace and happiness. Each expression seemed strengthened with an interest in some one or something. Many of these beautiful souls turned and kindly bowed to me, and as they passed I caught the vibration of their thoughts, saying: "Another wanderer coming home. Welcome; welcome; there is room for all." As I stood there growing more in harmony with my surroundings I saw mother step out into the throng and draw a young woman toward her, saying as they approached me, "We have brought him." It did not take long for brother and sister to be clasped in each other's arms, for I recognized the approaching form as that of our Irene. For the first time I showed signs of weakness and sobbed like a child, forgetting the scenes of beauty and sense of joy for the moment. Regaining my self-possession, I unclasped my arms from around our sister, gently pushing her from me and surveyed her from head to foot. Such a lovely form, with beautiful chiseled features, and eyes that spoke unto your soul the sentiment of truest love. The silence was soon broken by her saying, "Come, brother; we knew you were coming and have prepared a sweet resting place for you." We then joined the throng of passing souls, and Tena informed me that many of them were upon the same mission, going to meet their loved ones who would be brought to some of the entrances. As we passed on we caught glimpses of many meetings similar to our own, and while to me there appeared to be several hundred souls moving or gliding as we were, there was not the slightest confusion. After having gone what may have been a mile or two we left the bright new world, to pass into another. While the former seemed one glad illuminated thoroughfare of beautiful park joining beautiful park, this one was dotted with lovely buildings of home-like nature. The green sward beneath our feet, studded here and there with fragrant flowers; the branches over head inviting us to look upward to see beyond and above a sky of indescribable magnificence, filled my heart with unutterable joy, and again the tears began to flow.

These were quickly dispelled by my attention being drawn to two beautiful youths, so much alike that one would almost think them both the same, but when both reached out their hands and called forth, "Welcome, brother," I perceived they were my sisters, no longer as when I saw them last, but still my sisters. Each one took me by the hand and turned my footsteps towards the entrance from whence they came. There I beheld a home beautiful beyond description, where mother and father and our loved ones dwell. Indeed they had prepared for my coming, and I did find sweet rest as they led me to a cosy room and left me to myself. When alone I fell asleep. How long I slumbered I know not, but on my awakening I found my sisters around me, and felt as though I had returned to youth.

The spell was soon broken as father stepped up to me and told me I was now wanted on earth. He turned to go, and we all felt ourselves gently gliding after him, until we left all previously described scenes behind. We drew near a great forest. As I gazed upon those gigantic trees a drowsiness overcome me and I became unconscious. When I regained consciousness I was in my earth home where family, friends and neighbors had gathered around the casket, which held my mortal body. Oh! how horrible it appeared to me. How I wanted to tell them it was not I, that I was there in a form far superior to the one they gazed upon and sobbed over. I stepped up to Mabel and spoke to her wishing to assure her of my presence, but she heard me not. One by one I touched you all without effect, until I came to Kate. As I laid my hand upon her shoulder she did not hear me but a shudder ran through her entire form. How I longed to have her know she sensed my thought but understood it not.

Then all was silent. I heard you speak of me as gone, and I saw my railroad brothers pay their last respect to a departed comrade. How I tried to have them understand that I had not departed from their midst, that I was there hearing, seeing, knowing all. Again the sobs broke forth from my family, and again I became unconscious, to awaken just in time to see them laying flowers on the mound that covered the shell from which I slipped out. I felt an inclination to follow my loved ones home, and started to do so. Father stepped up to me, laid his hand on my shoulder and said: "My son, 'tis better that you come with us, for you are much fatigued and need rest. Like a child I followed where he led, until I found myself once more in the haven of rest. There I reflected on the past, and saw more of my future. There are many things I wish to speak of, but father is still my guide and bids me wait and go with him; yet I know I will return and give you other messages.

With love to all my earthly friends, I am still Your loving husband and brother, HIRAM.

Fraudulent Mediums.

I must relieve my mind in regard to fraudulent mediums. It seems to me preposterous that they can be allowed to move about in society at all. I think they ought to be driven out of the field. They are diabolically wicked, and serving their master, the Devil, and ought to be severely dealt with. Besides their duplicity in deceiving, and cheating the people out of their money, they are causing a great deal of the trouble which worthy mediums are subjected to, in the shape of suspicion, misjudgment, heavy fines, and even imprisonment. It is a despicable shame!

I know that true mediums, although their mission is a great and glorious one, freighted with much of happiness and real satisfaction, are nevertheless often accompanied with sufferings. They should be protected, upheld, and sustained in their heaven-born calling. To sensitive souls, almost everything on earth is painful. I know, because of my close relationship to that class. Somewhere I have read a poem commencing, "To the soul who feels the Immortal, this life is a terrible thing"!

The Rival Giants.

A Scholarly Dissertation Historically Tracing the Origin and Significance of the Titles Applied to Pagan, Hebrew and Christian Deities, and Hell, Devil, Etc.

By Judge Parish B. Ladd.

Far back in the morn of time, when the lamp of Christian thought burned low, a sanguinary war raged among the gods in heaven, where two powerful giants led the contending legions. Beelzebub, defeated, fled to earth, in the bowels of which he established new headquarters, while Jehovah reposed on his laurels. Never daunted, Diablos renews the contest, this time on earth for the capture of souls, where the Devil alone, fights the powers of heaven, aided by a powerful priesthood. Success, so far, perches on the banner of Satan.

This terrible war in heaven first appeared in the writings ascribed to Zoroaster, the father of Magianism, from whence the writer of Revelation borrowed all his information, telling the story in brief, and adding more about the strange beasts, all from Magianism.

More has been said and less known of these two giants than of any other men the world ever produced.

Part I. will be devoted to the history of Jehovah, who is generally reputed to be the sole god of the Hebrews and the deus primus of the Christians, i. e., the first in rank. Part II. will be devoted to the rise of the Devil and his domicile.

At the threshold let it be said, as all Christians know, that the principal business of these two men, as rivals, has ever been soul catchers, with great odds in favor of the latter.

When characters whose lives and doings are so much talked of as these are, some knowledge of their times and origin becomes indispensable to a polite education.

As to the origin of Jehovah—or, better say, the name and nativity—there is some diversity of opinion as to whether he was an Egyptian, or a Phenician, or even a Babylonian. I once thought the name was of Egyptian origin, but after more thorough research, I have come to believe it comes from the god Adonis of Phenicia.

The word Jehovah, in its full dress, was not given to the world until the fifth century of our era, although its derivation goes back to, at least, 444 B. C. E., possibly some 400 years earlier, if it be of Egyptian origin. The Hebrews have no record of it before Ezra read to his people the Thora, at the ruins of Jerusalem, 444 B. C. E., which he brought from Babylon. Then it appeared in consonantal characters, in a much abbreviated form, such as Jhvh, Jhwh, Jabe, Jao, Jahweh, Yahveh, Yahweh, Iahveh.

If the Hebrew vowels were known to the priesthood at that time they were not in use in the sacred writings of that people, but withheld from them.

At an early date, not long after the return from captivity, the words Jhvh and Jhwh were filled in with vocalic points belonging to the word Ad-on-Ai; an indistinct e being substituted for short a; what its original vowels were is unknown. The scribes in the rendition of this word made it read Lord. In time the word Lord, meaning a civil ruler, was rendered God. Adonai was originally the chief god of the Phenicians, afterwards imported into Egypt where he became one of the leaders in the Egyptian pantheon.

Thus it will be seen that the Hebrew priest, by so rendering this word secured the Lord God of the Christians from the pagan god of the Phenicians. The Greek church fathers gave the form Jbe, Jao, Jah and Jahwe as traditional, pronounced Yahweh, coming from the verb hawah, or hajah, signifying "to be," generally translated "he will cause to be," or "he will cause to come to pass."

The older interpreters explain the verb I am he who really am. The tendency of modern exegesis is to read it, "I will be what I will be."

As to the date of the word Jehovah, some scholars carry it back to Egypt, give it an early date, and make him the storm god. Here we meet Francis H. Underwood, a good Egyptologist wearing a Christian cloak, who, in his "True Story of the Exodus of Israel" (the story of a pure romance), compiled from the work of Dr. Henry Brugsch-Bey, says "Aukh was a sungod of sucket, designated as he who lives, is the same as Jehovah of the Hebrews. On this flimsy reed, and on the assumption that the Hebrews were in Egypt, as told in the Bible, he builds up the theory that Jehovah was of Egyptian origin, or at least, this name came from that country.

On more thorough research and finding the Hebrews were not in Egypt, as told in the Bible, I find myself forced to reject the belief that the name Jehovah was of Egyptian origin.

As I find neither the name Jehovah, nor a trace of its philological germs, in Babylon, I must look elsewhere for it. Where shall that be? In Palestine, not elsewhere, then I must say. From out the land of Canaan, on the billow-washed shores of Phenicia, Jahveh came forth to christen the birth of the beni Israel; a little later to gather under his protecting wings the ten tribes of El; still later to throw his imperial mantle over benighted Christendom, where, as the Deus Primus of the celestial triad, his sovereignty will remain undisputed until the last rays of the setting sun of ignorance and superstition have gone down to return no more; then will the bones of Jahveh mingle with those of extinct pagan gods to bleach on the shores of eternity.

Whether this name Jehovah was in use among the Hebrews before the captivity, we have no sufficient evidence. If I am allowed to speculate on probabilities, the name may have originated at the time David consolidated ten tribes, of the lost sheep of El. At any rate the name disappeared, and was lost during the exile, when the remaining tribes worshiped indiscriminately the pagan gods around them.

Four hundred and fifty years before our common era, Ezra found on his return from exile, or if born in Babylon, on his first entry into Jerusalem, his people engaged in the worship of all the gods of Palestine; among whom Adonai, or Adonius, occupied the highest place in the affections of the Phenicians and Hebrews.

If Iahveh had at any time before the exile been the god of Israel this name was lost or suspended during that period, both as to the Hebrews in exile and those still in Palestine; nor was this name restored until Ezra, 444 B. C. gave it to his people with the decalogue, from the ruin of Jerusalem; a name that was destined to pilot ten tribes in their future course of life over the inhospitable shores set everywhere with Christian foes.

The Israelites while in Babylon worshiped Elohim in the singular, who was the Deus Primus of the pantheon of the Elohim. We read in the Book of the Seers and Prophets how Elohim created the world in six days. Later the Bible in a second account, assigns this task to Iahveh. As this name appears in conjunction with Elohim in the account that was brought from Babylon, some scholars have been led to believe it to have been of Babylonian origin. But as this name has never been found among the writings of that country, or from other trustworthy sources, its origin must be looked for elsewhere.

A few Egyptologists have asserted that the name as aforesaid is of Egyptian origin. These assertions rest on the belief of the story of the Exodus, which is now known to be untrue, and on the fact that there has been found on the Egyptian monuments, the words: "I am all that is," which, it is said, mean the same as the Biblical words, "I am," being used in both cases to designate one supreme being. But we can most readily see that this alone is too frail a piece of evidence on which to predicate such a conclusion. As the Hebrews, as a people were never in Egypt, why should the name Ihveh, come from there? A people who make their own gods, or adopt ready-made ones, naturally prefer their own land as the source of their nativity. At all events the Hebrews now swear by the name Jehovah. We must find, if possible, his birth place.

On the return from captivity the Hebrews residing at Moab were not only in love with the women of the Moabites, but with their Deus Primus, Chemosh, while the majority residing at Phenicia were followers of the god Adonai.

It is quite certain that the Hebrews on their return from captivity, if not before the exile, adopted the Phenician language, i. e., the court dialect, which eventually became the sacred tongue of the Levitical priesthood and by them called Hebrew, leaving the common people to speak the language of the tribes around them, which, at the north was Aramean. Most scholars of to-day agree that the insertion of vowel points between the consonants, Ihyh, so as to make the name Jehovah are not the original ones that came from the old Hebrew, which renders it Adonai, not Jehovah.

The ancient Hebrews deeming the name of their good too sacred to be pronounced, inserted wrong vowel points to make the name Adonai read Lord, meaning any ruler. This word being rendered god has given to the Hebrews their Jehovah. When the masoretic text Ihvh, was given its vowel points, its rendition was Adonay, but pronounced Elohim, which was done to hide from the common people the new divinity. With all the confusion between the spelling and pronunciation, the names Adonai and Jehovah continued to run parallel until the fifth century, C. E., when the confusion was cleared up by the free use of vowel points, which, for the first time, gave Jehovah to the world. (See Huntington's Letters, also Hader, Reland, ,et al.) Maimonides says only a few Levite priests knew the meaning of the consonanted text which came down from tradition; they agreed on the name and filled in the vowels to fit their new god, Jehovah. Some Greek writers say this name comes from Jao, some Samaritans render it Iabe. The rendition of Jao or Iabe was deemed correct by Clemens, Origen, Irenaeus, Jerome, et al., but the Gnostics used Iaw for the Hebrew divinity.

Sellerman of Berlin, and the Oracle of Apollo, used by Marcrobis, trace this name to the sun, as with all the pagan peoples, as to their deus primus.

Thus it will be seen that the Hebrew and Christian supreme god, as with all the pagan peoples, is none other than our great solar orb. That the Hebrews adopted the Phenician god, Adonai, and changed the name when written in full to Jehovah, there is little room for doubt. Adon, sometimes abbreviated from Adonay or Adonia, was often used by the Phenicians for sovereign master, and, as god.

The Hebrews used the word in the same sense. (Josh. iii., 13; Exod. xxiii., 17.) It is also used in the plural, as was Elohim in Babylon. When used in the form Adonius, he is the son of Cinysus and Medani of Phenicia; but Heriod makes him the son of an Assyrian king by his own daughter. The Vulgate gave Adonius as a rendering of Tammuz, thus tracing his pedigree to Assyria, where he was the deus primus of Zoroaster. Tammuz, in Egypt, was Oriris, who was a form of the sun, said to be an incarnation of that luminary. (See Lucian, Selden and Creuger.)

From whatever source we attempt to trace the name Jehovah, he is but another name for our great solar orb.

On Ezra's return to Jerusalem as aforesaid he found his people worshiping the gods of Canaan, where Adonai was chief. To get rid of this pagan god, he changed the name Adonia to Jhvh, which he told his people were one and the same. It was not until later, and then by slow degrees, that vowel points were filled in, so as to give a different name, first as Adonia, Lord. Nor was the Masoretic text Jhvh settled until the fifth century, C. E., when for the first time, Jehovah appeared to the world in full dress.

Here we have the country and proximate time of the birth of the Hebrew god and deus primus of the Christians, a Phenician by birth, with a pedigree running back to our great solar orb, the same as all other pagan divinities.

The Devil and His Habitat.

Having found the historical source of God, let us now have that of the Devil and hell. I shall here assume that the readers of this diversified article have heard of the other man—the Devil and his summer resort; possibly, some of them in their younger days have had a surfeit of both; but as to the historical source of these matters, it may be quite a new thing, for it has ever been to the interest of the priesthood to keep their votaries in ignorance of the true source of their religion—it being forbidden fruit.

What I shall here say of these matters will be from a purely historical standpoint.

The Devil and hell, like the gods, were created by primitive man in a state of savagery. As all know, man at the lowest stage of mental development had little else than his eyes, ears and nose, with which to judge of the various phenomena around him. That which gave him comfort and pleasure was good; that which gave him pain and misery was evil. He thus starts life with both good and evil. These are the foundation of all religious feelings. With him, at first, they were of unknown qualities. As his dim intellect slightly expanded he conceived of them as objects; later, as beings like himself, capable of doing good or harm to him. The sun gave him light, warmth and food; these were good. The moon and stars lighted up his nocturnal highway; they, too, were good in a lesser degree. The dark night he dreaded and feared; so with lightning, tornadoes, earthquakes, etc.

All these things were living beings. The sun, the greatest source of good, became his deus primus; his greatest enemy, the poisonous serpent, became the representative of all evil. These adjectives, good and evil, being personified, became gods and devils in human form.

Such the process, and such was the result with all the primates of the world. Here we reach the point where the Devil and Hell come to the surface to be treated historically.

While most of the great religions of the world have their Devil and hell, the Christians drew almost exclusively on Magianism. The religion ascribed to Zoroaster, represented by the Magi (priests) was the prevailing superstition of Babylon at the time of the Jewish exile. Before that time the Hebrews had failed to work out a conception of a future existence; hence, could have no theories of a devil or hell. All that people have given us concerning those matters was borrowed from the Babylonians—from Magianism with its home meanings.

In Magianism, the religion ascribed to Zoroaster, Ormuzd was a sun-god; from him, as in all the early conceptions of men, good and evil came from the one source. A separation took place, evil finally assumed a separate being and was given the name of Ahriman, an evil spirit. But he was still one of the gods; rebelling against the rule of Ormuzd the deus primus, a terrible war in heaven ensued, which the cuneiform inscriptions portray in most vivid colors. The conflict between Ormuzd and Ahriman, was but an allegorical representation between good and evil, day and night at war, where evil appears in the form of a dragon, as Tiamet. This Babylonian war, when transferred into our New Testament by the writer of the book of Revelation, makes Ahriman, the evil spirit, our Beelzebub. This war in the Babylonian text barely visible in the Old Testament, blossoms out more fully in our Revelation, but not to the extent given it by Magianism. In the end Ormuzd, like the Christian god, will come out victorious.

The Ahriman of Magianism, when defeated and driven out of heaven becomes the Satan or Diablos of the Hebrews; finally, when passed over to the New Testament he becomes our devil, who, like Ahriman takes up his abode in the dark land of the nether world.

This war in heaven, in both Magianism and Christianism, is renewed on earth where the contest goes on for the possession of souls; and if we credit our New Testament and our clergymen, the devil alone, as against Jehovah and his son, has come off, so far, victor in securing more than a hundred to one, and among this hundred, all great thinkers, scientists and other scholars are to be counted as the devil's people, which Jehovah and his, with all their efforts and sacrifices, aided by their priests, have succeeded in securing but few, and they of the most ignorant class.

This Magian religion passing through Judaism to Christianity, where it left the substance of its contents, was, say the writers, only evil in man's nature; nor did the devil appear in the Christian religion until the dark ages, when the priesthood converted, by amendments to the New Testament, this evil quality of man into a full grown personal devil, and allowed him to win honors in soul-catching, over the senile efforts of Jehovah & Son.

The personale of the devil is made very prominent in the Apocryphal New Testament writings, where Christ descends into hell to release Adam and his posterity from the chains of darkness.

Hell.—Having had an historical view of the Devil, now for a brief history of the origin of hell. This word, or the idea produced by it, dates far back. It was in use by the ancient Egyptians, Babylonians, Hindus, Scandinavians, et al., always the home of the evil one in the under world.

Hell among all the ancient religions, was a place for the punishment of crimes committed on earth. The Christians went back to this, and made it a place for the punishment of unbelief—for the refusal to believe that the second person of the triad was a cross between a dove and a woman. This word hell, renders sheol, hades, Gehenna and Tartarus. The word sheol occurs in the Old Testaments 65 times; hell, 31 times; grave 31 times, and pit, 3 times, generally believed to be a dark abode in the earth, often used by the Hebrews to mean grave.

The Greeks placed Tartarus in the center of the earth, and hades half way there. The Septuagint's equivalent for sheol is hades, which occurs in the New Testament 11 times, in 10 of them it is rendered hell. So hell renders Gehenna 12 times.

With the Hebrews, this word is often used to signify the valley of Hinnom, because it was a place desecrated by the sacrifices to Moloch, and for the further reason that it was used for the burial of the dead and for the dumping of garbage which was consumed by fire. Thus we have the fiery Hinnom. The word Tophet occurs 9 times in the Old Testament, which originally meant the grove in Hinnom defiled by idolatries.

The hell of the Christians, before its late abolition, was created by the church during the dark ages, since which, it has been a potent factor in the collection of tithes used as fuel to drive the clerical engine over the highway of life.

With the advance of science and the growth of common sense, the supernatural, with its demons, has faded away, until only a shadow of it remains—just enough to terrify foolish people. With the old pagans, hell was simply a dark abode, shut off from the rays of the sun-god.

The two characters at the head of this article, since each set up for himself after the close of the war in heaven, have got on fairly well as rivals in soul-getting; the former with a fairly good reputation, though with a bad Biblical record, while the latter has always had, with the Christians, a bad name and a record for fair treatment of his household, keeping up only sufficient fire to keep his sanitarium warm for the comfort of his patients. Such is life, and such life's follies.

Conclusion.

The history of the two men at the head of this treatise, while quite full, fails in toto to give us the slightest proof of the real existence of either of them. The heavens for many years have been explored almost every night, from different parts of our earth with the most powerful telescopes and spectroscopes for countless billions of miles outside our earth, picking up and photographing every visible thing, but no where has a god been seen nor has the graph of one ever adorned the plate. As to the other man, the Devil, even his best and most worthy Christian supporters have not only abandoned him, but now deny that he ever existed.

All religions are substantially alike; all are kept running with a priest on one end, a dupe on the other. The great unthinking herd must be amused with some play, and it may just as well be the Christian circus as any other.

JUDGE PARISH B. LADD.

CONYERS-PETTENGILL.

Wedding bells ringing in Cleveland, Ohio, will call forth glad congratulations for the happy couple from Florida to New York, and from New England to the Middle West.

Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill of Malden, Mass., was married on the evening of July 20th, to Mr. H. B. Conyers, by Rev. Dr. Clarke, in Trinity Cathedral of the Forest City. The bride is a universal favorite at Lily Dale Assembly, where she has had a glad welcome each season from 1905 to the present one. Pleasing in personality, gifted in the use of correct English, honest in her platform message work and with the commendable habit of stopping when her controlling force begins to weaken, no apologies have ever been necessary on the part of the management for presenting her to any audience of strangers. Her parting with Lily Dale Assembly on Saturday afternoon, the 18th inst., was an unusually happy one. She had confided the coming event, in absolute confidence, to some of her own sex. As Mrs. Pettengill took her seat after having given some very forceful messages, Mrs. R. S. Lillie arose and gave the whole thing away to the audience, and the latter, at the speaker's call, rose to its feet and united in a Chautauqua salute of Good Will to the departing sister on her voyage over the sea of bliss. How women do rejoice when a member of their sex leads another poor unfortunate man into Matrimonial Mateship!

Mr. Conyers came to our country from Australia, not so very long ago. He is said to be a cultured gentleman, a Spiritualist in belief, and in all ways worthy of the wife he has won. May they throughout a long life together halve each other's sorrows and double one another's joys.

Mrs. Conyers will continue in our field as a public worker, filling her present engagements, which already reach well into 1909, and welcoming opportunities to broaden her field of labor.

GEORGE B. WARNE.

SPIRIT AND SOUL.

They Are Distinct Parts of the Human Constitution.

Nearly all discussions arise from a want of proper definitions, and a clear understanding of the meaning of words. The use of spirit and soul, as synonymous terms, has kept the orthodox world in a fog for ages. Judging from criticism of Prof. Dawbarn, in a recent issue, Joseph Chaland is laboring under the same delusion. This writer maintains that "all spirits are immortal." Nobody but a gross materialist will deny this proposition, but it does not follow that all souls will accept immortality; and thas is what I understand Prof. Dawbarn to suggest as possible. That those wicked souls who refuse to repent, will probably lose their ethereal bodies, as we all lose our physical bodies.

In my "Constitution of Man," I have clearly proven that spirit, soul and minds are all distinct parts of Man. The spirit is immortal, and a part of God's spirit; just as a drop of water is a part of the sea. But during earthly existence the spirit of man is slightly detached from the parent spirit; and placed in two bodies, one of ether, the other of matter. The life which the spirit imparts to the ethereal or spiritual body is the soul. And the life imparted to the physical body is the mind.

The object of earth life, I maintain, is to individualize the spirit of man and to dovelop and perfect his soul.

The physical body is simply a mold in which the ethereal or spiritual body is formed and developed. At the death of the physical body, the mind, no longer having a brain, as an instrument to work with, accedes back into the soul, of which it is but the external reflex. The soul occupying its ethereal or spiritual body, passes into the Psychic Realm, for the purpose of completing and perfecting its education, and finally attaining the same immortality as the spirit which all the time occupied it.

But some of these souls are so wicked and rebellious that they make no progress toward perfection; neither on the earth nor in the psychic realm. If these demoniac souls continue in wickedness and rebellion for ages, will they not finally wear out their ethereal bodies, just as we all wear out our physical bodies on the earth? and is this not what the New Testament calls the "Second Death?" We are all subject to this second death by the loss of the physical body. May not the persistently wicked also be subject to the "second death," by the loss of their ethereal bodies?

Then the immortal spirit, having lost both bodies, would probably be permitted to return to earth, re-embody, and make another effort to perfect and save a soul. This much of re-incarnation may be true and this is the position I have taken in the book above referred to. And this is the probability which Prof. Dawbarn suggested. We are corroborated by the Bible, which says: "The Spirit returns to God who gave it." Again, "The soul that sinneth shall die."

Notes From Lily Dale, N. Y.

The social features of Lily Dale are on the increase. A bazaar held under the auspices af The Woman's Auxiliary was well patronized.

The various schools in session on the grounds have each their share of patronage.

There is one school for Arts and Crafts, another for Dancing, a third for Physical Culture, also a school for Voice Culture in music. Besides these there are many classes for Psychic Development.

A special lecture was given this evening by Miss Amelia Pfenning, on "Woman's Gifts to Civilization."

She proved by archeology that many of man's inventions and discoveries had their origin in primitive woman, the world over. She was the original producer, the burden-bearer, while primitive man bore only the burden of his own dignity. She traced the origin of life through the cell, and the mollusk up to the stage where parentage or motherhood made its first appearance. Then love began, and gradually the higher moral faculties. Miss Pfenning is a pleasing speaker and deserves credit for her painstaking researches.

C. A. Burgess of Chicago, who is new in the mediumistic field, was message bearer, and gave several tests to prove the presence of spirits, that were fully acknowledged.

Many children are enjoying the rural beauty of Lily Dale. They are gathered each morning in Liberty Hall, under the leadership of the Lyceum conductor, Mrs. Amelia Peterson, where instruction and amusement are judiciously combined.

Owing to illness, Dr. F. N. Martin has resigned from the board of trustees, and C. L. Hutchinson was elected in his place.

Every hour at Lily Dale is occupied with something to prove the truth of the existence of the Spirit World and its intelligent inhabitants.

"'Twas a calm still night and the moon's pale light
Shone soft o'er hill and vale,
When the friends, mute with grief, stood around the death bed
Of our poor, lost Lily Dale."
Old Song.—

She was laid to rest in the earth's cold breast,
Yet her soul life did not fail;
For out from the tomb, in her youthful bloom,
Came our darling Lily Dale.

And with words of cheer has she greeted us here,
And from death has lifted the veil,
To this earthly heaven is her fair name given,
Our beautiful Lily Dale.

To-day, July 22, at Lily Dale, was given to the New York State Association. Dr. Geo. B. Warne, National President, was here, also H. W. Richardson, State President.

Mrs. Tillie U Reynolds, one of the trustees, was the other visiting member of the state board. All of the speakers pleaded for a higher, truer Spiritualism, and emphasized the necessity of upholding the National, State and subordinate organizations.

Dr. Warne paid a glowing tribute to The Progressive Thinker for the stand it has taken for truth and honesty.

Mrs. Dorcas Elizabeth Guppy, an old time Spiritualist here has just passed away at the ripe age of 81. Funeral to-morrow, July 23, at 4 p. m., conducted at the auditorium by Mesdames Greenymier and Mrs. R. S. Lillie.

Rev. Geo. H. Brooks, former chairman of Lily Dale Assembly, goes to Lake Brady for two Sundays; then will return to Lily Dale, from which he will respond to calls for funerals.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, fritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore the "Actina" treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

J. J. Pope, P. O. Box, No. 43, Mineral Wells, Texas, writes—"I have spent thousands of dollars on my eyes, consulted the best doctors in the United States, dropped medicine in my eyes for years and "Actina" is the only thing that has ever done me any good. Before using "Actina" I gave up all hope of ever being able to read again. Had not read a newspaper for seven years. Now I can read all day with little or no inconvenience."

Rev. Charles Carter, East Springfield, N. Y., writes:—I have made a severe test of "Actina" by casting aside my glasses and have not had them on since except to see what change had been wrought since the treatment began. My eyes gradually gained strength and power, and now my glasses are no longer necessary, for I see as well, if not better, without them. I recommend "Actina" to all my friends.

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes:—"Actina has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES OF YOUR POEMS sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. and Mrs. Warne arrived home from Portland, Oregon, a few days ago, delighted with their trip. They are both now at Lily Dale, N. Y.

Mrs. M. McCaslin, who is well known at Lake Brady and other camps, will visit Lily Dale this year, and act as agent for The Progressive Thinker.

Prof. Crocker, a healer of great power, passed through this city last week on his way to Lily Dale Camp. He has been located for some time at Spokane, Wash., where he had a large practice. Mrs. Crocker will accompany him to the camp.

Mrs. C. B. Bergere writes: "The Fraternal Daughters' Social, of July 22nd, held at the spacious home of Mrs. Surine, was as usual, an enjoyable and profitable affair. An excellent supper was served. Entertainment consisted of music and song by the young people. Tests by first-class mediums. At this rate the Daughters are in a fair way to realize the desired summer sum. The Fraternal will have a picnic on Saturday, August 15, at G. Neher's Summer Garden at Lyons. A large pavillion is there to accommodate all, in case of rain. A more beautiful place could not be selected for the purpose and the fare there and return is only ten cents. Coffee and ice cream will be served on the grounds; the rest of the substantial we hope to see coming with each one in the shape of well-filled baskets. All sorts of games, etc., are on the program. Tests will be given to those wishing them. Now for directions to get there. Take any car that transfers you to Ogden avenue car; then west to 40th avenue; transfer to Lyons car until it is across the bridge on Des Plaines river; First gate on right. Friends would do well to appoint a meeting place and come in groups. Come at any time, but come early so as not to miss anything."

M.Wood writes from Wichita, Kan.: "Sunday night, July 12, Wichita Spiritualists were treated to a stirring lecture by Dr. Espanto. After his lecture he gave over twenty-five tests, all recognized."

J. J. Rittenhouse, of Royerford, Pa., writes the following appreciative letter: "The five Premium Books arrived to-day in first-class order. Now I have all fourteen of them, and each one of them is excellent. Many thanks to you for them. The Progressive Thinker comes regularly, and is always filled with good articles and poems. You always have grand editorials. We take five other papers a daily included, and The Progressive Thinker is worth more than all the other five put together."

D. A. Richardson, of Dosset, Ohio, says land is cheap there, and he wishes Spiritualists would settle. To those who will enclose a stamp, desiring information, he will write to them.

The Two Worlds of Manchester, England, says: "There are three Societies of Spiritualists in Wellington City, New Zealand. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley of the United States is lecturing for the Wellington Association of Spiritualists, of which Mr. Wm. McLean is president. Mrs. Cooley's mission has been very successful, and her addresses and messages have brought many to examine and inquire. Mr. Isherwood, recently from England, also assists on the platform of the Society, and is highly appreciated. The second Society goes by the name of the Spiritualistic Band of Helpers, Mrs. Sorensen being the speaker and resident medium. The third Society is known as the Spiritualistic Association of Wellington, and Mr. J. Watt, whose remarkable spirit drawings have awakened much interest, is the speaker."

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes of the Universal Occult Society: "We are pleased to announce that our Sunday evening services are growing both in attendance and enthusiasm, especially that of Sunday, 19th inst. The lecture delivered by Mr. Mansell of Boston, was listened to with great attention by the audience. He gave some wonderful messages at the close of his address. Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. LaDoux, Mrs. Kershner, Mr. Schaefer and Mrs. Maggie Henry, also gave messages. Mr. Mansell has promised to be with us again August 2nd, on which night we look forward for another large gathering, and a real good time."

The Religious Scientific Research society of Toledo, O., is the latest religious organization to be incorporated to investigate the mysteries of Spiritualism. The corporation is not one of profit, but for research and mutual benefit. Its incorporators are Mrs. Nina D. Challen, Emmet P. Harring, Leslie E. Drake, George C. Murphy and D. Enbody. The headquarters will be at 2540 Foraker St., Seances will be held every Friday night.

Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary, writes: "Members and friends of the Band of Harmony were delightfully entertained at the home of Mrs. George Newkirk, 498 Fullerton avenue, on Thursday afternoon and evening, July 16, the occasion being one of our series of "Summer Socials." Owing to the absence from the city at the present time of many of our members on their annual "vacations," there will be no "Social" until Thursday, Aug. 13, when it will be held at the home of Mrs. Druliner, 93 Bowen avenue. All are cordially invited."

BEAR IN MIND that the Editor of The Progressive Thinker Is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are required when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on one side of the paper only, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Roseland Spiritual Culture Club will hold a picnic at Wooded Island, Jackson Park, Sunday, Aug. 2.

Solaris writes from Montecito, Cal.: "If people with money make no good use of it while they have the opportunity, they always regret it after death. I visited an old lady of 95 years, who sees the spirits in trouble. Lately, a New York millionaire was brought to her who told a similar story to that contained in the Bible about Lazarus and Dives. After he was told what he had to do to get out of his troubles, he remarked that he would rather beg from house to house than be a millionaire again. Grandma Hayden lives at National City, 4 miles from San Diego, she is doing a grand work enlightening the dead. I have had a similar experience with Jay Gould and others through mediums, all telling of the dreadful conditions they found themselves in after death."

David B. White writes: "Mrs. Sarah A. White (formerly Walters), the well known speaker and platform test medium, who conducted a series of meetings in this city during the past two seasons, offers her services to organize and establish new camps. She has in the past organized and conducted several camps. Spiritualists who are desirous of starting a new camp should at once put themselves in communication with Mrs. White. Her present address is No. 22 Green St., Seneca Falls, N. Y."

Mrs. Emily D. King writes from Tekonsha, Mich.: "The Branch County Spiritual Society had with them July 5 Mr. Will J. Erwood for two lectures, forenoon and afternoon, and picnic dinner in the Grange hall at Girard, and had fine audiences. Everybody was pleased, and wondered why he didn't lecture in the evening. We will have him in the near future again."

A. G. Parks writes from Riverside, Cal.: "Sunday evening a farewell party was given to Mrs. J. B. Walker, of Nevada, who has been in Riverside for about six months, and has made many warm friends, especially among the young peole. She is known all over this vicinity as "Ma" Walker, and has done a great deal of work in the Riverside Progressive Psychic Society. She left for Long Beach, Cal., where she expected to spend the summer months. "Ma" is guided by the spirit friends wherever she goes, and is certainly a dear old woman."

Mrs. E. G. Howe writes: "It is with regret that I have failed to notice the transition of our dear friend and co-worker, Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud of San Bernardino, Cal. She passed peacefully to higher life on May 18, 1908, at San Bernardino. Mrs. Theiband was one of the State directors for two years, also a speaker at San Diego, and for the last four or five years pastor of the San Bernardino Society; an honest, conscientious worker for truth and organization. Her place cannot be filled, and the Cause has lost a valued supsupporter. Ida S. Ives, of Passadena, officiated at San Bernardino, and was assisted by W. C. Hodge and Mary P. Morrille at San Diego, where the body was laid away."

We are requested to republish Mrs. Richmond's summer program for the benefit of friends near the localities where she is engaged: Clinton, Iowa, July 26, 27, 28 and 29; Corry, Pa., July 31 to Aug 4; Lily Dale, N. Y., Aug. 5 to Aug. 12; Cuba, N. Y., Aug. 12 to 16; Onset, Mass., Aug. 18 to 23. Other dates to follow. Church of the Soul, Chicago, opens Sept. 13.

Mrs. Calvia Cushman writes: "The Roseland Spiritual Occult Spiritual Society, of Roseland, Ill., take great pleasure in extending their thanks to Ellen Pennau, the trumpet medium of 774 Sedgwick street, Chicago, for her services. She held a seance at the home of Mrs. Lena Eisenbrandt, of 11557 Dearborn street, July 2, for the benefit of the society; the proceeds were $12. She has done so much to convince strangers of spirit return that there is not always room for the people who go to her seances at our home, 11562 State street, every Thursday evening. In these seances there have been six languages spoken, besides other tests too numerous to mention."

Mr. Robinson, editor, Union City, speaks as follows of Mr. and Mrs. Seth King, of Tekonsha, Mich.: "Early in the fifties Mr. and Mrs. Seth King began an investigation of modern Spiritualism and after a thorough search, coupled with untiring study and careful demonstrations, they became fully convinced that this is the true faith, and they are today most able exponents of this belief. Both are conscientious to a marked degree, thoroughly incapable of deceit, and they possess that charity and broadmindedness which makes them true lovers of their fellow beings. Mrs. King possess undoubted mediumistic powers and for the past eighteen years she has been a speaker by inspiration. She is an eloquent, logical and convincing speaker and her services are in great demand throughout southern Michigan, where she has thousands of warm personal friends, as well as admirers. She has been the means of upbuilding of Spiritualism in this section and is the president and pastor of the Spiritualists' Society of Branch county, an organization chartered under the laws of the state of Michigan, and with a constantly growing membership. With her innumerable household duties and the many cares which have filled Mrs. King's life, it seems incredible that she could have found time to fit herself for her present position as a public speaker, especially as the circumstances of her early life precluded the opportunity for even a meagre education. In fact, Mrs. King avers that she has made no such preparation, and that she attributes her powers entirely to Spiritualistic control. Indeed, it can be accounted for in no other manner. Mrs. King is a lady of intelligencce and rare insight and she seems to be imbued with a desire to benefit mankind. Mr. and Mrs. King are held in the highest regard in the section where the greater portion of their lives has been passed, while they have many warm friends in various portions of the state where Mrs. King has so often been called. The King family is a large one in Branch county, where its members are highly respected, and their annual family reunions call together hundreds of the relatives for a day of communion and pleasure."

A LEAF FROM MY DIARY.

Notes from One Who Believes in an Infinite Intelligence.

The Infinite Intelligence governs the world—not in an arbitrary way, nor by compulsion, but by natural law, and yet everything takes place at God's time. We cannot precipitate events, the spirit of goodness,—working out the good of all. It is said of Christ, that in the fullness of time God sent his son into the world, and every evolution in religious thought and teaching that takes place in the world, is by the same power that sent Christ to fulfill his mission. Every change comes in the fullness of time.

People say to me, "If you can get this truth, why can't I get it also? God is no respecter of persons." You might as well ask, if Morgan can make money by the million, why cannot I make it in like quantities? Or if Marconi can make wireless telegraphy to carry messages over the Atlantic Ocean, why can't others do the same? Or if Daniel was a prophet, why are not all men prophets? God works in various ways, through various instruments, and the variety in nature is so great that men say there are not two leaves in the vast forests of earth just alike, and that there are not two brains in human skulls the same. The Infinite Intelligence gives infinite variety.

A certain Doctor of Divinity who lives in the city, and in going to my office I pass his house daily, met me frequently during the early months of my experience in this grand truth —Spiritualism.

He questioned me in every possible way, and professed to be willing to investigate whenever opportunity offered. I told him of my experience, and how I had been conversing with the angels, and had even had the voices in my private room, sometimes at night and sometimes in the morning. I told him of the benefits that had come to me through communion with the angels, and he appeared anxious to more fully understand. Sometimes the discussion was somewhat pointed, because the teachings of the angels did not agree with those of the Doctor of Divinity. The reader will understand that the Christianity of to-day is not the Christianity as taught by its great founder, Christ. The stream as it came from the fountain was wonderfully bright and pure, as we have it in the Sermon on the Mount.

The Christianity of to-day is nothing more than a caricature of the teachings of the Christ. Therefore, between Christ and Doctors of Divinity there is not of necessity a great affinity.

My good friend, the Doctor, who is both eloquent and influential, in my humble opinion would have made his mark as a champion of the new revelation, had I been able to land him. He was too heavy, however, in the hook, for my dear angel daughter came to me one day and said, "Pa, let that Mr. —— alone; it is only curiosity with him. He is Dickens' Old Curiosity Shop, and not ready for the truth. You know, pa, this truth is a matter of growth. You must not force it on any person."

What an eye-opener that statement was to me—"Must not force." I had been baiting my hook for weeks, until the good Doctor said at last, "All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient." This statement also enlarged my vision.

"Not expedient! Not expedient! Not ready for the truth!" "A matter of growth!" There are sermons in these short sentences.

Men will have to outgrow the creeds and their vested interests in them before they are ready for the truth which makes men free from the control of priestcraft, and willing to risk all for the cause of truth. Verily truth is the pearl of great price, but all men are not ready to sell their possessions that they may be able to buy it.

The good doctor no longer meets me, but instead, I meet his words, "Not expedient!"

The reader will observe that in my extensive experiments as related from time to time, I have brought to view two Doctors of Divinity, and associated with both, there comes out the same thought, "Not expedient." No doubt both are good men and have a work to do, each in his sphere. Notwithstanding, the truth is coming and is meeting men who are graduating from these spheres and other spheres of creed-bound conditions.

Men can no longer accept the unphilosophical teachings of the creeds, and must have a higher teaching or drift into agnosticism. Know-nothingness is not an uncommon condition to find men in at the present time. Let the poet speak:

The River of Life.

Beneath the throne a fountain rises,
Sparkling as of diamonds rare,
See it now the mountain torrent,
Carrying healing everywhere.

Lo! the valleys, bare and fruitless,
Parched by cruel burning blast,
O, the cooling and refreshing,
Filling air as waters pass.

Hungry men and famished children,
Sitting on the fruitful sod,
Irrigated by the river,
Flowing from the throne of God.

Valleys barren and in darkness,
Filled with death and its repose,
Shall burst forth in fruitful beauty,
And shall blossom as the rose.

O, ye fainting and dejected,
Hear the call for you, to-day,
Come and welcome, it's provided
Free to all and without pay.

Poor and rich are all invited,
God hath an abundant store,
Door is open, way is lighted,
Come, there's life forevermore.

WM. STRONG.

Hamilton, Canada.

A Remarkable Test of Spirit Retuurn.

My wife, being controlled for the first time on the 21st of March, has what I should call an exceptionally strong power. She has three guides —one a little girl, one a middle-aged lady, and one an elderly gentleman who claims to be a doctor, and with his help, through my wife's power, I myself have done some wonderful cures with different horses, especially removing cataract from one horse's eye. The sight is restored and the eyes are bright and clear.

A few nights ago we had gone to bed, when "Iola" (which is the name the middle-aged lady gives) took possession of her and said to me, "I see an awful sight. I see a colt and it is in a pasture and has been cut very badly on a barb wire fence, and I thing it has been done four or five days and the owner does not know it. It it either a black or a very dark grey, because I can see grey hairs. The flies have bothered it so badly that it has chewed and rubbed the place so that I can see the muscles and cords plain."

I asked her if she could describe the place to me. She said, "You go through the two bridges and from four to six miles you will come to a country store on the left; across the road is the residence and a little ways from that is a large barn. Between the house and barn is a pump and a tub where they water the horses."

I recognized the place as that of Mr. Higgins, which she said answered to the name correctly. She said, "There are two black horses in this barn at present, oldish horses, and the man who gives me this message says that he worked for Mr. Steve Higgins on his farm a long time, and wants Mr. Higgins to know that he told about the colt being hurt, and he gives me the initials, T. D.," which I myself was personally acquainted with before he passed on—his name was Thomas Dorrity. She says, "When I was here I didn't believe one could come back to earth after they had left it, but I am so pleased to find a channel back to an old friend." He told me many things that happened when he worked for Mr. Higgins, especially an accident when he was run away with, and run over by a pair of colts, which I knew to be true.

Now I took particular pains to investigate these things and found out that each and everything was as she had told me. The colt, as near as they can remember from the time they had seen him until the time they found him, was about four or five days, and he is a very dark dapple grey. I also found the muscles and cords as she had described were exposed to sight.

I myself have what I presume would be termed clairvoyant power, because I see many, many different things from the spirit world, and I have also seen my wife's uncles, each one of them. The doctor always comes horseback, never any other way, and I can assure you that I have worked with horses half of my life, I now being thirty years of age, and I never yet have seen a horse here on the earth that could equal the doctor's horse. My wife is twenty-seven years old and considering her age also her short time being controlled, I felt as though it was my duty to publish these lines of truth; it may, I hope, help some poor hungry soul that is seeking after truth.

I could write many interesting things in regard to this work, but I don't feel as though I ought to take up too much of your valuable paper. My wife never gave any readings, except in the family.

GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

Be Charitable, But Above All, Be Honest.

My friends, when writing for The Progressive Thinker, will you carefully and prayerfully read what you have written, and strike out what shows up your prejudices or what your preconceived ideas influenced you to write, if anything is left that will throw any light on the phenomena of Spiritualism, let us have it. What we want is light. What is, not what you would have it to be.

Let us be charitable in our thoughts toward others. Let your aim be true, your object enlightenment. Sarcasm and sneers produce no light, but rather, close the opening through which light might penetrate. Be a leader, not a driver. "Let your light so shine" said an old teacher.

Do not expect those who have not been quickened by the spirit, to see or discern the things of the spirit. If your life has been changed by a spiritual birth, if you are clairvoyant or clairaudient, do not be in a hurry to declare to the world that you are a Spiritualist! Let your life speak for itself; your friends will note the change, and in due time, but be careful—lead them into the light by giving small doses. The less you say, the more they will want to know. If they say "I believe you are a Spiritualist," smile and say, "Call it that if you wish; it's only a name. Once you get them interested you are pretty sure of a convert. Do not prejudice them against you by a bold declaration. Your influence is forever lost if you get their enmity. Be sure you are right, and do not make too strong a claim.

A photo plate must be perfect to produce a perfect negative; (conditions to be perfect). To receive a perfect picture or message the brain must be clear of all prejudice or preconceived ideas.

We describe a picture according to our vocabulary. No two mediums would voce the same description, yet both would be correct. To one, some part would appear of greater importance than it would to another, and vice versa. Let us be charitable and above all be honest.

Lake Brady Camp.

Lake Brady Camp is one of the places you ought to visit if you wish to rest and enjoy Spiritual things quietly. The woods and surrounding fields, and the cottage on the hill, where the speakers are entertained, are very pleasant. The electric line makes it possible for people to attend the meetings from the neighboring towns, and Sunday the auditorium was well filled, even though a thunder-storm was part of the program. There are new cottages being erected for rooming houses, and the camp is sure to grow and become one of the spiritual centers.

I was invited to hold a meeting in Canton on Tuesday evening, and was promised a very pleasant and profitable visit, which promise was fulfilled. Myself and daughter spent two days in the famous city, the home and resting place of Mr. McKinley.

We organized the First Spiritualist Church of Canton, Wednesday night, with Mr. Henry Sexauer, one of the Lake Brady Camp board of directors for President, and Mrs. A. Viethmeyer, a very energetic and successful worker in Canton, as Vice President.

I shall speak here one more Sunday, and then go to Lily Dale for the rest of the month and enjoy the blessings of each day that are set before us at that camp.

MRS. MAY A. PRICE.

Transition of Mrs. Meyers.

Mrs. Barbara Powell Meyers passed to the higher life on Friday, July 17, from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry J. Rhorbach, Chase avenue, Rogers Park. Mrs Meyers was born in Germany 72 years ago. She had lived in several places in the East and West, in this country, and had experienced many of the vicissitudes of life. Lately, and for several years, she has lived with Mr. and Mrs. Rhorbach, and the presence of grandchildren and great-grandchildren has added joy to her declining years.

Mrs. Meyers was a great sufferer, but preserved her cheerful disposition and was patient to the very end.

She was raised in and most of her life was a member of the Lutheran church, but the knowledge came to her of the life beyond and the ministration of her loved ones, and she readily stepped forward from "belief" to certainty. For several years, and at the time of her transition she was a devoted member of The Church of the Soul, a faithful attendant of its societies whenever her health permitted, and had an ardent and affectionate appreciation of its pastor. When she knew that her going on was only a question of a few weeks or days, she earnestly prayed that the change might come before Mrs. Richmond left for her summer tour of the camps. The transition came while Mr. and Mrs. Richmond were at Wonewoc, Wis., but the services were held on Monday, the 20th and Mrs. Richmond was present to discharge the beautiful duties of ministration in the home of her family. A goodly number of the members of the Church of the Soul were present, and many neighbors and friends of the family.

All who have heard the guides of Mrs. Richmond on such an occasion know what words of comfort and spiritual instruction were given. It is indeed an inspiration such as is not forgotten, when knowledge of immortality fills the discourse, and the glad re-union of the arisen ones is declared. Of the immediate household who will so miss the bodily presence of the dear Mother and Grand-Ma, are Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rhorbach, Mr. and Mrs. George Brunton, (now Rhorbach), and two infant sons (great-grandchildren of the deceased) Mr. Charles Rhorbach.

The casket was taken to Oakwood. Mrs. Mary Hill gave a prayer at the grave. COR.

OBITUARIES.

Lydia Camp Thomson, Camptown, Pennsylvania, passed to spirit life June 26. She was an admirer of The Progressive Thiner, and a believer in Spiritualism, having been a Presbyterian in her youth. She outgrew its creed, having no fear of anything beyond; holding animosity to none, she lived her eighty years, leaving one daughter and many friends to emulate her goodness and loving nature and faith. DR. T. WILKINS' POEMS.

This long-looked-for and anxiously sought book is now almost ready for the press. This is an announcement that will please thousands of the readers of this paper, in whose pages for many years the Doctor's poems have appeared and been devoured with such appreciation. Some have written him already for copies, telling him of having clipped and pasted over 135 of them into a scrap book. This book will contain about 250 pages, all put into type by himself on a Linotype machine, made up by himself, will be bound in good style of cloth binding, contains many cuts, (small and large half-tones) and is destined to be the coming book for poetry lovers. The book will go to press as soon as the first 500 names are received (no money to be sent till the book is published) and placed on file. Send names and addresses to Dr. T. Wilkins, 40 Loomis st., Chicago, Ill., care The Progressive Thinker. Send in your names for the book, but send no money till requested to do so. The price will be $1.25, but those sending notice now for a copy will get it for ONE DOLLAR. One hundred gilt-edge, souvenir books will be published, at $1.50 each, if that number are ordered ahead. So state if you want one.

LILY DALE.—ROUND TRIP.

RAMONA VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.

Very Eligible Situations for the Establishing of a Spiritualist Home for Old Spiritualists.

I have come to Ramona with the expectation and determination to make it my permanent home. Ramona is the gateway into the mountains, and all the intersecting valleys which cover thousands of acres of rich land for farming, fruit and stock-raising.

This large valley and all intersecting valleys should attract a class of capitalists, to buy up a large tract of land, and establish a Spiritual colony.

I desire to see a Spiritual Home built in Ramona, conducted on the same system to accommodate the elderly and old people that are Spiritualists, who are homeless. Spiritualists need such homes as much as the Soldier's Homes are needed. There is no better place in the United States for a Spiritual Home to be erected on a large tract of land than in Ramona Valley. I pray such a home may be the order for Spiritualists to consider and take under advisement.

I would be glad to give my life to go forth as an embassador and lecturer on this important need, and solicit contributions in my circuit of travel up and down the coast. A band of workers could be organized for this purpose by spiritual societies, and the independent Spiritualists. I am affiliated with no spiritual society, but class myself as an Independent Spiritualist.

I have been a firm advocate that this nation should legislate on the Old Age pension for all American-Born citizens who are 60, and rendered homeless, without visible means of support. This is a needed legislation for the elderly, both man and woman.

N. STEVENS.

A Prominent Medium Passed to Spirit Life.

Passed to the higher life on July 13, Miss Jennie Rhind after two years of extreme suffering. Miss Rhind was one of the oldest mediums in Boston and Lake Pleasant. She had many friends in Cassadaga, Chicago and Boston. She was born in Scotland, November 27, 1837, at Aberdeen. She came to Chicago in 1871, and after a time became matron at the University on Cottage Grove avenue, near the Douglas Monument. While there her scership and rhythmic inspiration became unfolded to such an extent that the faculty had her sent to the asylum, for the insane, and her books and papers were destroyed, and her clothes made away with. After her detention there she got away for a drive and escaped on a train for Boston, where she has lived ever since September 1875, doing her work as a seer, and also as a messenger of the Wisdom Spheres. Her work has been of a high order, and she has had the love and esteem of all who knew her for her truth, integrity, and her uncompromising love of justice. The disease which terminated her life, was ulcerating cancer, and which was so terrible that her faithful and generous friend had to send her to the Long Island Hospital in Boston Harbor, where she stayed till the end. Miss M. H. Weil, the noble and devoted friend who defrayed all the expense of her long illness, gave every attention, and had her body cremated, by her wish.

IN TUNE WITH THE INFINITE.

(How I Know God.)

I know not whence nor where
This strange uplifting power may be,
I only know that now and here,
It comes radiantly to me.

And in life's turmoil oft I find
A sweet peace and rest all sublime,
Comes stealing my senses o'er
And ope's for me from out its store

A wealth of power that brings surcease
Of troubled thoughts, a great relief
A spiritual uplifting, a hope to find
That somewhere, some-when I shall enter into mine.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead." These words stand out on the cover. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet the author, Edward C. Randall, believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50.

SCIENCE AND A FUTURE LIFE.

By Prof. James H. Hyslop.

This work is one of the most valuable acquisitions to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. It is scientific in its method, profound in its ethical deductions, unanswerable in its logic, and above all sympathetic to the truth whatever it may be and wherever it may be found. Price $1.50; postage 10 cents.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

By Minot J. Savage, D. D.

This is a view of the world's beliefs on the subject, a consideration of present conditions of thought and feeling, leading to the question as to whether it can be demonstrated as a fact. QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of
HUDSON TUTTLE.
Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Everyone has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

S. A. Kost:—Q.—Please inform us what is mental healing, and magnetic healing, and the difference between them, and also which is more potential in its work.

It has been said that Mrs. Eddy, of Christian Science fame, has appropriated the mental healing idea from the works of Andrew J. Davis, and we would like to know if he does his work in healing by the mental or magnetic process.

A.—Magnetic healing is by means of mesmerism or animal magnetism. Mental healing is by suggestion—the mind being supposed to dominate the body, and hence if the mind is right, the physical body must conform. This is now widely being accepted by physicians, who depend more on mental impressions than on drugs. In fact it is truthfully asserted that the good effect of medicines depends on the belief in their potency.

A. J. Davis clearly set forth the fundamental principles of this method, and they were taken up by Mrs. Eddy. But she was not satisfied with the limitation fixed by Mr. Davis, and gave them a universal application which cannot be sustained.

For man is dual, physical and spiritual (mental) and the union between these is so perfect that if the mental reacts on the physical, the physical with almost equal force reacts on the mental. There are conditions and circumstances under which physical means are imperative. Thus mental healing cannot overcome a poison introduced into the body, nor avert the morbific germs of infectious, or pestilential disease. The state of the mind may ward off disease germs for a time, giving immunity, but sooner or later the vital forces will yield to the attack.

Miss Lillie A. Keepers, New Mexico:—Q.—I made the assertion to a friend that other religions beside Christianity (B. C.) had a trinity. She did not agree with me. I told her of Osiris, Isis and Horus. Can you give other examples?

A.—The trinity is in no sense a Christian but absolutely a pagan doctrine. The Jewish religion on which Christianity apparently was founded was Unitarian. There was one God, Jehovah, one Supreme. The Persians had Ormuzd, Mithras and Ahrimanes. They solved the riddle of good and evil by this placing a "Mediator" between the good and evil deities. The Hindu had Brahm, Vishnu and Siva. The Alexandrian school of philosophers infused the doctrine of Plato into Christianity. The battle was long and fierce. Athanasius stood for the trinity, Arius for the Unitarians, and councils met and fought with tongue, swords and clubs, for it was a rude age, the tide of belief turning from one side to the other. Athanasius wrote the trinitarian creed which has been the text of the Catholic church, and with slight changes is accepted by the Episcopal. It was a triumph of paganism over Judaism—of the three-fold gods over the Jehovah.

The result could not be otherwise. Christianity was not a religion having its birth in Jerusalem, but in Alexandria. It was not a graft on the Jewish stock, but on the Greek Mysteries, and its early disciples and members were initiated by the unwritten ritual, which for many ages had indoctrinated the devotees of the greater mysteries.

The series of articles on the Religion of the Aztecs, by Chas. McArthur, in The Progressive Thinkepr, throw a flood of light on this subject, and show that the Aztecs of Mexico entertained trinitarian views.

Henry Griffith:—Q.—I saw it stated in a public print lately that nineteen Protestant clergymen were about to join the Roman Catholic church to become priests. I suppose, presumably some and perhaps all of these clergymen have wives. If so, what will they be likely to do with them?

A.—As celibacy is imperative with the Catholic priesthood, if these Protestant clergymen have wives they will have to renounce them before entering on the duties of that office.

The authorities of the Catholic church are wise, and a converted Protestant preacher, however strong his protestations, is never received in that full favor accorded to those born and bred to the office. To the average preacher the Catholic church holds out attractions which passional natures find quite irresistible. There are nunneries provided, in whose shadowy seclusion family ties may be forgotten, and domestic cares vanish. The wisest provision for the church, the most damnable villainy for mankind, was the institution of the nunnery, to provide for the licentiousness of a class of men set apart to do the bidding of the church, and in order that these priests may be absolutely free from all ties which bind other men, they are cut off from domestic life, and yet provided a home in any and every convent in the world. How much influence this prospect has on the new Protestant converts, and how much the slight change of dogmatic belief is a matter to be determined. It goes without saying that the gospel ministers, from the shouting evangelist to the dignified bishop, are the most erotic, and the criminal record proves this in a measure almost beyond belief. A religion that demands a man to cast aside his wife whom he had vowed to love and protect, disown the children of this union, is a slanderous lie thrown in the face of humanity. And the man who accepts such religion is either idiotic from superstition or a hypocritical rascal. In times past, charity might cover them with its mantle, and excuse them because of their ignorance, but in the full knowledge of the present, ignorance itself of such vital matters is a crime, and there is no excuse for men claiming to be ordinarily intelligent, clinging to the dead beliefs of the past, or for shouting when they cast aside the corpse of one that they may drag forward another.

J. M.:—Q.—Is the miraculous conception of Jesus Christ so out of the ordinary, as to be itself an evidence of its truthfulness?

A.—Instead of being "out of the ordinary," such a belief is common to the gods of all people. The gods were all virgin-born. Krishna was born of the chaste Devkai; Buddha, of Maya; the Siamese Codom of a Virgin overcome by a sunbeam; the Chinese Fuh-he, of a Virgin surrounded by a rainbow; Horus, the Egyptian Savior, of Isis; Bacchus, of Semele; Perseus was son of Jupiter by the virgin Danae; Apollo was the son of Jupiter and Latous; Pythagoras had a god for a father; the mother of Esculaplus, fearing his father's wrath, exposed his child in the mountains, where he was found by a shepherd and was known to be a god from the fiery rays surrounding his head. Hence the people came to worship the heavenly child. These legends are not confined to the old world. In the new, the Aztecs had their Quetzalcoatl, born of "a pure virgin," and called his mother "Queen of Heaven." The Mayas had Zama, "god-begotten."

"A Little Land and a Living."

"A Little Land and a Living," by Bolton Hall, author of "Three Acres and Liberty," and "Things as They Are."

This book is dedicated to the editors of American. Mr. Hall has shown how with a little capital and a good deal of common sense, a city man or woman can get into the country or cultivate a little land and gain an independence. It treats of vacant lot gardening, fruit growing, horticulture, animal raising for profit and many other interesting topics.

The book is full of enthusiasm and cannot fail to interest and instruct all who read it. Price, $1.00.

HASLETT PARK CAMP, MICH.

It Will Open August 2nd, and Continue Till August 23rd, Inclusive.

Once more we are approaching the camp meeting season, and it affords us pleasure to call the attention of the readers of The Progressive Thinker to the Haslett Park Camp, Haslett, Mich. It is located on an electric road eight miles east of Lansing, and by the side of a beautiful little lake (Pine Lake), well supplied with steamers, launches and row boats. It is an ideal spot to spend a few days or weeks. The pretty lake, the fine old trees, the beautiful grounds, these alone are worth your while, but this is not all. You will find there men and women who are searching for knowledge—truth-seekers; men and women who have come to reason together, whose faces are turned toward the light, and like the sunflower that nods to the sun at whatever point of the compass it may appear, so when Truth is unveiled, from whatever source she cometh, she finds a welcome amongst these people. Not a blind acceptance, upon the childhood fashion of "open your mouth and shut your eyes, and you shall have something to make you wise." They know that Truth comes with no faint or faltering footsteps; she is not afraid of criticism or derision; she does not fear investigation, is not abashed or angered at a suggestion of the same, but across her forehead in letters of light are these words, "Search me, search me."

At Haslett Park Camp there will be teachers and demonstrators of the truths of Spiritualism that will do you good to meet.

Dr. B. F. Austin of Rochester, N. Y., will be the first speaker, giving during the week, three stereopticon lectures upon important subjects.

The second week, Dr. R Angus, Port Huron, Mich., will be the speaker and message bearer. The third and last week, W. D Wattles of Elwood, Ind., who was with us last year, and made many friends, will again entertain and instruct us.

During the past two years it has been my good pleasure to preside at this camp, and I go there again this season in the same capacity. I look forward in glad anticipation of the meeting with old friends, and also extend a cordial welcome to any whose visit this year will be their first. To the strangers to Spiritualism, or the stranger to the camp, we bid you welcome.

"Come let us reason together."

The camp opens August 2 and closes August 23.

Spiritualism Critically Analyzed

From the Standpoint of a Leading Magazine.

The Truth About Spiritualism.

In this short article I do not hope to give you the whole truth about Spiritualism, because I haven't the space. But you may rest assured that what I do here give you is true, because I know whereof I speak.

I know that, in order to follow precedent, I should begin by deploring the "fraud" that is so mixed up with Spiritualism that it required me to dig up the truth from the deeps and deeps of fraud. Every article upon the subject that I have read for the past few months has started out that way, and I know that it is expected, but I must disappoint. In fact, I am willing to admit that if I had never condescended to look into the matter, Spiritualism, as a philosophy or a religion, or a Truth, would still have lived and thrived and proved true.

But, to read some of the stuff with which newspapers and magazines are deluged these days, because the writers have just discovered that Spiritualism is rapidly becoming fashionable, one would imagine that the writers were moral heroes, born for the sole purpose of rescuing Spiritualism from the hands of the thieves and liars and devils.

As a matter of fact, Spiritualism, even as a religion, or philosophy (I believe they call it a philosophy), has been well organized, well conducted and presided over for a number of years. There is an organization known as the National Spiritualists' Association, and although I am not a member, I have always kept in touch with the work being done.

By the way, I am not a member of anything. I "belong" to the Universe, and have never felt called upon to join anything. If I began joining things, I would have to join everything in existence. "Better not I than the very worst, worse not I than the best."

Now, is there not fraud masquerading as Spiritualism?

Most certainly. Is there not dishonesty traveling under the guise of philosophy? Is there not crime carefully concealed as "high finance?" Is there not not hypocrisy calling itself Christianity? Is there not, in other words, always a counterfeit to every good thing? Legerdemain is not Spiritualism any more than orthodox Christianity is Christlike.

Therefore, we won't waste any more time discussing the so-called "fraudulent aspect" of Spiritualism. Instead we will discuss Spiritualism.

To the general public the word "Spiritualism" means nothing more nor less than phenomena—generally physical phenomena, such as table rappings, ouija boards, trumpet speaking, materialization, slate writing, etc. These phenomena are to the philosophy of Spiritualism exactly what Healing is to Christian Science—the bait which lures the seeker after Truth into the deeps of philosophical thought.

We have learned most things by kindergarten methods, whether it be material facts, or transcendental truths.

The religious systems of a race or an age, well illustrate the growth of a race, and every religious system teaches its fundamental truths in and through phenomenal methods.

So the phenomena of Spiritism constitute the "reward of merit" which undeveloped humanity must ever have dangled before their eyes, to coax them onward on the Path.

The kind of Spiritualism, therefore, that the public eye is focussed upon these days is that phase of it that the student of Occultism long since explored, fathomed and pigeon-holed in his experience. Not that phenomena have not a place and a purpose. Such phenomena as Hamlin Garland records in Everybody's Magazine will do much to turn people toward an intelligent investigation of Truth.

That there will be many apparent disasters in the wholesale prosecution of this search is a foregone conclusion.

Ignorant dealing with the unseen forces about us is like a novice handling electricity. Some one is liable to get hurt. But, I do not for this reason discountenance the "social seance." Half the world is obsessed now. We are in a transition state between ignorance and wisdom; and in this sort of condition there will naturally be a certain unavoidable degree of disorder, of disrupted mental processes, that are diagnosed as "insanity."

Generally speaking, people have such illogical, such erroneous, such absurd ideas of the life after Death—where they have any ideas at all—that they are unprepared for the conditions that actually exist, and which they soon discover, if they pursue the investigation of the phenomena of Spiritism with any degree of intelligent interest.

The invisible ether about us is peopled with beings as real, as vital in essences, as we are in the earth plane. But many, very many of them, are unfitted for the phase of life in which they find themselves after death. Their tastes and their instincts have not been cultivated beyond the coarser plane of manifestation—the physical—and they seek through contact with those still in the flesh to reinstate themselves in this phase of life.

The result is that they hypnotize, or mentally control, persons inhabiting the physical body, and naturally these persons "act queer." Among those with whom we come into daily and hourly contact—I mean persons still in the flesh—how many do we find who are self-acting, individualized, strong enough to think for themselves, to choose and to take the results of their choosing without dependence upon some power, external or otherwise? Almost no one. The percentage is trifling.

We are slaves to custom, to habit, to established methods and modes of conduct, and to the opinion of others.

Therefore, we are not in a position to successfully resist the subtler influence which a disembodied entity may exert over us, if he feels so disposed.

I have always felt that the horrors of the Salem witchcraft were not due, as is generally explained by modern psychologists, to auto-suggestion, but to the impressions impinged upon the minds of the susceptible by the disembodied and hate-crazed Indians who had been killed and their lands confiscated by the white settlers.

Whether the fact appeals to us as desirable or not, it nevertheless remains as a fact that we are constantly in the presence of, and liable to impressions and suggestions from, those who have gone out of the physical body.

The character of these entities varies exactly as does ours here in the visible. Some there are who are selfish, narrow-visioned, and ignorant. That this type is numerous we may readily guess when we look about us and see how scanty is our store of wisdom. And selfishness, narrow-mindedness and "all uncharitableness" do not constitute a fundamental part of the human make-up. These attributes are grown by the ungodly strife of competitive commercialism.

But, where the absurdity of the general idea in regard to the after-life comes in is in the belief that Death at once changes the habit of mind which has controlled the individual throughout his career on the earth plane.

This mental attitude which our competitive system of economics has produced is not, nor can it be, laid aside immediately at death. The man who has spent his earthly career in pursuit of the illusory, the material and changing, goes into the next phase of life-expression poorly equipped as far as spiritual knowledge is concerned.

Very often indeed earthly riches are obtained at the risk of being a pauper in the after life. This is the secret of why "It is easier for a camel to go through the needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven."

Riches in themselves are no barrier to spiritual knowledge, any more than poverty is a guarantee of the same.

But the rich man is in danger of living either in the blind pursuit of wealth, or he may live in the enjoyment of just those material things which his money buys, forgetting that there are other realms of Being to which he may at any moment be called, and to fill which he needs a deeper knowledge than that which is of "the earth, earthy."

Of the millions of souls who go out into the Invisible yearly, hourly, how few comparatively are in a state of consciousness to rise above the materialistic atmosphere—to rise to the finer, more ethereal planes of consciousness—beyond the mental and the psychic?

It is therefore, of necessity, the undeveloped souls with whom we come often into contact in our efforts at "spirit" communication. In fact, we do not come into "spirit" communication, because few of us, in or out of the body, have sufficient spiritual consciousness to make "spiritual" communication possible. We may exchange thoughts, we may exchange soul-desires, but fully spiritualized beings are "few and far between."

Not that human nature is "bad." That is not at all my meaning. There are no "evil" spirits. All spirits are good, but we are so undeveloped in spiritual consciousness that it is simply the limited, external consciousness that we most readily contact with. Now comes the vital, the important part of this question of inter-communication, and the advisability of investigating the phenomena of Spiritism.

Many occultists advise against the investigation of Spiritualistic physical phenomena on the ground that it is from these undeveloped "earth-bound" entities that we get this phase of manifestation—when it comes from the invisible side of life.

And, they argue, when we place ourselves receptive to these influences, they may obtain a certain power over our minds and produce abnormal mental states—either appetites, desires or acts.

They may flatter, cajole and deceive us, thereby feeding upon our vitality or in some way satisfying their own unconquered materialism. That these conditions are common, all who have had any experience in the investigation of phenomena will readily admit.

But the point is this: All world movements move onward with a resistless sweep, let who will fall in the process. The establishment of recognized intercommunication between the phases of life-expression known as the "dead" and the "living" is an inevitable result. Everything tends to this end. It is a part of the action of the cosmic law. This law does not consider the individual. Neither is this lack of consideration "heartless," or evil, or indifference.

Not a single atom is lost. Not an individual abandoned. "Not a sparrow falleth." The seeming disaster, if it come, is but a momentary illusion. Nevertheless, disaster, even though it be temporary, may be avoided.

Those who fall a victim to the obsession of another's will, whether that other be unseen or seen, are reaping the result of their ignorance, and the only remedy for ignorance is enlightenment.

Therefore, let us know. Instead of seeking to avoid the subject of psychical research, we should arm ourselves with unselfishness of purpose and intelligent interest, if we would know the truth, and there is nothing that can take the place of truth. No amount of avoidance of an issue of any kind can or will settle that issue. Nothing but the truth will satisfy the human needs.

The human race has waded through fields of blood and strife and carnage in pursuit of the prize. It is not likely that we are going to stop now at the door of the Unseen, because someone has told us that it is dangerous to knock for admittance.

Indeed, we can not turn back if would. The time is at hand. There is also another side to the question of intercommunication. Of the many who pass out of the body, comparatively few are capable of receiving help or instruction from those who have attained the requisite degree of spirituality, out of the body. Their help must come from those still on this side of the Veil, because "though having eyes they see not," and they are not more aware of the presence of spiritual beings than are blind people in the body aware of the proximity of other individuals. In other words, they have no spiritual sight, and therefore they cannot see spiritual beings.

Their help must come from this side. Every spiritual teacher is teaching hundreds of unseen souls, whenever he or she addresses a student of truth on the earth plane of manifestation.

It is a matter of self-protection, therefore, that we learn the facts in regard to the conditions of the life immediately after the change called death, in order that we may intelligently deal with them.

Manifested life is like the ascending notes of the musical scale. The physical plane is represented by middle C, and the mental and psychic planes are only one note each higher in the scale of vibration. How many intervening notes there may be between us and the Absolute we cannot say with certainty.

It is at once our duty and our privilege to spread the enlightenment and freedom of truth on these lower planes in order that all may be lifted to a consciousness of the complete Whole.—McIvor-Tyndall, in Swastika.

A GOOD TIME.

I've had a good time.
Life came with rosy cheeks and tender song
Across the morning fields to play with me,
And, oh, how glad we were, and romped along
And laughed and kissed each other by the sea.

I've had a good time.
Love came and met me half way down the road;
Love went, away, but there remained with me
A little dream to help me bear my load,
A something more, to watch for by the sea.

I've had a good time.
Death came and took a rosebud from my yard;
But after that, I think there walked with me,
To prove me how the thing was not so hard,
An angel here of evenings by the sea.

I've had a good time.
.....A good, good time.
Nobody knows how good a time but me,
With nights and days of revel and of rhyme,
And tears and love and longing by the sea.

A LEADING MIND AND SPIRIT RETURN.

Dr. I. K. Funk, a Profound Thinker, and a Scientific Investigator along Occult Lines of Thought, Has Something of Special Importance to Present, as set forth in the Chicago Daily News.

I have received a number of letters expressing suprise that Dr. Hyslop or other psychic investigator has not accepted the $2,500 anti-spiritualistic challenge urged recently in the press. I am surprised rather that any intelligent reader should have expected otherwise. Iron and gold are good to buy gold and iron, but why should we expect them to pass current on the heights where true science dwells? Such a challenge, while not so intended, is offensive, as it assumies that these men could if they would."

A scientist cares more for the discovery of one new fact, though it tells against him, than for much moeny or applause or blame. To him every fact is an integral part of the universe and its discovery carries its own sufficient reward. Woe to him who uncovers a truth and does not tell it. Crookes, Lodge, Wallace, Lombroso would each give his right hand could he so present a fact of spirit communon that it would carry scientific conviction to the world that a man who dies lives again.

Then are there no facts that prove spirit communication? These trained scientists believe that there are. Then why do they not accept a challenge of this sort?

THESE FACTS COME THROUGH OBSERVATION, NOT BY EXPERIMENT; THEY ARE NOT ON TAP; THEY DO NOT COME AT CALL. IN NO OTHER INVESTIGATION IS THE PERSONAL EQUATION SO IN EVIDENCE? We have to with many facts and laws of human mind, that are little known.

Then, if the hypothesis of outside intelligence is true, there may be scores of forces, and scores of laws, with which we have to deal, which are altogether new to us. In solving problems of this kind we should sit down quietly and observe; dogmatism and presupposition hinder. We cannot proceed as does the physical scientist who proves the existence and nature of radium, or that the blood circulates or the earth turns on its axis, or H2O is water. French scientists seventy-five years ago said, "If stones fall from the sky, why do they not fall in our sight?" They, with powerful glasses, scanned the heavens, but saw no stones fall. The skeptic observers of that day so reported to the French academy and it was decided that the reports of the peasants that they seen stones fall were the result of deception or mal-observation. The predisposing scientific conviction was that there were no stones in the sky, and so none could fall. So long as this conviction remained, how prove a shower of stones—it is always easier to believe that men lie or are deceived than believe the impossible to happen.

Dr. Hodgson was an exceedingly critical and skeptical man, so almost beyond bounds. HE DISCOVERED SCORES UPON SCORES OF FRAUDS ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC LINES, but after ten years of constant investigation he came to the conclusion that there were genuine spirit communications; but before the conviction was possible he had to think himself into the possibility of a spirit world. Yet he would have been the last man to have accepted this press challenge.

Frederick W. H. Myers, for many years investigated the phenomena before he became convinced of the presence of outside intelligences—at first an utter agnostic he was finally led to say, "I predict that, in consequence of the new evidence, all reasonable men a century hence will believe it the resurrection of Christ; whereas, in default of the new evidence, no reasonable man a century hence would have believed it." And so Sir Oliver Lodge and not a few other leading scientists. Suppose Prof. Hyslop had accepted this challenge, where would have been found a committee who would have been willing to investigate ten years or five or three before making a report? NO ONE FACT NOR A SCORE OF FACTS CONVINCED THESE SCIENTISTS; BUT IT WAS THE CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE OF A HUNDRED FACTS. Such a committee would be apt to make a few trials, then come to a conclusion and so report and a shout would go up, "Ha, didn't we tell you?" Why does it not occur to the press to prevail upon a committee of, say, ten trained scientists, who will agree to sit and observe with some competent medium once a week or so from three to five years, as Dr. Hodgson, Dr. Hyslop and others have done?

In trials before a test committee we must not forget the preventive power of suggestion. Every professional hypnotist knows how difficult it is to hypnotize a subject against a strong contrary assertion. Why is this? I may guess, but I don't know. Who can say why Christ could do no great works in Galilee because of the unbellef, or why He put out of the death chamber of the little maid all doubting ones before He raised her from the dead? THERE SEEMS TO BE A TREMENDOUS DYNAMIC FORCE IN BELIEF AND ALSO IN UNBELIEF, PERHAPS THE GREATEST OF ALL CREATED FORCES. Why should not those psychic investigations be of stupendous interest to us mortals? They are sincere attempts by well-equipped men to get at a solution of the mysteries of death and the world beyond, which should profoundly concern us.

We are moving away from materialism. A few years ago Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer were agnostic as to the spirit world, but now many of the leading scientists have gone as far as belief in "foreign" intelligences not only existing but communicating.

"Where the vanguard rests to-day
The rear shall camp to-morrow."

At the door of the scientific workshop psychic research stands at the head of the waiting list.

Here we may witness a science in the making. We forget that the whirligig of time often changes from little to great and from great to little in science and more than once in history the stone the builders rejected became the head of the corner. To a scientific demonstration that personality survives death all scientific achievements heretofore made will be trivial in comparison.

The starry heavens are reflected in the ocean. With eyes fixed on the ocean you can prove that these heavens don't exist. They don't down there.

Scientific faith in the other world is an egg that will yet hatch on this mundane sphere. I. K. FUNK.

MISS OF FOURTEEN POET.

Little Theodosia B. Clark of Evanston, Pupil in High School, Makes a Name for Herself.

Little Theodosia B. Clark, 14 years old, a pupil in the Evanston High School, is making quite a name for herself as a poet. She entertains not only her schoolmates but her elders by her writings, many of which are said to possess considerable merit.

Like all poets, Theodosia takes spring as one topic for her muse, and on that subject she has written these lines:

The violet has lifted its drooping head
From mossy ferns, its wintery bed,
And softly lifts its face on high
To meet the sweet smile of the sky.
The robin twittering near, doth look
For his saucy image in the brook;
And wicked crows as black as night
Laugh Haw! Haw! as they alight
Upon some branch above the stream
Where blinding flashes the sun's red gleam.

Oh, spring has come, is the glad refrain
And every bird, no matter how small,
Maketh the greenwood to echo his call;
Glad that they have come North again.
They praise each other
The sky and the weather
As all sing together.

And all is bright and rejoicing and gay
And nothing to do but play, play, play
And find their homes and find a mate,
This is what the little birds say
As they twitter to me on my garden gate.

Unsolved Questions.

An Interesting Chapter of Personal Experience.

The operations of the brain playing upon the sensitized chords which vibrate through the physical body, have never been satisfactorily explained. Many theories have been advanced concerning these active powers fitted by nature to perform the proper action of the mechanism of man.

The indescribable something called mind is the most marvelous production in the universe. Who can fathom the powerful brain cells? Who can enumerate the millions of molecules composing the three hundred square feet of their convoluted surface? Who can see how these batteries, charged with invisible forces, transmit pleasure and pain, joy and sorrow, to the receiving senses? Who can tell how they enable the possessor to perceive truth; to distinguish the relation of things, their causes and effects?

Yet, the intellect ever strives to enter nature's laboratory, in which is compounded the mighty forces that create life; the forces which energize the material patterns of the great Designer. This search is stimulated by the fact that through evolutionary process, from the lowest to the highest types of organization, it finds a systematic purpose which aims to an objective reality. It charms with the mystery which distinguishes the organic kingdom from the inorganic—the mystery of life, which must either be a physiological function or the operations of a spiritual entity.

Sir Oliver Lodge's hypothesis is "Life is a substance independent of matter, which comes and goes, incarnates and decarnates, and re-incarnates in terrestrial things as it pleases, and all this without adding to the stock of energy. That life, personality, soul are veritable entities independent of matter."

Karl Vogt said, "The brain secretes thought as the liver secrets bile." This would emphatically repudiate the existence of a soul essence.

Mr. Herman Wettstein of Georgia, presents this thesis: 'the brain changes the nature of inherent mind element. That mattir contains within itself the elements and power to evolve from its own psychic basis the highest types of intelligence. Still he does not give the impression that mind is the product of protoplasm; rather a name given to the protoplastic functions of highly organized protoplasmic beings.

Yet, all these theories do not prove that the brain is the producer of thought—that silent language so powerful in argument, so independent of surroundings. Neither do they prove that the material energies are susceptible to the control of a distinctive something called soul.

The natural interrogations relative to the soul of these. Did the soul originate in and with the body, and is evolved from it at death? Is generation spontaneous, or originating through creative influences? Has the Creator constantly repeated his original creation through all time? Did all things originate through physical forces which operate according to what are called physical laws; the laws of electricity, magnetism, chemical affinity, etc?—laws which may be said to administer themselves, and is the soul a something that shall never end

From the earliest time, wherever man is found, the idea of a future life persists to exist, the most ineradicable of all intuitions. This instinct may be called the river of life flowing through the universal heart of humanity. Can this faith be a mere hypothesis? Is it not rather a living reality, a feeling like one's own being? It has been said we believe this because we want to. Does not want foretell coming events? What the soul longs for, nature provides. For every desire there is correlate.

The Psychical Research Societies of Europe and America have collected an immense amount of material to prove the soul survives the bodily death, and under certain laws and conditions can communicate with the living.

The distinguished scientist Lombroso; the noted astronomer Flammarion; Richet, professor of Paris faculty of medicine; Hyslop, of Columbia University; Marconi and many others, have arrived at their conclusions through the investigation of phenomena they believe can be explained on no other hypothesis than manifestations of life beyond this.

Crookes, Wallace, Lodge, Myers, Ochorowicz, De Rochas and W. T. Stead, no longer dispute the genuineness of the evidences that have come under their observation. Father Franco said: "No one but a fool can withstand the testimony presented by the above-mentioned investigators."

A little of my own personal experience along these lines may be of interest to the readers of these columns.

During my early investigations of psychic phenomena I became conscious of influences outside of my own natural self. Under certain conditions these influences manifested themselves through my organism. Each expressed a different personality, which was distinct from my own; some controling the organs of speech, expressing thoughts and beliefs which were entirely different from my preconceived ideas; discoursing upon theological and scientific topics and often grand invocations, addressing the Infinite Intelligence or the "All Pervading Spirit of Good."

These were given in the English language, but there were other influences who spoke in strange and unfamiliar tongues. Involuntary movements of the arms and hands which resembled playing on a violin became very marked: Acting upon the suggestion which it offered, I procured this instrument and with a friend who was very psychic, and members of my family, we sat regularly two evenings a week with the violin in our laps for revelations which might exhibit more clearly the meaning of these strange movements. The bow was not used, nor the strings touched by anything visible, still they vibrated, producing sweet harmony, and sound peculiarly its own, and which I do not believe could be reproduced by any material touch. It played no tune.

Under these conditions the violin seemed animated or infused with life and human intelligence, correctly answering our questions by jumping up and down on the floor and ceiling. It would gyrate about our bodies in turn, float in the air and slide upon the floor.

During one of these seances, this friend (a Mrs. G.) said: "I distinctly hear the name of Cram spoken", and see a bright star in front of Mrs. F." Upon the mention of the name of Cram, the violin rose from my lap and went over to Mrs. F., pressing against her face and bosom in a manner which expressed affection. The instrument could only be removed by strong effort, and when we relaxed our hold would return.

A few days previous to this experience we received a letter informing us of the death of a distant relative and close companion of Mr. F.'s school days, whose name was Cram, I would add: There was no way in which Mrs. G. could have learned of the event of her death.

The spirit which animated the violin purported to have been a Russian musician when in earth life. He remained with us several months, and before leaving announced his intention of going where duty called, to aid his fellow-countrymen in their contest against Japan. And what seems most remarkable, from that time we have not been able to get any manifestations from the violin. It is as devoid of faculty and perception as any other piece of wood.

This is but one of many experiences, which at present would be considered outside the pale of natural science. And whether they are evidences of life beyond the grave, or produced by unexplained natural causes, I will leave to those who are exploring the intricate realms of Psychic Phenomena; and should my testimony in any way conduce to the progress of science I shall be glad to have spoken.

There are many other theories concerning these energizing forces which would be interesting to take a cursory view of, but I will simply add: It is not my purpose to attempt to elucidate these questions—merely an interchange of thought. As I gather up these gems of thought and consider magnitude of their different phases; realizing that each master workman is earnestly seeking the victor's crown, in which his gem may find a permanent setting to adorn the head of majestic Truth.

It is not only among the congeries of nerve cells, vibrating molecules, circulating activities and the animation of organic beings, but in the rich storehouse of inorganic nature, still waiting for man's analytical skill to decipher and to unfold as his needs require, the occulated treasures which seem to be the designs of a great Designer.

E'en the daylight or the darkness,
E'en the tempest or the calm;
E'en the star-bespangled heavens,
E'en old Earth's alluring charm,
E'en the tiny tendrils clinging
To the mighty oak, that they May reach a height, yes, nearer
To the sun's life-giving ray.

From the ocean, that receiver
And bereaver of life's gain;
To the desert of illusion
Thirsting for a drop of rain.
Hills and valleys clothed in verdure,
Mountains capped with ermine white;
Sparkling waters flowing onward,
Iterateth—"God is might."

E'en the wind's enchanting music,
Mingled with the song of birds;
Speak in truth's undying language,
Bid us stop and read God's word.
Yes, it seems this innate something,
Aye, this power of human mind,
Is, like love, a gift supernal,
Is, like love a gift divine.

O, Life, where thy beginning?
O, Life, where is thy end?
O, Life, what is thy mission?
How soul and body blend?

Onset Notes.

The meeting at the camp opened to-day, July 19, under the most favorable conditions. There are more people here than usual at this season of the camp. One in looking around would think it was a continuation of last season, and the people must have been here all winter. It had the appearance of mid-season.

There is hardly a closed cottage, and the Hotels are doing a good business. One dining room manager told the writer that he fed seven hundred at dinner to-day. He has been here a good many years and he says this is the best opening he has ever had.

During Saturday night it rained, which was very welcome, as we had had no rain for three months. It left the grove wet so the meeting was held in the Temple, and there was a fine audience.

Dr. Geo. A. Fuller was the speaker in the morning, and Mr. Thomas Cross in the afternoon. This was the first time in fifteen weeks that Dr. Fuller has been able to leave his house since he met with the accident that broke his leg. He delivered his address seated in a wheel chair, and when he was wheeled upon the platform he received an ovation that made him feel he had a host of friends at Onset.

The applause was long and loud, and cast an influence of harmony all over the meeting, and inspired the Doctor so that he gave one of the best addresses heard from this platform for many a day. At the close of his address the Doctor held a reception upon the platform. The large audience passing from one side of the platform to the other, each one stopping to shake hands with Dr. Fuller, and wishing him the best of success.

A fine concert by the New Bedford Band preceded the lecture. The meeting was opened by the writer who acted as chairman in place of Dr. Fuller.

Mr. A. J. Maxham, that ever popular singer, sang one of his sweet songs, after which Dr. Fuller read a poem, following with an invocation. After another song by Mr. Maxham, Dr. Fuller gave a masterly and eloquent welcome to the audience.

Then the audience joined with Mr. Maxham in singing "America." Mr. Thomas Cross gave the benediction.

In the afternoon the meeting was held in the auditorium, and a large audience gathered to listen to that ever popular speaer, Mr. Thos. Cross.

Mr. Maxham opened the meeting with singing. After reading a poem, Mr. Cross took for his subject, "What Spiritualism Means to Me," and gave a grand lecture. It as full of food for thought and those that heard it will think of it for a long time. Mr. Cross is a speaker that leaves an impression with his audience, and is always looked up to to give out grand thoughts. He said Spiritualism teaches us how to know and understand ourselves.

We have been content to live in slumber, and gone through our existence half blind.

Spritualism has said, rise in the dignity of thy manhood and womanhood. The great spirit of liberty keeps the body pure.

Speakers for Sunday, July 26, are Rev. Juliette Yeaw, and Rev. F. A. Wiggin.

Tuesday, July 28, Mr. Wellman C. Whitney.

Thursday, July 30, Miss Susie C. Clark.

Saturday, August 1, Massachusetts State Day.

Saturday, August 2nd, Miss Clark and Mr. W. J. Colville.

President Whitmore is seen at the camp looking well and feeling pleased with the opening.

Page's Orchestra furnished music for the dance, and it is the best we have ever had.

Chesterfield Camp.

Again I wish to say a kindly word for good, beautiful Camp Chesterfield.

Sunday, July 19, the board kindly accorded us the privilege of holding a service for the benefit of the N. S. A., the State Association had pledged for them. Mrs. Mong and I wrote and sent cards all over the state, wrote ads. for six prominent papers in the state, and as we thought, left no stone unturned to make our meeting a financial success. To add further, we decided to sell ice cream on that day, making a double duty for the cleaning of the room and preparing for same was no little job.

Thursday morning came. All were astir early. The sun slowly crept from behind the clouds in the east, sending a thrill of warmth through our veins, and as the day crept on it was delightful. The crowd was slow in coming, We had an appreciative audience, though small. Our lecturers were here, and at 10:30, ready to commence.

Dr. Gould, well known Spiritualist, addressed us, and in his pleasing, convincing manner, made all understand he was no novice at the work.

At two o'clock Dr. Genge, lately from the Christian church, showed us by his forcible manner, that inspiration was not alone of self. This was his first lecture on a Spiritualist platform, and it was fine. He won many friends, and I predict ere long, will be working heart and hand with the band that controls him, for all that is good and beautiful in our cause. I am sure we need honest workers, who love the cause because it brings joy to so many sorrowing hearts. God speed the day when all preachers will, like him, dare to stand alone, rather than preach that which they do not believe, because it means bread and butter.

Camp is dressed in all of Nature's beauty, and by the president and his efficient staff of co-workers, has been made a perfect paradise, and when the camp opens on Thursday, will be in perfect harmony with all-true Spiritualists. Every nook and corner has been renovated, and neither time nor money has been spared to make it a home for anyone.

At the close of the day, the president ordered electric lights turned on, and the camp loomed up and seemed to enjoy the light produced by art.

The crowd being small, receipts were small accordingly, and we felt disappointed, but as every Spiritualist has, as far as we could find them, been appealed to to contribute to this expense, we sincerely hope they will not fail to respond to the appeal.

Let us now put forth every effort to have the N. S. A. Convention that meets in the beautiful city of Indianapolis in October, a success in every way. Let us unite our effort for the good of our cause everywhere. Let us band together, for in unity there is strength.

Let us with heart and hand seek to place Spiritualism upon the high pedestal it has so justly won.

MRS. MARTHA WOOLSEY.
Chesterfield Camp, Indiana.

Review of Rev. R. V. Hunter's Attack Upon Spiritualism.

A distinctly valuable service to Spiritualists has been rendered by Prof. W. M. Lockwood by publishing in neat pamphlet form his able and masterly reply to the attack of Rev. R. V. Hunter upon Spiritualism. Fairly and squarely he meets and demolishes the doughty Reverend's boldly asserted statements. We opine that the Rev. Hunter and others of his kind will hesitate before they attempt again to demolish Spiritualism, after reading Prof. Lockwood's review.

Additional value is given to this brochure by a striking list of names of Professors, Scientists, Actors, Lawyers and statesmen who accept the facts of modern Spiritualism.

For fifteen cents this valuable pamphlet can be procured of Prof. W. M. Lockwood, Lily Dale, N. Y.

The Southern Cassadaga opens February 7, and closes March 21, 1909. For particulars address Mrs. A. M. Spencer, Corresponding Secretary, Lake Helen, Fla.

A Straight Talk With You.

Half the misery in this world is due to ill-health, father of Poverty, in turn the breeder of many evils. A physically normal man or woman is almost a rarity these days—statistics say 1 in 82. The impossibility of bettering this state of affairs is not directly the fault of the medical profession. No physician can hope to cure disease unless he can correctly diagnose disease; and he knows it. The M. D. diagnoses disease from the symptoms presented which are very often misleading. Here is where he "falls down;" and "in spite of the best medical skill," etc., poor Jones dies of some "complication" which the private autopsy discloses he never had.

The truth is, that when an M. D. competes with a person gifted with clairvoyance in discovering the seat of the trouble he is heavily handicapped. Here is an illustration—

Between 60 and 100 people visit Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson at her home in Buffalo every day in the year; and in addition to this, Mrs. Matteson treats between 30 and 40 people every day in the year by mail. Why? Because she has cured their friends, who have sent them to her. Did you ever see between 60 and 100 patents waiting in an M. D.'s anteroom? Mrs. Matteson is not an M. D.; and of course her enormous practice has time and again excited the envy of the "regulars," who can't understand her success. The medical societies have had Mrs. Matteson brought before 14 Grand Juries, in three different counties (Erie, Niagara and Genesee), to indict her for practicing medicine without a license; but every Grand Jury has refused to indict her—though technically she is guilty of fracturing the law. Why have the Grand Juries failed to indict?

HERE'S ONE REASON—

There Are Thousands Similar

May 1, 1908.

Mrs. J. H. R. Matteson cured me 25 years ago of Bright's disease with her No. 12 Clairvoyant Remedy. I was given up to die by five of our best doctors. She cured me in three months' treatment. I have recommended the No. 12 kidney and liver cure to many, and all have received good health through it. Respectfully, John L. Chase, R. F. D., Gasport, Niagara Co. N. Y.

Treatment always reasonable, and cures absolutely guaranteed. If interested, send name on postal for booklet of information; and kindly mention names of invalid friends—they will thank you for it.

Psychic Unfoldment

No one can unfold all the phases but each one can unfold some phase of psychical power, by which he can demonstrate his own Divinity and his immortality. My system will teach you how. It has been doing so over (15) fifteen years. Spiritualists who believe in their own circles have found it a great help of practical benefit. It is endorsed by hundreds of students. All declare it a revelation. It is sane, scientific and practical. Read a few testimonials: "The lessons are remarkable."—Dr. David Crichton, Newtyle, Scotland. "I have developed more clairvoyancee than anything else."—Miss A. Hodgkins, Buffalo, N. Y. "I can always see and hear at my sittings."—Mrs Bowers, Toronto. Mr. Grumbine gladly refers to three or four prominent Spiritualists in the field work as his pupils who unfolded by his System. Mrs. J. Hary of St. Louis, and Mrs. L. Wilson of Cleveland, also Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Smith of Lowell and Methuen, Mass. Send stamped addressed envelope for circulars and percentage of psychical powers to J. C. F. STARTLING FACTS,

OR

Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

RADIANT ENERGY and Its Analysis, Its Relation to Modern Astrophysics, by Edgar L. Larkin, Director Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California. This book treats upon a new branch of research into the laws of nature, and to the student or even an admirer of the modern astrological literature will surely come with great interest. Price, cloth, $1.75.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 38 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 8, 1908 NO. 976

COMMUNICATION FROM THE GOLDEN GATE.

Showing That Spiritualism Is Making Great Progress.

To the Editor:—Did you know that in this big city of earthquake and fire ruins at the Golden Gate of the far West, the Spiritualists are making strenuous efforts to regain their lost conditions, and commence anew to spread the beautiful light? Well, here is something in the world of Spiritualism. Please take notice:

There is an organization that is known as The Modern Spiritual Church of San Francisco, California. It was organized November 25, 1905, with about 30 members, Mrs. Carrie Wermont Bazello, pastor, president; Mr. Booth vice-president; Capt. Bert Stout, secretary, and Mrs. H. H. Barton, treasurer. Meetings were held once a week up to the great fire, and earthquake, April 18, 1906.

The church up to that time had about 100 members in good standing. That calamity burnt up the records and books, and scattered the members to the four corners, and leaving them without homes and destitute; but a short time after the earthquake and fire our worthy pastor made a call and rallied the members together. She rented a flat at 451 Waller street, this city, and set the chariot running. Meetings are held every Saturday evening. The audiences are large and intelligent. This church held a splendid anniversary meeting of Modern Spiritualism on the evening of March 29, 1908, in the parlors of our pastor. There was not standing room. Everyone was well pleased with the exercises. Those taking part were the pastor, Mrs. Carrie Wermont Buzello, Mrs. Bessie VanSickel, our vice-president, Mrs Mary Hovet, Dr. J. W. Cowan and Capt. Bert Stout, secretary. Everyone did their part well. There are no better platform mediums than Mrs. G. W. Buzello, Mrs. Mary Hovet, and Dr. J. W. Cowan. Mrs. Bessie VanSickel is a splendid spirit picture painter. She gave us a fine address at this anniversary, and has given us several addresses since. Capt. Stout read one of Dr. T. Wilkins' beautiful poems, and gave a short lecture therefrom. Our meetings are growing more interesting every Sunday evening.

A short time ago we had a christening on a Sunday evening. Our pastor, aided by Dr. J. W. Cowan, performed the ceremony. It was quite interesting. the young gentleman, whose first name is Robert, only eleven months of age, behaved nicely. Our pastor held him in her arms, while Dr. Cowan laid beautiful flowers on his head. He took hold of them and throwed them on the floor, as much as to say, "I don't want them."

After the ceremony this young gentleman thanked the audience and those who performed the ceremony by laughing at us, and then sat down to his bottle without inviting the rest of us to partake. Well, that is the way with babies. The mother and father of this, the youngest member of our church, are members and are working hard for Spiritualism.

The California State Spiritualist's Association will hold its thirteenth annual convention here in this city, commencing Friday at 9:30, a. m,. September 4th, and closing Sunday, September 6; three days' session.

The Spiritualists of this city and at San Jose, Sacramento, Oakland, Alameda, Berkley and other near-by towns, are putting in their best licks to make this the best and grandest convention ever held in California.

The Modern Spiritual Church will be well represented, and we will do our part to help make this convention one of the best ever held in the United States.

Brother Francis, it is about time that Spiritualists should put on their best clothes, go forward in grand array and demand that no laws shall be made that would take any of our rights away, for are we not American citizens? Why should we not worship good (God) to suit ourselves.

I shall mention The Progressive Thinker everywhere, perhaps some one will take it. God bless it and all that are concerned in its welfare. All Spiritualists and investigators should enroll themselves as subscribers, by so doing they help the glorious light of truth, and be proud to be Spiritualists. I am very proud to stand before the world and proclaim my Spiritualism.—Amen.

Silence.

That "silent waters deepest run"

There's silence in the stagnant pool;
A silent man may be a fool,
Or mayhap when to him we come,
We'll find the man is deaf and dumb.

Lily Dale Camp.

A Triumph of Mediumship at That Favorite Place of Resort.

We congratulate Pierre L. O. A. Keeler in accepting the invitation of the Management of the Lily Dale Camp, and thereby establishing the genuineness of his own mediumship on a solid rock, and making him more popular than ever. We also congratulate Dr. Warne and those who took the initiative in this movement. The proper testing of trumpet and materializing mediums would reduce the number who would attend the various camp meetings to an exceedingly low number. We venture to say that there are not over two or three materializing mediums in the United States who will submit to the mosquito bar test. And why? Because they know they resort to FRAUD.

It is regrettable that all the mediums attacked in 1907 for their work at Lily Dale, are not attending the Assembly of 1908. Among the absentees who have as yet sent neither regrets, nor reasons for non appearance, are: Joseph Jonson, Mrs. M. T. McCoy, Mrs. Effie Moss, Cleon B. Nichols, Mrs. S. E. Pemberton.

Mr. Norman, after ignoring the Board's request for one week, has promised to give them soon a demonstration of spirit photography. A similar invitation has just been sent to Mrs. Maud Gates and daughters, who are in attendance, but there was some delay in finding out that they were the "Mrs. and Misses Gray" of Mr. Carrington's Report.

Mr. Keeler has won many friends by the courteous and courageous manner in which he met the desires of the board. He deserves greater credit for his course because he was surfeited with advice to ignore the board entirely. The whole camp feels the lifting of a cloud of uncertainty, while the atmosphere is cleared of a floating mass of misunderstandings and misrepresentations because of Mr. Keeler's trial and triumph.

All mediums who imitate his straightforward method of meeting proper investigation will find they, too, have bound laymen to themselves by enduring bands of confidence, which will stand them in good stead when unjustly assailed. Below is a copy of the board's request to Mr. Keeler and a report upon the results.

GEO. B. WARNE.

Lily Dale, N. Y., July 19, 1908.

P. L. O. A. Keeler, Esq.,
Lily Dale, N. Y.

Fellow Worker: It is unnecessary for us to tell you that prominent representaives of the psychic and secular press of our country have been giving currency to reports which seriously attack your personal integrity, reflect upon the character of Lily Dale Assembly and call down ridicule upon the Cause of Spiritualism on both sides of the ocean.

Having confidence in the genuineness of your mediumistic power we invite you to give to the Official Board of our camp a slate writing seance under such conditions as will silence the cavil of outsiders and enable us to fully meet the misrepresentations of your work from any and every source.

We believe it possible for you to do this and allow us to bring our own slates, which you will not touch yourself, but allow to remain in our own sight and keeping. If agreeable to you, we would ask that the trial be made both with and without written slips addressed by the sitters to persons in the spirit world.

Cordially and Fraternally Yours,
ESSIE C. HUMPHREY,
CARRIE REED,
GEO. B. WARNE,
JAS. W. STEARNS,
LEE MORSE,
L. C. HUTCHINSON.

TO LOVERS OF FAIRNESS AND A SQUARE DEAL:—

The officers of Lily Dale Assembly have just completed an investigations of the slate writing mediumship of Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, the integrity of whose methods was recently publicly assailed by Hereward Carrington, the confidential representative of Prof. James H. Hyslop, of New York City. During the forenoon of Thursday, July 23, 1908, Mrs. Humphrey, President; H. W. Richardson, Vice-President and Geo. B. Warne, Treasurer, selected two from the center of a newly opened bundle of slates at the general store of A. S. Dayton, placed upon both frames and writing surfaces of the inner side a special stamp, whose immediate duplication was an absolute impossibility, and went together to Mr. Keeler's seance room in his cottage at Lily Dale. The morning sun was at its brightest and the single window, as well as the door, stood wide open. Each one of the visitors wrote her, or his, own name upon a separate slip of paper, folded it tightly and deposited it upon the table beside the slate. No names of friends in spirit life were at any time written by the sitters.

Neither the slips, the slates, or Mr. Keeler's hands were for one instant out of sight of three pairs of watchful eyes.

During the sitting, the following words written in green color, appeared upon the paper bearing Dr. Warne's signature, which was at no time unfolded—"It is difficult to get anything on slates not magnetized."

At the close of the sitting, lasting one and one-quarter hours, there were found upon the inside of the slates, one message from a brother of Mr. Richardson; four messages for Mrs. Humphrey and her immediate family; two messages for Dr. Warne; and one for an unidentified personality. One was written in yellow, but the others in common slate pencil, a small point of which was placed between the slates at the beginning of the seance.

During the sitting, Dr. Warne remarked "that the rabid assaults upon Spiritualism by the late Rev. DeWitt Talmage were probably inspired by excarnate spirits, who hated that system while they dwelt in mortal bodies." An intelligent eavesdropper was evidently about, for upon the slates this message was found:

"Your idea about Talmage is correct.—Moses Hull."

At the time the writing seemed to be done, the slates were held above the table by the hands of the medium, and the sitters grasping the corners; vibrations were sensed by touch; distinct sounds as of a moving pencil were plainly audible, and these manifestations scarcely reached three minutes in duration.

THE MESSAGES WERE NOT WRITTEN IN ADVANCE—A SUBSTITUTION OF SLATES WAS IMPOSSIBLE—Mr. Keeler could not have written them during the sitting, for he could not have gained access to the inside surfaces, where they were found, without immediate detection.

On Friday afternoon, July 24, another section of the Official Board of the Assembly, Messrs. J. W. Stearns, Lee morse and L. C. Hutchinson, sat with Mr. Keeler, supplying their own slates and exercising similar precautions throughout their investigation. They received eleven separate messages, one being in Greek, one in German, one in French, one in Swedish, and one in Japanese or Chinese. Those in Greek and French were pronounced absolutely correct grammatically and as to accent, by a distinguished linguist, who is a visitor at Lily Dale, while Prof. Larson renders a like verdict upon the communication in the Swedish tongue.

The preliminary precautions taken, the lynx-eyed observation employed throughout the demonstrations and the results obtained in each instance under the watchfulness of six, instead of two eyes, convince us that beyond all question Mr. Keeler possesses genuine mediumship for the phase of slate writing.

CHURCH COMES TO CUPID'S AID.

Provides Courting-room for Its Young Members.—Will be Equipped With Cosy Corners, Screens, Chaperones and Soft-Toned Lights.—Pastor Asserts It is Essential, and Church Should Supply.

Chicago,, Ill.—A courting-room, complete with cosy corners, screens, chaperones and soft-toned lights is to be the aid to Dan Cupid, supplied by Christ church, Presbyterian, at Orchard and Center streets, just as soon as the property adjoining the church edifice can be secured.

The project for a courting-room was first broached by the pastor, Rev. J. N. Snyder, a week ago. He was in earnest about it, and the leaders in the church fell in with the idea at once, and all arrangements have been completed. The idea was advanced in a description to the congregation of the new church he hoped to see built soon.

"We want a gymnasium, with places for the basketball and baseball teams to practice," he said. "The boys of these teams come to church right along. Then we want a rest room, a reading-room, and finally a courting-room. This is a church of young people. They should not have to go outside the church for any essential, and a place to court is an essential."

If in addition to the courting-room the church will furnish a good astrological Spiritual medium who would honestly tell the young people who were natural mates and affinities; there would result very happy marriages. The divorce courts, suicides and murders would be avoided in order to separate mismated people.

Then they should be taught to use good sense in begetting children, and beget them under the very best influences and conditions. Then the future generation would be a blessing to all, and prisons would be empty, and wars no more. G. E. S.

CRIME CURE.

Music and Musical Culture Declared to Be the Panacea for Crime.

To the Editor:—Chicago for the first time has entered upon a new untried, sane plan for crime cure.

The question is often asked: "What shall we do with our criminals?"

No punishment or religious training seems adequate to reform them.

Some declare they are as weeds in the garden of human nature, and for protection of society ought to be killed.

At a recent social gathering of musicians at the Chicago Musical Seminary, a study of criminology, its cause and cure, came up for discussion, when it was unanimously and enthusiastically agreed that music or musical culture would be the great panacea for all unmorality or crime, now afflicting civilized society everywhere.

Marie G. Macdonald, a woman preeminently of humanitarian ideals, and head of the Chicago Musical Seminary, declares free musical education among the masses, especially among the young of the destitute idle poor is the only one effective cure. "Give", says she, "to the young of the destitute idle poor, music or musical culture and soon no more will you hear of the crime evil."

"Although music," she says, "has many charms, emotional and sentimental—the greatest charm lies in its moral effects upon human life and human conduct. "For who," she says, "ever heard of a habitual, professional criminal; a burglar or a hold-up man, being a musician?"

"Go," she says, "through any of our penitentiaries and you may not find one convict in a hundred who will know anything of music. If they did," she says, "they would not find themselves in the penitentiary."

Music, she claims, is the divinest human thing on earth and the greatest moral force in the world, the greatest civilizer and uplifting force the world has ever known, and could be made the greatest of all other known forces for the extinction of crime.

To ths end, Marie G. Macdonald, after a reasonable, calm and deliberate consideration, has decided to throw open wide the doors of the Chicago Musical Seminary, that the poor, the very poor, may enter as well as the very rich, making it a veritable free public musical school for the sons and daughters of the unemployed or those unable to pay, and who, in addition thereto, will receive free of cost all necessary written music and musical instruments to take to their homes for home practice.

"The lack of music or musical education among the masses," she says, "is deplorable—result—a land filled with criminals."

"Develop in the young," she says, "the love for music or musical culture, and when they grow up they are sure to go right in morals or religion. For while social life may be much improved by judicious laws and punishment, musical culture can uplift social life and keep it there."

Music, too, she claims, possesses certain rare therapeutic values, for musical vibrations when rightly directed will soothe or animate and greatly conduce to health.

"Disease," she says, "being discord—psychological discord—and music harmony—psychological harmony—music, therefore, will greatly help promote normal harmonial health—especially in maladies of the mind.

Marie G. Macdonald is a recognized leading musical educator and her philanthropic plan, for crime cure, is praiseworthy.

A STAUNCH DEFENDER.

R. A. Dague Says There is Genuine Materialization and Slate-Writing.

To the Editor: I have never had the pleasure of meeting your correspondent, P. A. Jensen, of Los Angeles, but I have often read in your excellent paper articles from his pen. I think he claims to be a Spiritualist. I do not now remember that he has ever declared his belief that there is any genuine physical phenomena, while I do remember reading several articles in which he created the impression in my mind that he thinks there is no genuine materialization or spirit slate-writing. He has surely been very unfortunate in his investigations of these two phases of phenomena.

Now I know that there are some fraudulent materializing and slate-writing mediums. I also know there are some genuine ones. Several years ago I resided in Osceola, Iowa. Seven men of mature years and of level heads, desiring to know if materialization were true or false, arranged with a man whom I will name Mr. White, a carpenter, of an adjoining county, to hold a series of seances. Mr. White was not a professional medium. He was not widely known.

We prepared a cabinet in this way: In the residence of Hon. John Clancy, judge of the Circuit court, was a small bed-room in which was but one window and one door. The door opened into a large sitting room. We took everything out of that bedroom except an arm-chair. We securely nailed down the windows. We took the door off its hinges and suspended a black curtain over the doorway. We now seated Mr. White in the chair about seven feet from the doorway in the bedroom. We fastened the chair to the floor. With needles and thread we sewed mittens to the medium's coat-sleeves. We sewed the bottoms of his pantaloons to the carpet on the floor. We fixed Mr. White so securely that it would have been impossible for him to move a distance of two inches in any direction without breaking the white thread with which we secured him in the chair. Even if his hands had been free, he could not have reached half the distance intervening between him and the door-way.

Seven men, and as many women, now seated themselves in the sitting room, which was well lighted.

In about thirty minutes hands would be thrust through a slit in that curtain. The head and face of our departed friends, whom we readily recognized, would be projected out into the light. We passed tablets of paper and a pencil in. We could hear writing being executed, and soon written messages would be thrown out to us. We held handkerchiefs a few inches in front of the curtain. A hand would dart out, clutch the handkerchief, and in a few seconds it would be thrown out to us again tied into many hard knots. An ordinary small rope was held up to the curtain. It was jerked in, and in an incredibly short time was thrown out again, tied in perhaps twenty or thirty hard knots.

After the seance Mr. White was found stupid and very pale, but in exactly the position we had placed him. After a number of such seances, Judge Clancy, his estimable wife, and the dozen other investigators, including the writer, were convinced without the shadow of a doubt that we had witnessed genuine materializations and other physical phenomena.

Brother Jensen, in The Progressive Thinker of April 11, No. 959, writes as though he thought all slate-writing mediums are frauds. Now, some of them doubtless are, but I know at least one in California who is genuine. As Mr. Jensen named no one of those whom he regards as frauds, I will not use the name of my genuine one in this article, but I am prepared to defend one California slate-writing medium if Mr. Jensen ever calls him a fraud by name in print. I do not mean to say that I will defend my medium's moral character and commend him as a strictly temperate and pious individual, for I do not know enough about his private life to do that. What I mean to say is that he is a genuine slate-writing medium. I have attended about sixty of his public seances, and have had thirteen or fourteen private sittings with him. Several times I carried my own slates, called on him in broad day-light, never let the slates leave my possession a moment, and yet have had them filled by writing in which names, dates, events, advice, etc., were given, about which the medium knew nothing. One time, as I stood with this medium on his door-steps, he said, "Mr. Dague, my guide says you have a sealed letter in your pocket. The conditions are good today. If you will hold one end of that letter and let me hold the other end, my guide thinks he can write on the blank portion of the enclosed papers."

I had such a letter. I took it from my pocket. I held one end, the medium the other end. He trembled a moment, then said, "My control says he has accomplished the feat." I tore open the envelope, and there written in a plain hand, were several lines addressed to me and signed by the full name of my brother who passed to the spirit world more than forty years ago, of whom the medium could not have known.

I do not doubt that there are mediums who practice fraud. There are also quack doctors, grafting politicians, hypocritical preachers, dishonest bankers, and bad men and women in all the walks of life. Let them be exposed and punished, but let us be careful to not charge crime and rascality upon our fellow men on mere suspicion. Let us first know they are guilty, before we assail them. I have personally known honest mediums who abandoned the exercise of their mediumistic gifts because they were accused of practicing fraud by raw investigators who knew no more about the laws governing mediumship than a child knows the laws of chemistry or mathematics. Some of the very best mediums themselves are utterly unable to explain the phenomena occurring in their presence.

Come, friends, let us reason together; let us patiently investigate and be tolerant, and kind. The wisest of us know precious little about the law governing spirit phenomena. The world's greatest scientists, such as Wallace, Lodge, Flammarion and Hyslop, who have investigated Spiritualism for the past twenty years, are much less inclined to cry "fraud," "fraud," than the cross-roads preacher or average respectable citizen who has attended a half-dozen seances, and who demands that the phenomena shall take place according to the rules they prescribe, and if it does not come in strict compliance to such rules or "test conditions," he rushes to the house-tops or the newspaper and denounces Spiritualism as a humbug.

I am persuaded to believe that spirit-phenomena is produced in harmony with laws of chemistry understood by disembodied intelligences, but of which our wisest scientists are still totally ignorant.

The foregoing is not written to provoke controversy with Brother Jensen or any one else. My sole object in writing is to contend that there are genuine materializations and genuine spirit slate-writing, and to stand up and be counted as a defender of the truth.

SOME MIRACULOUS CURES.

Result From Pilgrimage to Shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre.

Moncton, N. B.—Some stories of miraculous cures are related by the pilgrims who left here last week for Ste. Anne de Beaupre.

Robert Peters of Matepedia, who had not walked without crutches for 11 years, left his crutches at the shrine and walked without their aid.

Mrs. Fitzsimmons of Alberton, P. E. I., who was paralyzed and unable to walk for three years, was completely cured.

A man named McBride of Kentville, N. H., who was almost blind, claims that he can now read the finest print.

Another miraculous cure is that of a man named Guthro, of Antigonish, N. S., who had an injured back and had been unable to sit up for three years. On the train on his way back he was able to be about with the other passengers.

The cures are vouched for by a number of persons who accompanied the pilgrimage.—Montreal Star.

The above cures are simply the result of spirit influence —Catholic spirits, of course. The shrine of St. Anne is simply the focus of their powers. There is nothing whatever miraculous in the cures.

ANTI-CATHOLIC.

A CURIOUS PHENOMENON.

The Eccentric Actions of a Clock.

Last July my clock seemed to be acting strangely without any apparent cause. It would jump ahead from ten to forty minutes each day or two, for at least eight months. I had a sitting with a medium at this time, and it failed to jump for about eight days.

I then took it to a jeweler, and he overhauled it and said the clock was in good condition, but whenever I would get it home it would jump time in the same way. I took it to three different jewelers and they all said there was nothing at all the matter with the clock.

I then bought a new clock, took it home, and this time both my new clock and Waltham watch jumped one hour and forty-five minutes at the same time, and have never jumped since. FLETCHER WILSON.

BECOMING MORE CRITICAL.

The Numerous Frauds in Our Ranks in Connection With Physical Manifestation, has Rendered the Public More Critical.—All Along the Line as Exhibited by the Following from the Warsaw (Ind.) Times of July 20.

Fearing an expose, John Ramsey, of Wabash, a professed medium, who has given five seances in Warsaw during the past few weeks, backed down Sunday evening and positively refused to conduct a meeting, because, he said, that there appeared to be some dissatisfaction with his work. On first coming to Warsaw Ramsey had told his new acquaintances that he could convince them that there is something in Spiritualism. He was given the opportunity. Everything went well at the first sitting, the second, third and fourth sittings, but certain persons who were in his audience at the fourth meeting became skeptical regarding certain things that were said and done and they decided to learn more of Ramsey and his feats in their own way.

The test came with his fifth appearance Sunday afternoon. With the room Ramsey and his audience occupied darkened, the so-called medium began his program, but had not progressed very far until certain of his acts and assertions were openly questioned by visitors. Ramsey was supposed to move a table by suggestion, or rather the spirits were supposed to move the table and other pieces of furniture. Certain persons in the audience decided to make a thorough test of Ramsey's suppernatural powers.

All of the persons "in the circle" were instructed to sit erect, with their hands lying upon their knees, "just so." One man whom Ramsey apparently suspected, had a mandolin placed across the top of his hands by Ramsey who intimated that the instrument might play during the sitting, but it didn't. Finally the table-moving feature of the program came on. An attempt of one of Ramsey's auditors to solve the mystery resulted in that auditor being struck on the top of the head by a horn. It was then that he realized that Ramsey had a pair of piercing eyes and that he could see in the dark something after the owl fashion. But Ramsey couldn't watch everybody at once and at an opportune moment another man in the audience stuck out his foot and gave that moving table a jerk that came near sending that long-legged medium on his head on the floor. The action of the auditor had the effect of bringing Ramsey's shoe in contact with the feet of a woman who was in the circle. Somebody whispered loud enough for all to hear: "He's moving the table with his foot." Ramsey changed the subject and went on with the program. After this he was very plainly nervous because of the discovery of his trickery.

Another meeting had been scheduled to take place at 8 o'clock sharp. In fact it had been announced that nobody arriving after 8 o'clock would be allowed to enter the circle. There was a goodly audience on hand long before 8 o'clock and Ramsey was there too, but he watched his chance and slipped away. The time for the meeting arrived and he had not returned. Two members of the would-be audience were delegated to look him up. They found him half a block away and learned to their surprise that he had bolted; that he understood that his work was not satisfactory and that he would not give another seance.

"I suppose that we are to understand that you object to certain persons sitting in the circle?" said one of the members of the committee, and Ramsey evaded the question. It was then suggested that he hold the meeting and keep those persons he mistrusted from being in attendance. Ramsey expressed satisfaction at this, but when it came to the actual point of holding the meeting he backed down.

The fact is, Ramsey's work as a Spiritualist was one of the crudest kind and his expose had been planned to take place Sunday night. Members of that audience were equipped with powerful flash lights and other things that would have made it interesting for Ramsey had he decided to hold the meeting. He had a premonition, perhaps, that something was wrong. Anyhow the experience of the afternoon was enough to convince him that he had lost his grip. Ramsey, who is about twenty-four years of age, charged each person in his audience twenty-five cents a sitting. There will be no more sittings.

Race Suicide.

To the Editor:—The Progressive Thinker editorial, "The Race Suicide Question," is admirable; cannot be answered by ordinary methods of reasoning.

"If nine-tenths of all births are to suffer the tortures of hell forever, as revivalists teach, race suicide should be universal."

This is just what I have asserted for years in my rough manner.

But what an incubus is the belief in the horrible doctrines of the churches, on our statesmen, who profess them, and the ignorant who believe them.

How many Roosevelts, Bryans or Tafts, in their own hearts, believe the creeds of the churches?

If one human being is to suffer hell torments forever, then it were better that the race should cease this moment—that, in fact, it never should have existed. If death ends all, for one I do not believe the pleasure enjoyed here compensates for all the suffering by war, plague, starvation, heat, cold and other torture, to say nothing of the horrible mental suffering. Demonstrated Immortality by Infallible Appliances.

Those Who Have Lived Great Lives Here Have Come Back to Assure Us of the Eternal Existence of the Soul.

The eminent and excellent Rev. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Kentucky, in a recent sermon on the question, "Are those we call dead, alive?" said:

"Let it be affirmed in the very outset of these remarks that we can not demonstrate immortality! It does not belong to the scientific realm! As well require that we discover the soul with a scalpel or microscope."

But I believe that whatever is an abiding truth or permanent fact in nature is demonstrable, and that whatever belongs to nature and to common sense belongs also to the scientific realm.

The most expressive and scintillating garlands of human words are but inadequate instruments for the measurement of the fathomless feelings and exalted conceptions of the Immortal Soul, which Soul is not only the Creator and Demonstrator of everything that is known in the "scientific realm," but is transcendently grander in its inherent and eternal principles of Life and Intelligence than its co-related results.

Science, under any department name of knowledge, is admitted to be the truest definitions and explanations of absolutely known facts and realities belonging to said department of classified information. Without the soul there would be neither life nor science nor need of science; surely, then, science is but the servitor of the soul in testing the realities and properties of its environments.

"Are those we call Dead, Alive?" predominates from the fountain heart-throb of humanity through the pulse-beat of the Universe to the widest extremes of the glory and the gloom of human consciousness! It is The One Momentous Problem of All Ages.

Do we need the scalpel or microscope to discover wind, steam and electricity? or, is not their existence otherwise clearly demonstrated?

The existence of the soul is universally concluded to be the real man, and the physical body as merely the material machine for his locomotion and expression, while among his material environments.

That man can live out of and independent of the body is the problem to solve. This we purpose to do.

The body is not dead until life has ceased to animate it, therefore death, means the absolute separation of the living spirit from the body. The bodies of Jesus and Dimas died upon the crosses. Their spirits were then and there separated from their bodies, and at once entered into Paradise, an ethereal spiritual condition of life and realm of abode.

Jesus said to Dimas, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise,"—in a spiritual world as real as this, fully conscious of life and its environments, freed from torments and tormentors, realizing that no man can take our life from us, though he may utterly destroy our physical bodies. Whether those bodies may remain upon the crosses or be consigned to graves, death shall lose its sting, because death can only destroy the material body, for the soul, which is the living spiritual man, is as everlasting as the Infinite and Eternal God. "He that heareth my words hath everlasting life." He can neither acquire it nor lose it, but must live forevermore.

"To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise," is a plain and simple statement, easy of comprehension, and in this case very important, and full of consolation. The Savior surely meant just what he said,—that in a few moments their suffering spirits would be free, and enter into the spiritual world, for on the next day after his cruel death he returned "in another form,"—the spirit form,—and proved to his loving friends beyond all reasonable doubt his positive, personal immortality.

On the next day, "the Sabbath day, as it began to dawn came the two Marys," with flowers and spices as tokens of their love and reverence, which they placed at his grave, and, "as they went away they met Jesus," but they did not know him. Why? If he had been in the same body which they had so often seen they would instantly have known him. But in his gentle unmistakable voice he said, "Be not afraid," and kindly and fully assured them who he was. Then with holy joy they greeted him, and ran with swift and tireless feet to tell his message and their gladness to other sorrowing friends.

As Simon and Cleopas were on their way to the village of Emmaus Jesus drew near and went with them. Their hearts burned within them as he talked, for they knew his voice and believed this was Jesus, but he was "in another form" (Mark 16;2) than the one they had seen him in. Had it been the same body they would at once have recognized him. He completely identified himself to them and then "vanished out of their sight," which he could not have done in the same physical body. They, like the glad-hearted women, hurried, the same hour, to tell that the Golden Gospel of Eternal Life, so comprehensively taught by Jesus, and now absolutely demonstrated by his positive personal appearance and communication with them, was certainly true.

The original Scriptures are very plain in this matter, and even the modern versions say: Mark 14;42-7: In the evening of the day before the Sabbath Joseph asked for the body of Jesus, and Pilate marveled if he were already dead, but granted the corpse to Joseph, who laid it in the tomb, (Matt. 18) and on the Sabbath day, as it began to dawn, came the two Marys to the Sepulchre, and the angel said: He is risen from the dead, he is not here. As they went away they met Jesus.

Herein it is shown that his physical body was not in the tomb twenty-four hours. But theologians have framed creeds and adopted articles of faith, declaring that Jesus arose on the third day, and assumed again absolutely the same dead human body in which he had been crucified, and that he went about eating and acting as though he had merely fainted upon the cross and was again fully restored in his human life. The third article of religion, as found in the discipline of the Methodist Church, and all other orthodox churches, says: "Christ did truly rise again from the dead, and took again his body, with all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature, wherewith he ascended into heaven and there sitteth, until he return to judge all men, at the last day." And they claim that he went to heaven in that same human body, idly sitting there for nearly two thousand years. And in like manner they contend that all human bodies buried in graves, lost in rivers and oceans, consumed in the crematories and conflagrations, or in whatever manner destroyed, the same bodies will be resurrected again and inhabited by the soul that once lived in them. That is the unmistakable language and teaching of the old theology. You have read it in their books and heard it in their sermons.

There is not a single fact in all the history of the wide world, or within the knowledge of living men to warrant a belief in the resurrection of the same natural, material bodies that die,—absolutely nothing. If it it was true it would be unwelcome to all, and utterly repellant to every idea of justice to hundreds of thousands of unfortunates who are deformed, crippled, ill-shaped, helpless and repulsive, that the same souls must live again in these identical burdensome bodies and make the heavenly world a congress of skeletons, of disappointed, deformed ones, with blighted hopes and tearful tales to tell. These old, withered and weak bodies are only the soul-houses in which we and our beloved friends now live, soon to be of no more use than cast-off garments. These garments will pass through Nature's process of disintegration into new bodies.

The old doctrinarians and theologians have "revised" the Scriptures to make them conform to their creeds and theologies until they contain many conflicting affirmations. Paul was impatient with the thought that the same natural body could be resurrected, and exclaimed, "Thou fool, flesh and blood cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. How are the dead raised and with what body do they come? God giveth to every soul and to every seed its own bodies. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body, and though the outer man perisheth the inner man is renewed. If this be not so then is Christ not risen, then is our preaching in vain. The outer man, or natural body dieth, the inner, or spiritual man liveth. It is raised a spiritual body."

That is, the spiritual, which now exists within the natural, when the natural is sown by death, then the separate state of spiritual existence is renewed, not simply by continuing to live, but by having all faculties rehabilitated in all essences and forces essential to its needs and comforts in the spiritual world.

The spirit realm is the infinite field of space pervading the expanse between every visible object of the material universe, and bounds the earth as the sea and air cleave its rugged peaks or sloping shores. Out of it and back into it all of the living wonders and mighty forces of Nature come and go. There is not an object known to physical vision in the material world that has not its real counterpart in the spirit realms: landscapes, towns and highways, rivers, lakes and lawns, and spiritual beings can there traverse those lawns and lakes, with every vivid sense of reality, both to self and surroundings, which they enjoyed while here.

If we are to believe the words of Jesus: "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," and if we are to believe the unmistakable statement of the Scriptures that he reappeared on earth to his friends "in another form," this affords a case of "demonstrated immortality."

We have read thousands of pages, descriptive of demonstrations, and have witnessed interviews between reputable personal friends here with their deceased friends, in such manner as gave us no reason to doubt the entire correctness of the matter. We here quote the very strong words of Judge Arthur MacArthur, late Judge of the Supreme Court, Washington, D. C., in commending a book entitled "The Next World Interviewed." He says:

"Let these pages be read with candor, and skepticism and atheism will be converted into belief, a devotional sense of joy will take the place of hesitation, the professed Christian will find his doubts of the future swept away, and his views of the everlasting goodness of God corroborated by the most infallible assurances. The world of sense is confronted with the direct revelation of a higher form of life. Those who have lived great lives here below come back to inform us of their experiences there, and to give us the assurance that they still live, and that the world of spirits is as real as this one. They give their names, they state their views, they relate the facts, all in perfect conformity with their individual gifts and peculiarities and call upon their friends, who linger here below, to read and believe, as if they stood face to face, after the manner of earthly intercourse, this grand testimonial of The Eternal Existence of the Soul."
—Arthur MacArthur, Judge of the Supreme Court.

Could words be stronger and clearer or from a more competent source? The same might be said of many other volumes containing messages from those we call the dead.

But these demonstrations were witnessed by others, not you, my kind Reader, and other evidence is needed for you than their narration. We cannot of course, in this article, give you visible evidence, but will give you the most infallible tests known to human reason, by which the immortality of life is otherwise demonstrated.

LITTLE ALICE.

Interesting Spiritual Experiences Connected With Her Life.

This is a true story from first to last.

She was born July 11, 1860, east of Piqua, one mile, in Miami county, Ohio. Her two births came very close to each other; her mortal birth as above and her spiritual birth thirty hours later, July 13. Her earthly form was laid in the graveyard north of Piqua.

Of her as a spirit her parents knew but little. They had this one consolation, "Jesus said, Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." All else was dark for many years, only the longing of the soul for the meeting of the little one again. Finally the mother reached the other shore and met the little one, thirty-two years having passed since the earthly parting, and now a heavenly meeting. Then the mother realized that Alice was no longer a little girl, but a full-fledged spirit.

The father was left in the darkness as to what had occurred during the thirty-two years in the spirit world; but he was not to be left in darkness. He desired the truth, and the promise came from the spirit world, from Blossom, Mrs. Inez Wagner's guide: "You shall know the truth, for you desire it so much."

Later on the father was at his daughter's in Sterling, Kans., at a time when Mrs. Wagner was there as a trumpet medium. It was in this daughter's house that the father met his long departed daughter, and talked to her and she to him. It was a glad meeting, because she could make herself known to him. After this, time passed on till in the year 1905, when the father located in Sterling, by which time his daughter, Ella, had developed, or rather was developing into a trumpet medium. Here again the father came into close connection with the spirit world.

That same fall it was his privilege to meet the Bangs sisters in Chicago at 654 W. Adams street. Desiring to gain a knowledge of the truth, then hidden to him, he, according to the directions of one of the sisters, took from a tablet one sheet of paper and wrote a number of questions upon it. This he took with five other sheets from the same tablet, and folded them as he would a letter, and sealed it. Then he put the same between two slates, and put a rubber band around each way, and laid them on the tables. He then laid his hands on them, and the sister hers on the other end. In about fifteen minutes the writing was said to be finished. He opened the slates and envelope and found six pages written in ink, and his wife's name signed to it.

In answer to questions it was said: "Alice and I have been with you right along, and we have come here to have our pictures, but I have decided to have Alice's and have it to-day, George, and later on I will give you mine as I was in earth life, and as I now am in spirit life."

So the father got Alice's portrait as she now is in spirit life. This portrait reveals the fact that Alice had grown to full size in spirit life; though it had been forty-five years since she had left her short earth life, she looked but a young woman.

From this time on the father has had many opportunities of talking with Alice. She has related much about spirit life. About herself she has said as follows: "I knew nothing when I passed to spirit life, but was taken by waiting spirit hands and placed with other little children where I was cared for till I should find those of mine. I was here educated as all little children are till my grandmother came, then I was with her, and still being educated till I was fully able to teach and care for little children, or any who needed instruction that I had, and at the same time continued my education, till I came into the sixth sphere of advancement."

"I have had the privilege of hearing lectures from the highly educated, and of long experience in spirit life, even going back to the time of Jesus' being on earth. What I have said about education and lectures would indicate a system of education, which is true. Schools, colleges, seminaries and lecture halls are common. Individual and family homes are numerous. Houses are real to us, the same as earth houses are real to earth people. Our houses would be called mansions in earth, only grander than earth can afford. Our villages, towns and cities far exceed those of earth, being much larger than any of earth.

"My work has been, is now and ever will be, to get knowledge and to help others to get it. I have not been confined to spirit life in gaining knowledge from those who had had experience in earth life, and also it has been my privilege to come in contact with earth and its environments, and also with individuals of earth. I have visited earthschools. I have not learned my lessons from books, but by coming in contact with individuals and societies, and coming in the vibrations with the same, I merely absorbed what I have heard, and felt and seen.

"Being separated from my mother in a way for thirty-two years, when she came over I was glad to meet her so she could recognize me."

Here the mother says:. "Others have given their experiences in entering spirit life, so I will give mine. The first who meet me were Alice and Scottie."

Alice had two brothers, Scottie and Eddy; Eddy still in earth life at the passing of his mother to spirit life. Scottie had passed to spirit life when he was two years and twenty-nine days old. He became a companion with Alice then, and they have been thus through the many years, and would be together to meet their mother as she says they did. On Dec. 25, 1894, Eddy went to spirit life and found the mother, sister and brother. Now Alice has two sisters in earth life, Ella and Mary. Mary now, 1908, lives in Seattle, Wash. Ella is the trumpet medium in the light, through whom all the foregoing with fifty-five others have spoken to the writer. As days past there are added to this number.

Alice to-day answered the question, "Why should I love Jesus, the Christ, more than I should love any other individualized spirit?"

Answer: "Jesus, the Christ, means the truth as he gave it to the world in his teachings, and his pure life, and through his apostles. Then we should love him more, as he is more perfect in the truth. This we get in spirit life, as it is handed down by those who heard him, and knew his life, to others, till it has reached us.

"Mistakes are made in spirit life, but not as in earth life, on account of the difference in environment. In earth life, after the immediate disciples of Christ, he was made a God, which is a mistake in the way it has been used. Our love for Jesus should not be based upon the misapprehension that has been held concerning him, but upon the truth concerning him, as given by himself in his teachings."

The above answer is not given in the words of Alice, as it is written from memory. The writer cannot do her justice in the answering of the question.

I am simply a helper to get truth to the world.

A GENUINE HAUNTED HOUSE.

Wherein the Mischievous Spirit Pointed Out the Location of "Money".

Having been a constant reader of The Progressive Thinker for several years, and taking great interest in the articles published, I will relate an experience my wife and I had in a haunted house a year ago.

I have been a Spiritualist since boyhood, and I am fully convnced there is truth in it.

About a year ago we moved into a seven-room house in the suburbs of Rochester, N. Y., and were settled for a month until one night, when retiring early we heard a crash which seemed to be in the cellar. We did not pay any attention to it, thinking, perhaps, a cat found its way to the cellar, and was making havoc; but we were mistaken, for instantly one crash after another could be heard in different parts of the house. The furnace claimed an active part in the rumpus, as if someone were hammering all sides of it. The chain from the furnace leading to the dining room shook violently, and could easily be seen. Books and various articles on the dresser and table were precipitated forcibly to the floor; After ten minutes of this demonstration in the dark, and without a match, we dressed and hurried over to a friend's house. We told what had happened, but he laughed, and said we were nervous and imagined it. We all returned to the house, and repaired to the dining room where the noise seemed the loudest. The demonstration was not quite so freely, but it scared our friend, and he soon left the house. We felt indignant about our friend telling the neighbors, as I imagine they looked upon us as superstitious. We stayed home all night in the house. With the gas lighted the racket was lessened considerably. Next day we consulted a good medium. She said she would solve the mystery. That evening we held a seance, sitting around a table, and this is the message we received alphabetically:

"I, Joseph K—, died the year 1904, in this house. I left money buried in the back yard. The sum is $180, all in silver, wrapped in heavy paper, three feet down, between tree and barn, and on line with house."

I felt quite enthusiastic concerning the money, and after few more instructions from this spirit, I proceeded to the designated spot, and spent nearly a whole day digging up the yard. The medium had no faith in the message, and later, my wife seemed disgusted, both saying it was a mischievous spirit playing a joke.

I had faith in the message until I found the results of the digging brought nothing. We held another seance that evening, but the same spirit would not come back, but instead my wife's grandfather and other relatives, all of them denouncing it, the work of a mischievous spirit.

Sometime after this incident I inquired about this Joseph K—, and found out he did die in the mysterious souse, was a drinker, and, in fact, was always inclined to play jokes of various sorts, while on earth, with everyone.

The people living there previous to us were forced to move, the racket in the house becoming too great. After we vacated, another family moved in, and they also left. The last I heard of it, it was empty, and in a real estate man's hands, who is no doubt, ignorant of the strange power that possesses it.

ARTHUR W. MOORE, JR.

Interesting Experiences in the Church and in Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—When a girl, being very spiritual, I naturally followed my mother's footsteps. I was converted a Disciple, but felt there was not the satisfying portion I desired there. I drifted from one thing to another; then I joined the Episcopal, then the Alliance, then the Salvation Army and then I joined the Methodists. The day I was taken in the church I felt very happy, and was listening very attentively to what the preacher was saying, when something seemed to draw my being or life to one side, and as it seemed to me my body still remained in the seat, and before I was aware what was the matter, I could neither move, speak nor see. I remained so through the balance of the sermon. Soon the members gathered around me, and said it was the Holy Ghost; some said I was their sister and beloved of God.

I did not see any good in just tipping over and lying there for people to look at. As it happened, there was a lady in the town where I lived (Cedar Springs) who came to me and said I was controlled, and she wanted me to go with her to Rockford, to a Spiritualist social. I went and with the same result. Then I began to sit alone, and soon began to see spirits, and talk, and then to give messages and lectures, and now give readings. But when I began to talk and give messages the church members who had called me sister before, said I was possessed of the devil.

Now I can say truthfully it was the same influence, the same feeling, the identical same thing when I was in the church, as now. Now if I go to church everything seems so cold.

The old saying I believe to be true, "Every knock is a boost;" it proved so with me, at least, for I am growing stronger every day.

LIFE BEFORE DEATH.

As Illustrated and Defined by the Editor of the Two Worlds, Manchester, England.

Common usage has invested the word life with varied meanings. Scientifically the word does not stand for what it does when used colloquially, nor when stated in a theological sense. Biologically it may mean one thing, while a mechanician may use it simply to describe the lasting power of some machine. Spiritualists and religionists frequently allude to "life after death" as simply pertaining to the mere fact of continuous personality, or, at most, in many cases, as only related to the social condition, if the phrase be admissible of the dwellers in the other state. Terminological exactitude in all cases is too much to hope for, but, unless some sort of agreement as to the use of terms and the value of words is arrived at the inexactitude which leads to mental confusion and consequent misunderstandings all round will continue. Briefly put, life is not a thing apart; it is rather the outward manifestation of a something for which the world is still waiting a name.

If that "something" is a basic and eternal factor, then it operates universally—here and everywhere—in the material and in the spiritual states, on the visible and invisible planes of nature. The old crude division of nature into organic and inorganic is being rapidly abandoned. It is being understood that life as we call it, is always manifested in motion; that motion is the consequent of vibration; that vibration is caused either by action, reaction, or interaction, but just there the clue drops out, for we have nothing to account for such activities, so we fall back upon the vague terms "force," "spirit," God. In the last analysis "matter," as such, disappears, and force is apparently all that we can then assume. The elusive "something" still eludes us, but it is behind all phenomena in nature and in man. It is the Holy Grail, which, now as ever, every knight of religion, science, and philosophy is in search of. Some day it will surely be found.

A study of life before death is a need in our movement, to-day. It would help us to understand some, at least, of the fundamentals upon which a philosophy explanatory of the spirit state, must rest. It would help us understand—or, at least, suggest to us—some reason for man's origin, existence, and the probabilities of his continuous living beyond his present plane of functioning. It is quite true that our phenomena prove the point just stated, but between proving the occurrence of a fact, and offering sound reason in support of the possibility, and in explanation of the fact, there is some noticeable difference. A philosophy which will link up the universe is the only one which will ultimately succeed in obtaining universal acceptance. The study of life before death is as important as the study of life after death.

Apart from the biological aspect of the subject, there is the sociological use of the term, life, to be considered. We may postulate a heavenly state—something like a transcendental transformation scene in a pantomime—as the future abode of the saved, and a grotesque under-world, like the interior of a volcano as depicted by an emotionally inebriated painter, as the perpetual dwellingplace of the damned; but so completely are such postmortem sociological conditions out of harmony with the enlightened thought of to-day, that such ideas have little hold on men's thoughts.

Some Spiritualists, however, have even fallen into the error of sharply defining and numerically limiting the states, or spheres of the life after death into seven, as if it was in the power of one finite earth intelligence to comprehend the fullness of eternal possibilities of the universe? It is as if some teachers have said too much and learned too little! For, if I am to continue after death, the social order into which I go must necessarily conform to my necessities. So life after death will, at least at first, have its points of similarity with life before death.

To bring this matter of life after death more clearly home to us all, let us make a brief contrast between what we dream about as the life after death and the actual facts surrounding us before death. In one sense we claim the other life is truly democratic, but the only democratic principle, there is that everyone gets what he really is entitled to—no more, no less. Neglect of opportunity there costs just as much as here. Companionships there, as here, are inclusive and exclusive. The foregoing are but elementary facts, it is true, but how would they work out if strictly applied to our life before death? Would not a revolution in this world's sociological life be the certain result if such principles were rigidly applied to every man's life? Most assuredly. Therefore, if we want to send people into the life after death properly fitted to take place and rank therein, we must devote thought, energy, and time to make them better in this life, so as to fit them more truly to the sociology of the next life. Begin by creating the conditions of heaven here on earth, and then, when we have eliminated the evils of life before death, we shall all have a better opportunity of at once entering the higher states of life after death. If we are to become a moral force in the community we must regard a this-world-ism as a necessary portion of our campaign.

As a science Spiritualism is iconoclastic and constructive, demolishing superstitions regarding life after death, and setting up the real truth of the matter. As reformers we are striving to make angels on earth, and when they are made we can trust to them being acceptable to the life—or social state—of the beyond.

MEDITATION.

Softly the day is dying
In a halo of golden light,
And I fancy I'm mounting upward
On the dewy wings of night.

And some of the stars seem brighter,
And oh, so near to me;
While others are far beyond them,
So pale I can scarcely see.

Oh! sometime in the spirit
Shall I fly from star to star,
And see the different peoples
And know them as they are?

Shall I find myself transported
Through the endless realms of space,
And with many worlds about me
Meet Nature face to face?

And if I should travel onward
As far as thought can reach,
There would still be worlds beyond me
With a law to govern each.

For this little world of ours,
Though held here in its place,
Is only a floating atom
Among the worlds in space.

And then I sometimes wonder
If Christ for sinners died,
If all His earthly sorrows
Have thus been multiplied?

Must He through countless ages
From star to star appear,
And give his life a ransom
As it was given here?

Will God give all his creatures
One law by which to live?
And must Christ die to save them,
Before He can forgive

Or are they made so perfect
That they can never sin,
And heaven's gates swing open
And welcome them within?

If God so loved His people
He gave His only Son
To buy the world's salvation,
Is ours the only one?

And if God gave the ransom
Who, then, the ransom sought?
Did we belong to Satan?
Of whom were we then bought?

One law,—'tis universal,
Holds all the worlds in place,
Revolving on their axes,
Their orbits, too, in space.

And if one law upholds them,
One universal plan,
Then don't you think most likely
He'd make one law for man?

But if Christ dies for sinners,
On every world in space,
When will He get to heaven,
His final resting place?

Notes of Successful and Encouraging Work.

To the Editor:—It is some time since I wrote of my work in San Jose, and your readers in California and elsewhere may be interested. I came here January 1, 1908, for one month, the interest awakened warranted the society in engaging my services from that time on. We have had, during the last six months, for one or two sessions, John W. Ring and Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe Watson, in March; Lizzie Ducker Lyness of Spokane, and Nettie Pease Fox of San Jose, in April; Arthur S. Howe and John Harker of San Jose, Florence Heckman and Lucille Kenworthy of Seattle, Wash., in May; Mrs. Ida S. Ines of Pasadena, Cal.; Tillie Gunderson of San Jose in June. These were all speakers, and I assisted in giving messages, at nearly all the sessions, lecturing every Sunday afternoon and at odd Sunday evenings. We have gained about 16 good active members during the six months, and everything is very harmonious inside and outside. At the annual meeting, April 5, I was unanimously elected president and speaker. This is the first summer for some time that the society has kept open. But the interest manifested and increased attendance warranted it. The Lyceum and morning and afternoon session however, will not open until after State Convention, which will be held September 4, 5, and 6, in San Francisco. This will be the first time since the great fire that the convention comes North, and great preparations are being made.

On Sunday evening, July 19, our society had the pleasure of presenting to one of our young worthy members, Mrs. Tillie Gunderson, through the State Association, ordination papers as a minister of Spiritualism. Mrs. Gunderson has worked in San Jose as a medium, a member of the First Spiritual Union, as a director and member of nearly five years, has held endorsement of the State Association for over two years, and as a mark of esteem The F. S. U. presented the paper. The ceremony was very impressive. Vice-President Harker, in well-chosen words presented the candidate to the representative of the State Association, Director A. S. Howe, who used the regular form as prescribed in N. S. A. Ritual for Ordination, the candidate affirming. I, as pastor of F. S. U., and President, gave short prayer, and right hand of fellowship, following with short address on "Duties of an Ordained Worker, also Responsibilities."

Two vocal solos and special quartet music were most acceptably rendered. Everyone present was deeply impressed and nearly every chair in the large G. A. R. Hall was taken. Beautiful flowers covered the front of the rostrum. Spiritualists coming to San Jose can find me at 405 So. Second street, and mediums or speakers would do well to notify in advance as arrangements must be made by Board of Directors. Only those holding valid papers from State or N. S. A. unless personally endorsed by known workers, are placed on platform.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual conscious selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

Exceptionally Important as a Matter of History.

Letters Concerning Supernatural Disturbances at the House of Mr. Samuel Wesley, Senior, at Epworth, in Lincolnshire, in 1716.

NEWS FROM THE INVISIBLE WORLD.

Letter VI.—Mr. S. Wesley, Jr., in Answer.

Dean's Yard, Feb. 9, 1716-7.

Dear Sister Sukey: Your telling me the spirit has made its personal appearance, without saying how, or to whom, or how long, has excited my curiosity very much. I long mightily for a further account of every circumstance by your next letter. Do not keep me any longer in the dark. Why need you write the less because my father is to send me the whole story? Has the disturbance continued since the 28th of December? I understand my father did not hear it at all, but a fortnight after the rest. What did he say remarkable to any of you when he did hear it? As to the devil's being an enemy to King George, were I the king myself(I should rather Old Nick should be my enemy than my friend. I do not like the noise of the night-gown sweeping along the ground, nor its knocking like my father. Write when you receive this, though nobody else should, to your loving brother, S. W.

Letter VII.—Mr. S. Wesley, Jr., to His Mother.

Dear Mother: You say you could multiply particular instances of the spirit's noises, but I want to know whether nothing was ever seen by any. For though it is hard to conceive, nay, morally impossible, that the hearing of so many people could be deceived, yet the truth will he still more manifest and undeniable if it is grounded on the testimony of two senses. Has it never at all disturbed you since the 28th of December? Did no circumstance give any light into the designs of the whole?

Your obedient and loving son, S. WESLEY, JR.

Have you dug in the place where the money seemed poured at your feet?

Letter VIII.—Mr. S. Wesley to His Father.

February 12th.

Honored Sir: I have not yet received any answer to the letter I wrote some time ago, and my mother in her last seems to say that as yet I know but a very small part of the whole story of strange noises in our house. I shall be exceeding glad to have the whole account from you. Whatever may be the main design of such wonders, I cannot think they were ever meant to be kept secret. If they bode anything remarkable to our family, I am sure I am a party concerned.

Your dutiful son, S. WESLEY.

Letter IX.—From Mr. S. Wesley to His Sister, Emily.

February 12th.

Dear Sister Emily: I wish you would let me have a letter from you about the spirit, as indeed from every one of my sisters. I cannot think of any of you superstitious, unless you are much changed since I saw you. My sister, Hetty, I find, was more particulary troubled. Let me know all. Did anything appear to her?

I am you affectionate brother, S. WESLEY.

Letter X.—From Mr. Samuel Wesley, Sr., to His Son, Samuel.

Dear Sam: As for the noises, etc., in our family, I thank God we are now all quiet. There were some surprising circumstances in that affair. Your mother has not written you a third part of it. When I see you here, you shall see the whole account, which I wrote down. It would make a glorious penny book for Jack Dunton; but while I live I am not ambitious for anything of that nature. I think that's all, but blessings, from your loving father, SAM WESLEY.

Letter XVI.—From Miss Emily Wesley to Her Brother, Samuel.

Dear Brother: I thank you for your last, and shall give you what satisfaction is in my power, concerning what has happened in our family. I am so far from being superstitious, that I was much inclined to infidelity, so that I heartily rejoice at having such an opportunity of convincing myself past doubt or scruple, of the existence of some beings besides those we see. A whole month was sufficient to convince anybody of the reality of the thing and to try all ways of discovering any trick, had it been possible for any such to have been used. I shall only tell you what I myself heard, and leave the rest to others.

My sisters in the paper chamber had heard noises and told me of them, but I did not much believe, till one night, about a week after the first groans were heard, which was the beginning, just after the clock had struck ten, I went down stairs to lock the doors, which I always do. Scarce had I got up the best stairs when I heard a noise, like a person throwing down a vast coal in the middle of the fore kitchen, and all the splinters seemed to fly about from it. I was not much frighted, but went to my sister Sukey, and we together went over all the low rooms, but there was nothing out of order.

Our dog was fast asleep, and our only cat in the other end of the house. No sooner was I got upstairs, and undressed for bed, but I heard a noise among many bottles that stand under the best stairs, just like the throwing of a great stone among them, which had broken them all to pieces. This made me hasten to bed, but my sister, Hetty, who sits up always to wait on my father going to bed, was still sitting on the lowest step on the garret stairs, the door being shut at her back, when soon after there came down the stairs behind her something like a man, in a loose night-gown, trailing after him, which made her fly, rather than run, to me in the nursery.

All this time we never told our father of it, but soon after we did. He smiled, and gave no answer, but was more careful than usual, from that time, to see us in bed, imagining it to be some of us young women that sat up late and made a noise. His incredulity, and especially his imputing it to us, or our lovers, made me, I own, desirous of its continuance till he was convinced. As for my mother, she firmly believed it to be rats, and sent for a horn to blow them away. I laughed to think how wisely they were employed, who were striving half a day to fright away "Jeffrey," for that name I gave it, with a horn.

But whatever it was, I perceived it could be made angry, for from that time it was so outrageous, there was no quiet for us till after ten at night. I heard frequently between ten and eleven, something like the quick winding up of a jack, at the corner of the room by my bed's head, just the running of the wheels and the creaking of the iorn-work. This was the common signal of its coming. Then it would knock on the floor three times, then at my sister's bed's head in the same room, almost always three together, and then stay. The sound was hollow, and lond, so as none of us ever imitate.

It would answer to my mother, if she stamped on the floor, and bid it. It knocked when I was putting the children to bed, just under me where I sat. One time little Kesy, pretending to scare Patty, as I was undressing them, stamped with her foot on the floor, and immediately it answer with three knocks just in the same place. It was more loud and fierce if anyone said it was rats, or anything but natural.

I could tell you abundance more of it, but the rest will write, and therefore it would be needless. I was not much frightened at first and very little at last; but it was never near me, except two or three times, and never followed me, as it did sister Hetty. I have been with her when it knocked under her, and when she has removed has followed, and still kept under her feet, which was enough to terrify a stouter person.

If you would know my opinion of the reason of this, I shall briefly tell you. I believe it to be witchcraft, for these reasons. About a year ago since there was a disturbance at town near us that was undoubtedly witches, and if so near, why may they not reach us? Then my father had, for several Sundays before its coming, preached warmly against consulting those that are called cunning men, which our people are given to; and it had a particular spite at father.

Besides, something was thrice seen. The first time by my mother, under my sister's bed, like a badger, only without any head that was discernible. The same creature was sat by the dining-room fire one evening; when our man went into the room it run by, through the hall under the stairs. He followed with a candle, and searched, but it was departed. The last time he saw it in the kitchen, like a white rabbit, which seems likely to be some witch; and I do so really believe it to be one, that I would venture to fire a pistol at it if I saw it long enough, It has been heard by me and others since December. I have filled up all my room, and have only time to tell you I am your loving sister,

EMILY WESLEY.

Letter XII.—Miss Susannah Wesley to Her Brother, Samuel.

March 27.

Dear Brother: I should farther satisfy you concerning the disturbances, but it is needless, because my sisters, Emily and Hetty, write so particularly about it. One thing I believe you do not know, that is, last Sunday, to my father's no small amzement, his trencher danced upon the table a pretty while, without anybody stirring the table. When, lo! an adventurous wretch took it up and spoiled the sport, for it remained still ever after. How glad should I be to talk with you about it. Send me some news, for we are secluded from the sight or hearing of any versal thing except "Jeffrey."

SUSANNAH WESLEY.

A Passage in a Letter from My Mother to Me, Dated March 27, 1717.

I cannot imagine how you should be so curious about our unwelcome guest. For my part, I am quite tired with hearing or speaking of it; but if you come among us, you will find enough to satisfy all your scruples, and perhaps may hear or see it yourself.

S. WESLEY, JR.

A Passage in a Letter from My Sister, Emily, to Mr. N. Berry, Dated April 11, 1717.

Tell my brother the spright was with us last night, and heard by many of our family, especially by our maid and myself. She sat up with drink, and it came just at one o'clock, and opened the dining-room door. After some time it shut again. She saw as well as heard it both shut and open, then it began to knock as usual. But I dare write no longer, lest I should hear it. EMILY WESLEY.

The Diary of Mr. S. Wesley, Sr.

Journal, or Diary, of Mr. Samuel Wesley, Sr., transcribed by the late Rev. John Wesley, August 27, 1726.

Account of Noises and Disturbances in my house at Epworth, Lincs, in December and January, 1716-17.

From the first of December my children and servants heard many strange noises, groans, knockings, etc., in every storey, and most of the rooms of my house, but I heard nothing of it myself. They would not tell me for some time, because, according to the vulgar opinion, if it boded any ill to me, I could not hear it. When it increased, and the family could not easily conceal it, they told me of it.

My daughters, Susannah and Ann, were below stairs in the dining-room, and heard first at the doors, then over their heads and the night after a knocking under their feet, though nobody was in the chambers or below them. The like they and my servants heard in both the kitchens, at the door against the partition, and over them. The maid heard groans as of a dying man. My daughter, Emily, coming down the strairs to draw up the clock, and lock the doors at ten at night, as usual, heard under the staircase a sound amongst some bottles there, as if they had been all dashed to pieces; but, when she looked, all was safe.

Something like the steps of a man was heard going up and down the stairs, at all hours of the night, and vast rumblings below stairs, and in the garrets. My man, who lay in the garret, heard someone come slaring through the garret to the chamber, rattling by his side, as if against his shoes, though he had none there; at other times walking up and downstairs when all the house was in bed, and gobbling like a turkey-cock. Noises were heard in the nursery and all the other chambers, knocking first at the feet of the bed and behind it, and a sound like that of dancing in a matted chamber next the nursery, when the door was locked, and nobody in it.

My wife would have persuaded them it was rats within doors, and some unlucky people knocking without, till at last we heard several loud knocks in our own chamber, on my side of the bed, but till, I think, the 21st at night, I heard nothing of it. That night I was waked a little before one by nine distinct very loud knocks, which seemed to be in the next room to ours, with a sort of a pause at every third stroke. I thought it might be somebody without the house, and having got a stout mastiff, hoped he would soon rid me of it.

The next night I heard six knocks, but not so loud as the former. I know not whether it was the morning after Sunday, the 23rd, when, about seven, my daughter, Emily, called her mother into the nursery and told her she might now hear the noises there. She went in and heard it at the bedsteads, then under the bed, then at the head of it. She knocked and it answered her. She looked under the bed and thought something ran from thence, but could not well tell of what shape, but thought it most like a badger.

The next time but one we were awaked about one by the noises, which were so violent, it was in vain to think of sleep while they continued. I rose, and my wife would rise with me. We went into every chamber and down stairs, and, generally, as we went into one room, we heard it in that behind us, though all the family had been in bed several hours.

When we were going down stairs, and at the bottom of them, we heard, as Emily had done before, a clashing among the bottles as if they had been broken to pieces, and another sound, distinct from it, as if a peck of money had been thrown down before us. The same three of my daughters heard at another time.

We went through the hall into the kitchen, when our mastiff came whining to us, as he did always after the first night of its coming; and then he barked violently at it, but was silent afterwards, and seemed more afraid than any of the children. We still heard it rattle and thunder in every room above or behind us, locked as well as open, except my study, where as yet it never came. After two we went to bed and were pretty quiet the rest of the night.

Wednesday night, December 26, after or a little before ten, my daughter, Emily, heard the signal of its beginning to play, with which she was perfectly acquainted; it was like the strong winding up of a jack. She called us and I went into the nursery, where it used to be most violent. The rest of the children were asleep. It began with knocking in the kitchen underneath, then seemed to be at the bed's feet, then under the bed; at last at the head of it. I went down stairs and knocked with my stick against the joists of the kitchen. It answered me as often and as loud as I knocked; but then I knocked as I usually do at my door, 1—2, 3, 4, 5, 6—7, but this puzzled it, and it did not answer, or not in the same method; though the children heard it do the same exactly twice or thrice after.

I went up stairs and still found it knocking hard, though with some respite, sometimes under the bed, sometimes at the bed's head. I observed my children that they were frightened in their sleep, and trembled very much till it waked them. I stayed there alone, bid them go to sleep, and sat at the bed's feet by them, when the noise began again. Soon after it gave one knock on the outside of the house (all the rest were within) and knocked off for that night.

I went out of doors, sometimes alone, at others with company, and walked round the house, but could see or hear nothing. Several nights the latch of our lodging would be lifted up very often, when all were in bed. One night, when the noise was great in the kitchen, and on a deal partition, and the door in the yard, the latch whereof was often lift up, my daughter, Emily, went and held it fast on the inside, but it was still lifted up, and the door pushed violently against her though nothing was to be seen on the outside.

When we were at prayers, and came to the prayers for King George and the Prince, it would make a great noise over our heads constantly, whence some of the family called it a Jacobite. I have been thrice pushed by an invisible power, once against the corner of my desk in the study, a second time against the right side of the frame of my study door as I was going in.

I followed the noise into almost every room in the house, both by night and by day, with light and without, and have sat alone for some time; and when I heard the noise, spoke to it, to tell me what it was, but never heard any articulate voice, but only once or twice two or three feeble squeaks, a little louder than the chirping of a bird, but not like the noise of rats, which I have often heard.

I had designed on Friday, December 28th, to make a visit to a friend, Mr. Downs, at Normandy, and stay some days with him, but the noises were so boisterous on Thursday night that I did not care to leave my family. So I went to Mr. Hoole, of Haxey, and desired his company on Friday night. He came, and it began after ten, a little later than ordinary. The younger children were gone to bed, the rest of the family and Mr. Hoole were together in the matted chamber. I sent the servants down to fetch in some fuel, went with them, and stayed in the kitchen till they came in. When they were gone I heard loud noises against the doors and partition, and at length the usual signal, though somewhat after the time. I had never heard it before, but knew it by the description my daughter had given me. It was much like the turning about of a windmill when the wind changes. When the servants returned, I went up to the company, who had heard the noises below, but not the signal. We heard all the knocking as usual, from one chamber to another, but at its going off, like the rubbing of a beast against the wall; but from that time till January the 24th, we were quiet.

Having received a letter from Samuel the day before relating to it, I read what I had written of it to my family; and this day at morning prayer the family heard the usual knocks at the prayer for the King. At night they were more distinct, both in the prayer for the King and that for the Prince; and one very hard knock at the amen was heard by my wife and most of my children at the inside of my bed. I heard nothing myself. After nine, Robert Brown, sitting alone by the fire in the back kitchen, saw something come out of the copper-hole like a rabbit, but less, and turned round five times very swiftly. Its ears lay flat upon its neck, and its little scut stood straight up. He ran after it with the tongs in his hands, but when he could find nothing he was frightened, and went to the maid in the parlor.

On Friday, the 25th, having prayers at church, I shortened, as usual, those in the family at morning, omitting the confession, absolution, and prayers for the King and Prince. I observed when this is done there is no knocking. I therefore used them one morning for a trial; at the name of King George it began to knock, and it did the same when I prayed for the Prince. Two knocks I heard, but took no notice after prayers, till after all who were in the room, ten persons besides me, spoke of it, and said they heard it. No noise at all the rest of the prayer.

Sunday, Jan. 27. Two soft strokes at the morning prayers for King George, above stairs.

Conclusion.

The compiler deemed it best to print the foregoing letters free from any comments. The reader can thus peruse them without the distraction of any other questions being raised at the moment. Now that the reader has considered the letters, just a few words in conclusion upon some of the salient points they raise may be permissible.

Mr. Samuel Wesley, Sr., has set out with evident care a fairly concise narration of the events, as extracts from his diary show. As usual, there was at first an amount of skepticism concerning the nature of the cause of the disturbances. Mrs. Wesley suggesting rats and even weasels, while Samuel Weslay, Jr., hints at rats, cats, or dogs, yet he naively accepts the action of spirits as the interpretation of the mystery. On three occasions old Mr. Wesley was pushed by the invisible power, while the sounds of knockings, and of walking to and fro, and the shutting and opening of doors, were quite common, and upon one occasion Mr. Wesley's dinner plate—"trencher"—was set to twirling upon the table. Miss Emily Wesley alleges "witchcraft" as the explanation, but through all the windings of the story as laid out in the letters, or in the more connected presentation in the narrative in the diary, the intelligence of the thing named "Jeffrey" stands out clearly. It seems a thousand pities that "Jeffrey" was not more carefully investigated, more closely interrogated, for, as Mr. Stead would say, the "spook" was evidently desirous to enter into conference; while, had Mr. Myers or Mr. Sedgwick on behalf of the Society for Psychical Research, been there, no doubt by this time that interesting and amiable body would have been able to report that "Jeffrey" was a clear case of trans-corporeal manifestation. To Spiritualists, however, who have devoted many long years to a painstaking verification and feverification of the facts upon which they assert the reality of communion with departed persons, the narrative of the Wesley phenomena has many familiar touches. Its simplicity, directness, and naturalness are obvious. But to them the sporadic "Jeffrey" and his intermittent phenomena have become the orderly manifestations of the Spirit "Circle," produced by beneficent and intelligent spirits in accordance with natural law, in harmony with divine wisdom. Thousands can give testimony to-day as direct and straightforward as to the reality of spiritual phenomena, even more remarkable and convincing than those set forth in these most interesting letters, and which testimony, in either case, clearly tends to show that mankind really does receive news from the invisible world.—The Two Worlds, England.

LAKE BRADY CAMP.

A Letter from the Ohio State Missionary.

While I am penning these lines the saw and hammer of the busy builders are engaged in completing a new cottage to be used, as we are told, to accommodate persons who would like a room by the day or week, with home privileges. If we are not greatly mistaken several cottages will be built here before another season.

This Assembly has the finest auditorium of any camp that your correspondent has ever seen in all her visits to camps east and west, in her twenty-five years while laboring for Spiritualism. It is surrounded with beautiful large forest trees, as also are the cottages. The hotel is a great feature, enabling persons to have the very best of board and rooms, and is spoken of by all guests as such. Messrs. Muson & Riley are proprietors of Edgewood Inn. The official board are men and women who are studying how to make Lake Brady Spiritualist Camp all that the most advanced in thought desire, so as to meet the growing necessities from the most humble mind up to the most advanced, and still progressing soul, carnate and discarnate, may require for greater altitudes of expression.

The Slaughter Band should be heard. I fear my pen portrayal of their rich melodies upon instruments or accompanying our congregational singing, can but partly convey. It is the grandest soul-stirring harmony it has ever been mine to participate in. It seems the angels play and sing for us through this people.

June 28 Oscar Edgerly gave the opening address of the season. I would like to be able to spread a mental feast before your readers that we enjoyed the two Sundays during which the multitudes were fed by this highly gifted speaker.

Next came May Price, and occupied the rostrum two Sunday, 11 and 19. She spoke with earnestness upon the great subject of to-day, "The Power of Our Thoughts," supplementing her addresses with psychic readings.

July 26, George H. Brooks gave two fine lectures, which held the undivided attention of his audiences from beginning to end. As the season advances, the people attend our services in greater numbers.

Your correspondent is doing all in the gifts of her power to interest all that she can gain an audience with while here in behalf of the Ohio Spiritualists' Association. As their appointed missionary, she earnestly tries to impress all with the importance of co-operation, as found in practical organization, and hopes to see Lake Brady and all camps in this state chartered, so that societies can have their summer school, and those that attend camp can have their winter schools, as in well organized societies. Have given two short talks, and followed with spirit messages Mr. Edgerly, in his two Sunday afternoon addresses. Have given away hundreds of cards with printed Declaration of Principles, also printed Constitution and By-laws of the State Association. Many have sought [illegible] regarding the work in different places in the state. No better place than at our Spiritualists' camps to awaken interest in organization. The camp association needs the local and state societies, and the societies need the camp. Let all unite and work for harmonious progression, in my belief is our best method.

MARY C. WARD,
Missionary of Ohio Spiritualists' Association.
Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Onset Camp.

The Lyceum here opened under the most favorable circumstances with a large number of children. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, the most able conductor and instructor for children, was present to take charge. The exercises were of a high order, and the children seemed delighted. We hope at the close of the season to report that Onset has the Banner Camp Lyceum.

Monday, July 26 was the opening of the Conference Meeting this season, The day was most auspicious, and the Conference one of the finest ever held. The chairman, Dr. Fuller, was unable to be present, so Mr. A. J. Maxham, our able musician, filled the position most creditably. The meeting opened with singing by Mr. Maxham, after which Mrs. Belcher of Marlboro, spoke briefly upon the subject of Good; Mr. John Weeks, a pioneer worker told of his experiences, and Mrs. Thompson, Mr. Sampson, Mr. Graham, Mrs. Ella Wheeler and Mr. Burnham, all spoke most excellently.

Tuesday, July 21, we had for our speaker the Pioneer worker, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn. Dr. Fuller was able to be present and preside, after which Mrs. Yeaw took her subject from the audience. She closed her lecture with a poem which was fine.

Wednesday was conference day again, and Dr. Bishop opened the meeting with brief remarks, after which he gave many communications. Mr. Sampson spoke briefly. Mrs. Perry of the Metaphysical Club, spoke at length about conscious control of our own thoughts. Mr. Blagdon, Mr. Graham, Mrs King, Mrs. Francis M. Sampson and Mr. Weeks, all spoke briefly, and of the good in Spiritualism. Mr. A. J. Maxham sang several selections during the meeting.

Thursday the Speaker of the day was Mrs. Juliette Yeaw of Leominster. Dr. Fuller presided. Mrs. Yeaw is one of our pioneer speakers. She read a poem and gave an invocation, after which she took for her subject The Soul of Man Coming into his Inheritance; delivering an excellent address. The meeting closed with singing.

Friday was conference day, and so was Saturday, and the following took part, and made it possible for two very interesting meetings. Mr. Sampson, Mrs. Holbroke, Mrs. King, Mrs Vascoe, Mrs Belcher, Mrs. Perry, Dr. Blagdon, Mrs. Della Smith, and Mrs. Annie Chapman. Mr. A. J. Maxham sang several selections, and this closed the first week of a very interesting camp. HATCH.

It will write in full sight—yes, in full sight and it will write more, write better, write easier and keep on doing so longer than any other typewriter.
